There is an old Latin adage that has never been improved upon: Ad astra per aspera—"To the stars through struggling." We never will amend that. There is being created in this country a psychology that will so snap the sinews of energy and enervate the populace that we will sink into the kind of a chasm that engulfed Rome, and we may not escape.

I said sometime ago, and I repeat, we will have to loosen up our immigration laws and bring people here to work. Nearly every American is on the Government pay roll: We will have to get workers from somewhere.

Now we are reversing the concept of America by attempting to stipulate the wage that shall be paid by every manufacturer and everyone in business, whether he is able to pay it or not. Under such an exacting law every establishment in America would be frozen.

Mr. President, I am going to live and die a Democrat, a pure, honest-to-God Democrat, without fear or favor or shadow of turning. I rather think it will be a pretty lonely journey. But there is a character in the Bible whose experience I wish every man here could read and appreciate—the character of Job. When the devil brought in his philosophy Jehovah said, "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man?"

The devil said, "Yes; I have. You have made him a rich man. You have given him patronage, and you have given him everything, and why should he not be perfect?"

God said, "I have faith in Job's integrity, in spite of the money he has, and the possessions he has, and the patronage he has."

The devil said, "Yes."

God said, "Behold, he is in thine hand."

The next time the devil came back he said he was a little mistaken about that, that Job loved his people and his retainers, and that he would give everything for them.

God said, "So you think his integrity inheres in his love for his kin?"

The devil said, "Yes; but all that a man hath he will give for his life. Put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse Thee to Thy face."

God said, "All right; go and cover him with sores. Give him everything, but do not touch his life."

The devil never came back. That was the final acid test, and, paraphrasing Job's expression, "Though truth and integrity slay me, yet I will be true."

God grant that American Senators may so be imbued with the spirit of American democracy that no office can seduce them, no money can defile them, and no hope of reward swerve them from their conviction of right.

If Senators will excuse a personal allusion, I never thought the time would come when I would be put to the test of deciding whether I would rather sink to this level or be right. I made my choice. There are not votes enough, there are not offices enough, to make me turn apostate and repudiate my faith in the belief that political honesty and integrity is one with personal interest and integrity.

Do not think that because I have called attention to these beautiful gifts handed out to the South you are going to drive me out of the Democratic Party. I am afraid there are many calling themselves Democrats who lack a great deal of being Democrats. I long ago learned that putting a label on a thing did not change the contents, that labeling a vial of strychnine "sugar" did not make it sugar by any means."

Here is the last and final measure which, if enacted into law, will arrest forever, perhaps, in your time and mine, the hope of progress in the South.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, when the pending bill was under consideration in the committee the members of the committee fully realized that there were certain seasonal industries which of necessity would have to be excluded from the provisions of the bill. After careful study and after considering many of the amendments, some of them in identical form with those now being offered by individual Senators, the majority of the committee came to the conclusion that it was impossible to provide specific exemptions for industries which were seasonal in character, and therefore entitled to exemption, without emasculating the provisions of the bill, and without extending the exemptions to many related activities which obviously should come within the purview of the proposed legislation.

Therefore, the committee provided that the board should have power to grant exemptions and to make exceptions for seasonal industries, after a proper showing had been made before the board that they were entitled to such exception or exemption.

The difficulty in attempting to write specific exemptions into the bill on the floor in the form of amendments is that in many instances the amendments will be so drawn that in their application they will grant exemptions to many operations to which, if the bill is to be enacted at all, it should apply. Take, for instance, the amendment which is now under consideration. When the junior Senator from North Carolina offered the amendment I asked him whether employment in tobacco warehouses was seasonal in character, and he stated that it was.

However, the Senator from Kentucky pointed out the fact that many warehouses in his State employ their personnel upon a yearly basis; and it was upon his suggestion that the Senator from North Carolina accepted the language providing that tobacco-warehouse employees shall be exempted from the provisions of this bill only in cases where their employment is of a seasonal character.

The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] suggested, and the Senator from North Carolina has accepted as part of his amendment, the exemption of cotton gins and cotton-compressing establishments. Of course I am not as familiar with the operation of the compressing plants, if I may use that term, in connection with cotton as are the Senators from cotton-producing States. Nevertheless, I have visited cotton-compressing establishments; and they operated, according to my observation, exactly as a manufacturing plant would operate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator now referring to a cotton gin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am referring to establishments where cotton is compressed into bales.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is done first in gins and then the cotton is recompressed in compresses.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am now discussing the compress.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that during the cotton season the operation of the compresses are very largely seasonal, but of course they maintain a skeleton organization the year around, because a little cotton may drift in. Naturally their work is done during the cotton season, which is 3 or 4 months, because it is then that the great volume of cotton is moving; but, of course, they do some compressing throughout the year.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The information I obtained at the particular compress I visited was that there was a seasonal peak when a large force was employed and the compress operated 24 hours a day, but that during the off-season there was a sufficient amount of work to do, so that the machinery was in operation usually throughout the year.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think that statement is quite accurate. After the completion of the seasonal work the compresses lay off most of their employees. They may operate 1 day a week when cotton comes in, but they do not work every day. At the ports the condition is a little different. At Galveston and Houston and the other great ports some compresses probably have enough to do to operate the year around, because the cotton comes there to be shipped, and it must be compressed before it is shipped.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I accept the information furnished by the Senator from Texas, and I appreciate it. However, it helps to illustrate the point I was trying to make, namely, that it is very difficult, without thorough examination, without sufficient testimony and data, to ascertain on the floor of the Senate what particular processors should be allowed an exemption on the ground that their work is seasonal in character, and which ones obviously should come within the purview of the bill if the bill is to be applied to such establishments at all.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I wonder if the Senator from Wisconsin does not have the same idea about the amendment that I had when it was offered. It was my understanding that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] was not offered for the purpose of exempting seasonal employees from the provisions of the bill, but that it was rather to exempt packers and processors during a season when they were engaged in processing and packing perishable goods. It was in the interest of saving perishable goods rather than in the interest of taking seasonal employees from under the provisions of the bill that the amendment was suggested in the beginning. Is that not true?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was my understanding of the purpose of the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Oregon. Of course, the Senator from Indiana will also bear in mind that the amendment applied only to the section empowering the board to limit hours under certain circumstances. Therefore, I do not think the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, as he has modified it, is on all fours with the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon which the Senate has adopted.

The appeal I wish to make to Senators who believe in the objectives which the bill seeks to attain and who intend to support it is that in our desire to take care of certain particular situations which, as they are presented, may seem appealing, we shall not incorporate in the bill language which will go beyond the intent even of those who have offered the amendments and take from the purview of the bill operations which are really essentially industrial in character, which are continuous, and which, if the bill is to apply to any operations, certainly should apply to those in the category to which I have just referred.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Carolina will withdraw his amendment and permit an opportunity to be afforded to some of those who have served on the committee and who have given their time and effort to the consideration of the bill, to confer with the Senator and see if we cannot bring the amendment into harmony with the principles upon which the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon was predicated.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I have offered an amendment, which is printed and is on the desk. I was very much interested in hearing what the Senator said about the committee considering the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina and seeing if some reasonable solution could not be reached as to what the exemptions in the bill should be. I wonder if the Senator would not be willing to extend the same privilege to me and if he is willing not to press action upon the amendment until I shall have had an opportunity to confer with him.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I realize that I am making an unusual request; but the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina was offered from the floor and we had no opportunity to see it in printed form. Since then it has been modified by suggestions made by other Senators. It occurred to me that if the Senator was willing to withdraw his amendment temporarily, if that suggestion appeals to him, perhaps we could bring it into harmony with the principles upon which is based the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, which has already been adopted.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am wondering when we shall reach a vote upon the bill itself. I make that inquiry for the reason that I should like to ascertain whether or not I shall have an opportunity to talk to the members of the committee on this subject before a final vote is reached, if the Senator from Wisconsin desires to discuss the subject matter of the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was not suggesting a meeting of the committee for the purpose of considering the amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; that is not what I thought. I understood the Senator to suggest that the Senator from North Carolina confer with members of the committee on the subject.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHITE. Is the situation such that the Senator from North Carolina may withdraw his amendment without unanimous consent? Has he the right at this time to withdraw the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; it may be withdrawn at any time by the Senator offering it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not wish to press the suggestion any further, but it occurred to me that if the Senator from North Carolina was willing to withdraw his amendment, it might be possible to bring it into harmony with the principles of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. If the amendment is to be withdrawn for the purpose of being considered by members of the committee, in connection with the consideration they give to it, I wish they would also give thought to a suggestion I should like to make, and that is that the words "potato warehouses" should be included in the amendment.

I know of no reasons for excepting tobacco warehouses from the provisions of the bill that do not equally obtain with respect to potato warehouses in many sections of the country. Some of the potato warehouses are seasonal in their operations, and some of them, I take it, are used all the year around. In connection with the warehouses that are seasonal in their use, I think the burden falls directly on the farmers of the country who produce potatoes, because I take it that the warehouse charges come out of the producer.

If the amendment is to be withdrawn, and the matter is to be considered further by the committee, I ask that consideration of potato warehouses also be given by the committee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not care to make a statement, except to say that it would be impossible for the committee to meet and discuss this particular matter. The Senator may wish to withdraw his amendment, but if he wishes to have a vote on it I shall be glad to have it taken. So far as I am concerned, I should much prefer that we go ahead and vote. Let potato warehouses and all others be added to the amendment. We can then vote on them all in one basket.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper point in the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

> The provisions of this act shall not apply to tobacco warehouses, cotton compresses, cotton warehouses, cotton ginning and baling, their employers or employees, where the employment is seasonal in character.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] that he is willing to have all the amendments voted on at the same time, I will say that I do not think that will be satisfactory to Members of the Senate who are in good faith offering amendments, and who have no intention whatever of weakening or emasculating the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. DIETERICH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator evidently was not present when I discussed this question some moments ago. The idea is, as I said then, that if there is going to be a special exemption from the proposed law of one type of activity, it should include, as a matter of justice, every other similar type of activity in the Nation. Therefore, I think that they should all be placed in one amendment, if that is to be done.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, the presumption would obtain from the Senator's statement that all suggested exceptions would be of the same class and entitled to the same consideration consistent with the spirit and the purpose of this bill. I do not believe that such a presumption can be indulged. Throughout, I think, my entire State there are little concerns which are not necessarily cooperative but are community affairs, such as small canning factories here and there, which the community has encouraged. The actual canning process of the vegetables and the other farm products that are processed by those small canning factories involves no item of labor employment of any importance. The canning places operate for a short duration and they do not attract labor to the particular locality. The labor is performed by local residents, by members of various families who are able to participate in the work rather as a harvest-time activity and for the sake of obtaining "pin" money. It occurs to me that the exemption of an institution of that kind could well be made without at all running counter to the purposes of this bill. The benefit is to the farmer of the vicinity.

For instance, some localities have establishments that can corn. The season is only 2 or 3 weeks in duration. Of course, the corn must be harvested and must be processed during the harvest season.

The benefit to the community accrues in large part from the fact that the canning factories furnish the farmers a market for their corn. A large acreage is devoted to the raising of the particular kind of corn which is canned, and the corn is brought to the canning factories in the form of roasting ears. The benefit is mainly to the farmer, only a very minor part of it accruing to those employed during the harvest season in the canning factories.

As I say, these small canning operations do not attract any outside labor. The labor item is not important. There is no one in the community wholly or in any substantial way dependent on labor of that kind. So, it occurs to me, an exemption might well be made of such establishments without doing any violence to this bill or without in any way destroying its purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BORAH. If an amendment has been adopted by a viva-voce vote may a Senator, if he chooses, enter a motion to reconsider the vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any Senator may do so within the 2-day time limit.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] with reference to limiting the operation of this bill to employers who employ 10 or a less number of employees was adopted this morning by a viva-voce vote. Since that time I have received some communications that justify me in now entering a motion to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted. I shall not ask that the motion be acted upon this evening, unless the bill shall be acted upon today, because I desire some further information, but I wish at this time to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, during the last day or two I have conferred with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and other Senators on both sides of the Chamber looking toward a possible limitation of debate during the further consideration of the pending bill. I do not wish to shut off any legitimate debate, but I think that we ought to be making progress toward a culmination of the discussion. I had hoped, I will say frankly, that if we could finish the bill this afternoon, and possibly make the housing bill the unfinished business, the Senate might recess over until Monday. That cannot be done if we cannot conclude the consideration of this bill today.

We all realize that there is an anxiety to wind up our business here at the earliest possible moment; I am sure that no Senator on either side wishes to prolong the debate; and I wish to say that up to this hour I do not think any Senator has spoken for that purpose, for the debate, as I said yesterday, has been on a very high plane and has been very instructive. I should like, however, to feel out the situation to see whether or not we may not, by unanimous consent, agree that from now on during the remainder of the consideration of the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have just returned to the Senate Chamber, and have not had an opportunity to confer with Senators on this side of the aisle. I think we have been progressing along rather rapid and considerate lines. I do not feel at this time that I would be willing to enter into an agreement of the kind suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. If there should seem to be a disposition to prolong the consideration of the bill beyond the time which ought to be given to it, I should be very glad to cooperate with the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, I hope the Senator will confer with his colleagues with a view to arranging that kind of an agreement.

Mr. MCNARY. I think, Mr. President, that no speeches have been made which have not, more or less, thrown light upon the subject, and most of those have come, I will say, from the Democratic side in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Most of the speeches which shed light on a subject come from the Democratic side. Therefore, I am not in a position to dispute the observation of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MCNARY. I said the speeches in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand that no agreement has been made this afternoon?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at this moment.

Mr. BORAH. Will one be made today?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is for each individual Senator to determine what the Senate will do today.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will at a suitable time press his motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] was adopted. Every Member of the Senate agrees that persons engaged in seasonal occupations in perishable goods should be exempted from the operations of the bill, but the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina would exempt about 200,000 wage earners who may have the misfortune to be working in sweatshops where there are less than 10 people employed.

If this bill has any merit whatsoever, it is that it seeks to provide a living minimum wage for the men and women who work in sweatshops. Unfortunately, while I do not think it is so intended by the Senator from North Carolina, the exemption proposed by him will mean that in the great city of New York and in Boston and Chicago where sweatshops are operated—not in the South; that may be said to the credit of the South—in which now from, say, 50 to 75 people are employed in garment making and in other sweatshop activities, the owners of the business will suddenly and unexpectedly bring about a division of ownership, so that there will be 9 people in 10 different shops, and the legitimate, decent, and respectable employer, who is willing to abide by the terms of this bill, and who employs 75 people, will be penalized and be the victim of chiseling by the employer who is in competition with him and who seeks to evade the provisions of this bill, if it shall be enacted.

The Committee on Finance has been devoting weeks to the effort to prevent evasion of the tax laws. The amendment to which I have referred, if finally adopted, would permit evasion of the proposed law and would put employers having seven, eight, or nine employees in competition with the legitimate employer.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Would not the effect of the amendment be that the character of competition which we are seeking to prevent, namely, exploitation as against efficiency, would continue, because the small sweatshop, employing just a few persons, would continue to pay low wages in competition with the employer who pays reasonable wages?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from New York is absolutely correct. If this bill, Mr. President, has any merit at all, if it has any justification for favorable action by the Congress of the United States, it is that it is designed to protect and prevent the exploitation of men and women wage earners working in small establishments. Those working in establishments having less than 10 employees number approximately 200,000. The bill is on the theory that such workers cannot organize, cannot enjoy collective bargaining, cannot have the benefit of the large units of employees who can organize and bring the pressure of a great labor organization to bear against the employer in order to obtain decent wages and reasonable hours of employment.

This amendment would have no business whatever to be here if it dealt only with the large units of industry in which a large number of wage earners are employed, because the organizations of such workers are so virile and so alert that they are capable of taking care of themselves. The theory upon which the bill has merit, in my opinion, is that small-wage earners in small industries scattered all over the country in competition with large industries, because of their locality, because of the fact they cannot organize, because of the objections of their employers to organized labor unions, have no power of asserting their human right to social justice.

What is social justice? Social justice means that we as legislators should extend to the unfortunate human beings those social rights which they could demand if they had the power of unity of action. Social justice means that government will take a hand in helping to uphold and support individuals and small groups of individuals who have not the power of pressure possessed by labor organizations.

I, for one, cannot agree that we should exempt from the protection of the bill the small number of employees who are engaged in seasonal work, but engaged in working 52 hours a week. Such wage earners are as much entitled to the application of the principles of social justice and the application of the principle of a decent living wage and the application of the principle of reasonable hours of emloyment as are the mass employees in the great centers of population of the country.

I, for one, hope, when the matter of reconsideration comes up, that we will give thought to that fact, and prevent the abuse which is as certain to follow as that the sun shines. I can see the situation now. Senators can visualize the kind of men who operate sweatshops in the great cities of the country suddenly dividing their 60 or 70 or 80 employees into units of 8 or 9, with a brother-in-law or cousin or aunt or uncle in alleged ownership of the establishment, and thus evading and escaping the application of the law; then sending their goods into the central markets in competition with large employers who obey and respect the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest that the Senator might move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted? I merely entered the motion.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is pending, and a motion to reconsider is not in order at the moment.

Mr. WALSH. Very well; I will submit it at a later time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, let us have the amendment reported from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read again.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

> The provisions of this act shall not apply to tobacco warehouses, cotton compresses, cotton warehouses, cotton ginning and baling, their employers or employees, where the employment is seasonal in character.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, would the distinguished Senator from North Carolina be willing to incorporate in the amendment a provision to the effect that "if the board created under this act finds that the employment is seasonal", and so forth?

Mr. REYNOLDS. My understanding from the Senator's address is that he is in favor of the exemption of seasonal employment.

Mr. WALSH. I have said I am in favor of the exemption of seasonal employment, but I do not know whether or not the Senator's amendment relates strictly to seasonal employment. I do not want to have incorporated in the bill a provision classifying these occupations as seasonal unless they are seasonal.

Mr. REYNOLDS. They are seasonal.

Mr. WALSH. How many months a year do these employees work?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should say 3 months would be the maximum amount of time.

Mr. WALSH. My objection is based on the viewpoint that all seasonal occupations ought to be exempted, especially from the hours of labor provisions, but I have some doubt whether these particular occupations are seasonal. I will take the Senator's word. If he says that in no case do these employees work more than from 3 to 6 months a year, I will accept his judgment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am sure in most instances none of the workers are employed more than 3 months. Senators from those sections of the South involved know that these workers are engaged actually not more than 3 months.

Mr. WALSH. Unfortunately, I am not from that section of the country. May I ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] whether he is in accord with the statement of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina as originally offered simply exempted tobacco workers from the operation of the provisions of the bill. I called to his attention that there are in my State some tobacco workers, that, while most of them are seasonal, yet some operate for the greater part of the year because they do other things than simply to receive tobacco at a warehouse. At my suggestion the language was amended to provide that where the operation of the workers is not seasonal in character, the exemption should not apply.

Mr. WALSH. Then the suggestion made by me is equivalent to having the board itself ascertain the fact?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think so. Of course, if in any case the operation should not be seasonal but annual, it would not be exempt, and the board would have charge of that.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana for that purpose?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. Is the Senator from Massachusetts in favor of exempting employees notwithstanding the fact that they are not engaged in what might strictly be construed to be seasonal occupation? For instance, would he apply the provisions of the bill to those engaged in the processing of products which might not be strictly seasonal?

Mr. WALSH. I am in favor of exempting from the rigid requirements of a 40-hour week all seasonal employees. I am not in favor of removing them from the requirement of having the board pass upon what shall be the minimum wage of the employees.

Mr. MINTON. If I correctly understand the Senator, he does not want to confine the exemption of employees to seasonal processings which do not involve perishable products. In other words, here is cotton, which is not perishable; then here is tobacco, which is not perishable. Yet in both cases they might be termed seasonal.

Mr. WALSH. They are not perishable, but they are seasonal. In my own State of Massachusetts fish are caught and brought to the shore at the city of Gloucester, where canning and other packing factories take charge of them and handle them, of course while they are fresh. This business is carried on throughout the year. It is seasonal to the extent that, when one shipload of fish comes in, the factory begins operations, and then does not operate again until another cargo of fish comes in. It would seem to me that packers and canners and others carrying on a year-around business should not be exempted from the provisions of the bill. But employees engaged in seasonal occupational work on perishable products clearly should be exempt.

Mr. MINTON. What I had in mind when the amendment was first offered was that it was intended to exempt only perishable products; that it was the intention to help those who raise the perishable products, to enable them to save their products from waste in order that they might be packed.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct. The Senator has raised a very fine and proper distinction. These operations should be exempted because it is necessary to operate quickly and work long hours to handle the products while they are fresh and before they spoil. However, in the case of nonperishable products, such as tobacco and cotton, there is no reason for exempting them from the provisions of the bill, in my judgment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am not going to weary the Senate with more talk upon this subject, because I expressed my views fully yesterday.

The point I desire to raise, and it involves a legal question, is this: In creating these specific exemptions we must be careful not to void by Federal entry into the field any State laws which might impose restrictions upon these seasonal industries. I know that a number of States do impose limitations as to hours, even for seasonal industries. I therefore ask those who want an unlimited number of hours for seasonal industries under this bill to accept at least the proviso that wherever a State law imposes a limitation of hours upon the industries involved, such State law shall not be affected adversely by our action under this bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator is a lawyer and he knows that we cannot repeal a State statute.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, we cannot; but many of these industries——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I think we can obviate this discussion.

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The bill already contains a saving clause with reference to State laws. Wherever there is a State law or a municipal regulation regulating hours, and those hours are a less number per week than as provided in this bill or under the orders made in pursuance of this bill, the State or municipal regulation governs; and the same thing is true with reference to wages.

Mr. WAGNER. The chances are that that will take care of the situation. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that State laws apply even to interstate commerce within the State so long as there is no Federal regulation. But the moment we initiate a Federal regulation which is in conflict with the State law, the Federal rule prevails.

Mr. GLASS. That I understand; but we cannot here make, except in matters of interstate commerce, any law that will control the States.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not say that we could, Mr. President. In fact, I said that even in the case of industries in interstate commerce, so long as the Federal Government made no regulation, the State restrictions would apply.

Mr. GLASS. Exactly.

Mr. WAGNER. What I was fearful of was that by adopting these amendments we might interfere with humane State legislation, but I am satisfied by the explanation of the Senator from Alabama that the matter is amply safeguarded in the bill as now drawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

The modified amendment of Mr. REYNOLDS was as follows:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to tobacco warehouses, cotton compresses, cotton warehouses, cotton ginning and baling, their employers or employees where the employment is seasonal in character.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the general pair of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 40, the nays are 40. The modified amendment to the committee amendment is, therefore, rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate reconsider the vote of approval recently registered upon the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina providing that employers who employ less than 10 employees shall not be subject to the proposed law. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator whether we may not have the vote reconsidered, and then have the yeas and nays on the amendment itself? I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. McKELLAR requested that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, on page 64, after line 3, the following:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to any individual, firm, association, or corporation employing 10 or fewer than 10 persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas and nays have been requested. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the roll was called.

So Mr. REYNOLDS' amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, and ask that it be reported from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 51, line 13, after the word "farmer", it is proposed to insert the words "or on a farm", and on line 14, page 51, after the word "operations", it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "including delivery to market."

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to broaden the definition of "employee" as applied to agriculture. I can readily see how some have construed the language of the bill to mean that one who operates a thrashing machine outfit and employs a crew and is employed by a farmer to thrash his wheat might be included under the provisions of the bill. Likewise, those who are engaged in harvesting and delivering to market might be included. It is my understanding, although no definite commitment has been made, that the amendment is not opposed by those in charge of the bill. If I am correct, I should like to have the amendment agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment again be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGILL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it the purpose of the amendment to exempt those who thresh grain?

Mr. McGILL. Those who thresh grain, who harvest grain and deliver it to market.

Mr. GEORGE. Would the amendment also apply to the harvesting of any other crop?

Mr. McGILL. It would apply to any commodity produced on a farm.

Mr. GEORGE. Would it apply to peanut pickers who pick in the fields?

Mr. McGILL. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. And who move peanuts to the market?

Mr. McGILL. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if that is his interpretation of the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. That is my interpretation of the amendment, and it is my belief that the bill as originally drawn covers what is now contained in the language of the amendment; but some Senators who were doubtful about it wished to draw a clarifying amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sure it does not in fact do so, because the picking of peanuts and the harvesting of grain in my part of the country are done purely by contract with outsiders, who in a great many cases have no farm interest. What I want to get at is whether, in the opinion of the Senator from Alabama, the language of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas includes any field crop that is threshed, as in the case of grain, or picked, as in the case of peanuts in the field.

Mr. BLACK. Unquestionably.

Mr. McGILL. I may say to the Senator from Georgia and other Senators that it is my object to make the language of the amendment broad enough to include all work done on a farm, so long as it is incidental to agricultural purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. And so long as it is merely preparatory and necessarily preparatory to the marketing of the field crop. Is that true?

Mr. McGILL. That is true; and the language would also include all labor performed in making delivery to market.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, that would take care of my apple man, about whom I have been worrying, would it not? It would take care of the farmer who takes his crop of apples to the market, would it not?

Mr. McGILL. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I lost my apple man before.

Mr. McGILL. I hope it will take care of him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] to the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amenmdent, on page 61, after line 12, it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

The average minimum wage ordered by the board to be paid by private employers in any State shall be the minimum wage to be paid by the Works Progress Administration to its employees in that State.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, during the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill the Appropriations Committee considered the question whether or not there should be included in the bill an amendment providing that any minimum wage fixed in this bill should apply to the employees of the Works Progress Administration. I did not believe the appropriation bill was the proper place to put such a provision. I did not think it should be included in the appropriation bill. It was our thought that if such action was to be taken, it should await action by the Congress on this bill.

Mr. President, the argument that is used for this bill is that it is designed to protect unorganized laborers. If that is to be done, certainly there is no larger or more helpless group than that composed of those who are employed by the Works Progress Administration. They are not organized. They cannot be successfully organized. If a minimum wage is to be ordered to be paid by employers within the States, I think the same minimum wage should be paid by the Works Progress Administration. I know what will be the effect of establishing a minimum wage in many respects.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Am I to understand the Senator's amendment to provide the payment of the same minimum wages that would be paid by the Works Progress Administration?

Mr. BYRNES. It would require the Works Progress Administration to pay the minimum wages that the board determines shall be paid. The provision of the amendment is just the reverse of what the Senator has stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understood to the contrary.

Mr. BYRNES. No. Mr. President, I hope no misunderstanding exists with reference to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may not quite understand the position of the Senator from South Carolina; but if it attempts to yoke this bill to the Works Progress Administration, it seems to me that would be a mistake, because the Works Progress Administration is an ephemeral organization, and the board now proposed to be set up by the bill is to be one in perpetuity.

Mr. BYRNES. No yoking is provided in the amendment. Members of the Senate know that the Works Progress Administration, after an investigation, has established a schedule of wages which is the cause of continued complaint by various States and various sections. The unskilled wage runs all the way from $21.16 per month in Mississippi to $60.50 in New York. In practically every State there is a different wage for unskilled labor.

All that my amendment does is to provide that if, in the State of South Carolina or Georgia, for instance, the board shall hereafter conclude that a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour should be paid by private employers as the minimum upon which an employee can live, then the average for the State—for the board might fix one minimum wage for one industry and another minimum wage for another industry—the average for the State, fixed by the board after its investigation as provided for in the bill, shall be adopted by another department of the Government as the minimum wage to be paid to employees of that department of the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] offered an amendment to the Works Progress Administration appropriation, as I recall, which I thought was adopted, which carried into that bill the idea of the pending amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment was not adopted. I will say to the Senator that we were of the opinion that it should be adopted; but it was finally determined in conference that the matter should await the consideration of the bill now pending, and that this would be the proper place to consider the subject instead of placing the amendment on the appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACK. The amendment now before us is the same, as I recall, as that which the Senate adopted in connection with the appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Its purpose is exactly the same, as I said at the outset. It was first offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and was considered by the Appropriations Committee. By reason of his appointment by the Senate on a special committee, he is now necessarily absent. I am satisfied that if he were present he would offer the amendment to this bill as he did at the time he previously offered it.

Mr. BLACK. As I recall, that amendment was unanimously adopted by the Senate, was it not?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not recall whether it was or not, but it was adopted by the Senate; and, I understand from the Senator from Georgia, that in conference it was eliminated for the reason that the conferees thought the matter should await action in connection with the bill now before us.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that I voted for the amendment when the Senator from Georgia offered it, and the Committee on Education and Labor has not been called upon to act upon it; so I have no authority to speak for the committee with respect to it.

Mr. BYRNES. I hope the Senator will accept the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I will say that I voted for it when it was offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BYRNES. I hope the Senator will agree to its adoption.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to have the situation clear before we decide how we shall vote on this amendment.

It seems to me the situation in relation to the amendment offered on the relief bill was entirely different from that which now presents itself to the Senate. Under this bill the board is authorized to establish a minimum wage. The Works Progress Administration is not engaged in general industry. It is not engaged in general industrial employment. The wages paid by the Works Progress Administration are wages paid in the main on public improvements of various sorts, and they may not have any relationship at all to what ought to be the minimum wage or the average wage in private industry. If we undertake to fix a minimum wage with respect to lumber or flour mills, or sawmills, or shoe factories, or clothing factories, or shirt factories, or any other average type of private industry, certainly the average minimum wage paid by the Works Progress Administration, it seems to me, would not have any relationship whatever to such wage.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky—and I think he overlooked it—that the Congress took exactly the opposite position and provided in one of the previous appropriation bills, after a very strenuous fight led by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], that the wage paid by the Works Progress Administration should follow the prevailing wage rate. The Administrator has been endeavoring, according to a statement made by him to the Appropriations Committee, to follow the prevailing wage rate.

Mr. BARKLEY. That provision had application only to the prevailing wage rate paid in the community for similar or like work.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. But where the Works Progress Administration, through the agency of a school board, is building a high school or a bridge or a hospital, or repairing sidewalks, or doing any other nature of public work, it seems to me there is no way by which to measure what ought to be the average minimum wage in those employments as compared with any private industry in which the Works Progress Administration is not engaged.

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest to the Senator that we discussed that matter in the committee at the time, and a table was then incorporated in the hearings which I should like to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. The table was submitted by the Director. In it he gives the wage for unskilled labor, intermediate labor, skilled labor, and professional labor. This bill has reference solely to the minimum wage, which is the unskilled wage. Four grades are fixed by the Works Progress Administration—unskilled, intermediate, skilled, and professional.

I ask that the table to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Mr. BYRNES. I may say that before the committee the director stated at the time that it was his thought that if this bill were enacted into law the minimum wage of the W. P. A. should be made to correspond to the wage fixed by this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that the amendment of the Senator, if adopted, would completely nullify the minimum of 40 cents an hour fixed by the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. On the contrary, it would have just the opposite effect. Certainly its purpose is not as the Senator from Kentucky suggests.

Mr. BARKLEY. If it should happen that in any community or any State or over the country, as a whole, that the minimum was not so much as 40 cents an hour, then, the provisions of the Senator's amendment would supersede the 40-cent rate?

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no. I can see now why the Senator has not immediately approved the amendment. All that the amendment provides is that whenever the board fixes a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour, then the Works Progress Administration must pay to the same unskilled labor 40 cents an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. I evidently had the thing backwards.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator had it in reverse.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought it was the other way around, that the board would have to pay whatever rate was fixed by the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. BYRNES. The sole purpose is to make sure if one arm of the Government created by this bill establishes as a minimum wage, upon which human beings can live under a reasonable standard, 40 cents an hour, that we should not then permit the Government itself, after requiring the Senator from Kentucky, say, to pay 40 cents an hour to go into his community and pay 20 cents an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. With that interpretation of the amendment, having been mistaken in my interpretation of it, I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment reported by the committee, on page 52, line 12, it is proposed to strike out the words "by or under" and insert in lieu thereof "and held pursuant to."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the amendment pertains to the definition of oppressive child labor. After giving the definition, the section proceeds as follows:

> But oppressive child labor shall not be deemed to exist by virtue of the employment in any occupation of any person with respect to whom the employer shall have on file a certificate issued by or under the regulation of the Chief of the Children's Bureau certifying that such person is above the oppressive child-labor age.

It will be seen at a glance while at the time of the issuance of the certificates the particular employer may have been complying with the requirements that later on he may not be complying. Therefore this amendment is proposed so that the certificate would not only be issued but would be held pursuant to the regulation of the Chief of the Children's Bureau. In other words, it would be effective at all times. If the certificate ceases to be effective, it should not be a protection for an employer who is not complying with the provisions of the law. That is the only purpose of the amendment.

I have called it to the attention of other members of the committee, and they do not appear to have any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask that the next amendment offered by me be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 68, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the word "such" and insert in lieu thereof the words "industrial home work or of such other."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, this provision has reference to the labor-standard orders that may be issued by the board. It is proposed by the amendment to include in paragraph (6) of section 9 the words "industrial home work or such other", in order to prohibit industrial home work, which is one of the most serious evils in sweatshop practices. It seems to me that such a provision should be made in this bill. I do not assume that there will be any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask that the next amendment offered by me be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 75, after line 7, it is proposed to strike out paragraph (c), as follows:

(c) Whenever the board deems necessary or appropriate to aid in the enforcement of, or to facilitate compliance with, the provisions of this act or the regulations thereunder, the board shall by regulation or order provide for the issuance of appropriate certificates of compliance to employers who the board finds are complying with the provisions of this act and the regulations and orders thereunder, and any person who shall in good faith purchase goods from or transport goods for any employer in reliance upon such certificate shall not be deemed to have any reason to believe that any substandard labor condition existed in the production of such goods.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(c) No person other than the producer shall be prosecuted for the transportation, shipment, delivery, or sale of unfair goods who has secured a representation in writing from the person by whom the goods transported, shipped, or delivered were produced, resident in the United States, to the effect that such goods were not produced in violation of any provision of this act. If such representation contains any false statement of a material fact, the person furnishing the same shall be amenable to prosecution and to the penalties provided for the violation of the provisions of this act.

Mr. MURRAY. I will state the purpose of the amendment. The bill as it stands requires the board to make investigations throughout the country and issue appropriate certificates of compliance to employers who are complying with the act. It will be observed that it would be necessary for the board constantly to be carrying on investigations throughout the Nation. The purpose of this amendment is to place the burden upon the employer to issue a guaranty or warranty that he is complying with the act, and thereby relieve the board of the necessity of much administrative work which would require a large body of investigators. The adoption of the amendment would reduce the cost of the administration of the act and would also greatly simplify its administration.

I have called the amendment to the attention of several members of the committee and I assume that they have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask that the next amendment offered by me be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 80, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "supersede or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment heretofore submitted by me and which is on the clerk's desk.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the chairman of the committee—I was compelled to be absent from the Senate Chamber yesterday—if any Senator brought up the question of porters and redcaps in railroad stations?

Mr. BLACK. I do not recall any question being raised as to red caps.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that porters and redcaps in railroad stations get absolutely no pay. They depend upon fees and tips received. They are, in a sense, employees of the station master; but, of course, if their hours of labor were to be limited, many of these poor chaps would starve to death. Is there anything in the bill that would permit anyone to interfere with the hours of labor of these colored workmen in the railroad stations?

Mr. BLACK. The bill excludes railroad employees who are governed by the railroad employees' law.

Mr. COPELAND. But these men are not so governed.

Mr. BLACK. Then the question would be whether or not the work is of such a character that they should be brought within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. If I had my way, I would have these men paid. I should be glad if they were paid the 40-cent-an-hour rate, but as a matter of fact they are not paid anything. They do not have $1 a week paid to them. They depend wholly upon tips, and yet they are employees of and under the discipline of the station master. The point I have in mind is, How could we proceed to give these men relief from the requirements and restrictions of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. They could be exempted if the Senate wanted to vote for their exemption. Personally, I should regret to see a particular exemption for this type of employees.

Mr. COPELAND. But they are perfectly helpless. They have no pay. They have to work ungodly hours, as do many of the taxi drivers, and others.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should not think the men referred to by the Senator from New York would be considered as being employed by the stationmaster or the railroads. They are merely licensees or permittees, so to speak, and their employment is by each individual who hands them baggage, authorizing them to convey the baggage to or from a train. I should not think they would be employed by the railway company. They are piece workers for individuals who might desire their services and would not come within the meaning of the bill nor within the regulations imposed by the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. If they are not employed, of course, they would not come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. They are merely permitted by the railway companies or the stationmaster to serve there as porters. It seems to me they are not employed.

Mr. COPELAND. Then the record will show the matter was considered here, and that redcaps and porters of this type are not employed in the sense of the language used in the bill and therefore do not come under the requirements of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I should say that is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is in the nature of a substitute. I have two amendments which I want to offer to perfect the text of the substitute proposed by the committee. Would not they take precedence of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, the perfecting amendments to the committee substitute would take precedence over a substitute for the entire committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 59, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

(1a) Where transportation costs or freight rates are discriminatory against any locality or area.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not believe there will be any objection to the amendment because it follows the language, "In declaring such minimum wages the board shall consider among other relevant circumstances the following." Then follows "cost of living" and then comes my amendment relating to cost of transportation. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. I do not believe there should be any objection on the part of the committee. From what the chairman of the committee said the other day on the floor of the Senate, I take it that it is an amendment which should be adopted.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is my own belief, as I said several days ago, that the bill as drawn and the standards set forth include the identical language contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that be the case, there is no reason why the amendment may not go into the bill, and I ask that it be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now offer another amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed, following the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

(1b) Local economic conditions.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is of the same nature, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MALONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me a moment?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I have sought for some time to get an opportunity to have read at the desk a very short statement sent to me about noon by Mr. William Green, of the American Federation of Labor. I now ask unanimous consent to have it read. It is very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The wage and hour bill in the form in which it is now before the Senate does not meet the expectations of labor. However, we recognize the need for the enactment of wage and hour legislation. For that reason, rather than recommit the Senate bill for further committee consideration, it would seem advisable to pass the best wage and hour bill possible in the Senate, with the hope that it can be revised and amended in the House in such a way as to make it more nearly satisfactory and acceptable to labor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I shall not yield at the moment, but I will yield as soon as I get permission to have the clerk read a communication from another official of the American Federation of Labor. I ask that the communication be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 30, 1937.

Hon. FRANCIS T. MALONEY,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building:

As a representative of the American Federation of Labor I am unalterably opposed to Senate bill 2475 in its present form. I am of the opinion your amendment will overcome my objections. If your amendment is not accepted by your colleagues, may I urge you to vote to recommit the pending bill.

I. M. ORNBURN,
Secretary, Union Label Trades Department,
American Federation of Labor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent to have read at the desk another statement by some high officials of the American Federation of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The international unions of the building trades and the metal trades, speaking through the building trades department and the metal trades department, American Federation of Labor, believe that the Black-Connery bill—the wage and hour bill—now before the Senate should be recommitted.

This measure, which so vitally affects labor, seeks to establish minimum wage rates and maximum hours of labor. With this purpose the two departments are in hearty and active approval. But the measure in its present form and with amendments which have been proposed would go much farther.

In its present form there is grave danger that it would materially interfere with and modify the Walsh-Healey bill, which has been of such great protection to labor standards.

There is as yet no clearly defined authority to be given the commission provided for in the measure.

There has been no adequate opportunity for consideration of the measure by labor or by the Senate.

It is the conviction of the building trades department and of the metal trades department, American Federation of Labor, that a measure of such far-reaching effect on labor should not be enacted until there has been an adequate opportunity for examination, consultation, and conference.

It is for these reasons that the two departments of the American Federation of Labor, whose members will be so vitally affected by any such measure, earnestly urge that the bill will be recommitted so that the subject can receive the consideration which is so necessary under the circumstances.

JOHN P. FREY,
President, Metal Trades Department,
American Federation of Labor.
J. W. WILLIAMS,
President, Building Trades Department,
American Federation of Labor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is the Senator from Connecticut about to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. MALONEY. I am.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, I have one or two amendments which I desire to offer to the bill before we reach the substitute. Of course, the offer of the substitute will not preclude my doing so; but before we are through I want to put the amendments in the bill if I can. I desire to ask whether we cannot arrange some time for the consideration of this matter tomorrow, so that we may continue then. I suppose nobody doubts that we can finish the bill tomorrow.

We have gone along very rapidly. Yesterday it was the understanding that we would go into executive session today so that we might dispose of the Social Security appointees; and there may be some discussion about them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will state to the Senator that there was no agreement that we would have an executive session today. The agreement was that the nominations would be considered at the next executive session, whether today or at some other time. We are going along pretty well now; it is only a little after 4 o'clock and it is entirely possible that we may conclude the consideration of the bill today. If so, the chances are fairly favorable that we may have a recess until Monday. If, however, we cannot conclude the consideration of the bill today, we shall have to work tomorrow, if the Members of the Senate are willing to come back here tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I see no reason why we should not work tomorrow. If it is desired to discuss the matter further today, very well.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should like to say that so far as I am concerned, I think we should finish the consideration of the bill tonight.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I have one or two matters that I desire to bring up in connection with the pending bill. I do not want to interfere at all with the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to have a clear understanding as to the parliamentary situation. Is it compulsory, because my amendment is in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee, that I await action upon any and all amendments that are proposed to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that under the rule, perfecting amendments to the committee substitute are first in order, after which a substitute for that substitute is in order. Therefore, perfecting amendments would take precedence over the Senator's substitute.

Mr. MALONEY. Then I yield the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 51, line 3, after the word "agriculture", it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

Or any person whose compensation is paid upon a commission basis exclusively.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this bill has been greatly modified since hearings were first held upon it. As I understand, the chief purpose of the bill is to provide a process whereby minimum wages and maximum working hours in all industries of the Nation doing business through interstate commerce may be established.

The bill does not, in my judgment, attempt to fix wages and maximum hours of employment in all the small local business units of the country. In this respect, therefore, we have reason to expect that it will not be imposed on small business as was the National Recovery Act. If I am mistaken in this point, I should like to be corrected by those in charge of the bill, for I hold that this is an exceedingly important point.

One of the chief disastrous results of the National Recovery Act was the way in which it was administered so as to impose a blanket code on all of industry, irrespective of size or location.

I believe careful attention should be given to the phrase "otherwise directly affecting interstate commerce" in the first sentence of the first section. If this phrase will be interpreted by the board so as to include small business, I think we should know it now. I believe the Nation should have warning of it. It is my understanding that this plan of action under the bill is not now contemplated.

I am in full accord with the measure insofar as it relates to the further restriction of child labor, although I should like very much to see this part of the bill separated from the rest of it. I do not believe that the action taken in this regard would justify an expectation of a complete coverage of the Nation in the limitation of child labor, because it does not, as I understand, apply to local businesses doing merely intrastate trade. I have always been in favor of the restriction of child labor in industry; and insofar as the bill will be a step in this direction, I favor it.

The bill does not affect agriculture directly, although I think we must realize that anything which pertains to industry will inevitably have an effect upon agriculture. No possible divorcement can be obtained between the two. With the present advancing improvement in agricultural conditions, I should not like to see any feature of this bill applied in such a way as to weaken the parity between agriculture and industry which is now in prospect.

The original bill contained certain punitive measures which have been removed. I would not vote for the bill if I understood it to express any vengeful or vindictive attitude toward American industry, because we cannot afford to create a condition of war between Government and industry.

The Davis-Bacon prevailing wage law has established a principle for wage agreements which should not be jeopardized by the proposed legislation now before us. I believe no action should be taken which would break down the principle of the prevailing wage standards. According to my interpretation of the bill, whenever and wherever workers engaged in interstate business receive less than 40 cents an hour, they can petition the board to have a minimum-wage standard fixed, or any group of employees who are now working over 40 hours a week can petition the board to have their weekly hour standard reduced. The board has jurisdiction over every employee engaged in business of an interstate character who is receiving less than 40 cents an hour and over every employee who is working over 40 hours per week. This is my understanding of the bill.

The employer who is not willing to pay his workers an adequate wage is holding back the progress of our economic recovery. Where thousands of workers are reduced in purchasing power, the business of the Nation or of the locality involved suffers. From any one industry which pays a mere subsistence wage goes out the vicious circle of loss, affecting all other industries. I believe there is a growing opinion among employers that the cooperation of workers and industrial management in relation to hours and wages is necessary to the national welfare. Only through united effort to bring purchasing power to larger numbers of people can we achieve the industrial stability which the Nation as a whole now requires.

Wages and hours of labor have always been of great interest to me. When I was Secretary of Labor these matters were constantly uppermost in my mind. Much progress was made toward the establishment of the 8-hour day and the 6-day week in certain industries at that time which formerly had operated on the 7-day week and 12-hour day basis. Practically all the steel industry had abandoned the 7-day week and conferences were being held with other industries leading to the same development by 1929. At that time the 5-day week was becoming increasingly prevalent.

There appears to be a distinct line between the employers who try to be fair to their employees and those who have proceeded on the rule or ruin policy. In my observation of the last 16 years, those operators who observe humanitarian American principles, which today we realize are the soundest economic principles, have carried on quite as successfully as those operators whose rule has been one of ruthless oppression. Progressive industrial leaders have learned that it is profitable to pay good wages.

High wages make efficient and contented workers, and no industry can flourish today whose employees are constantly dissatisfied. Labor unrest of today shows clearly that the workers of this country will never be satisfied unless their wages and hours represent the increase which technological improvements should insure. The employer who refuses to pay an adequate wage to his worker, that is, a saving wage, injures himself even more than he injures them. Unconsciously such an employer is engaged in the unprofitable business of robbing himself. The worker who receives a bare subsistence wage will never learn to be a good buyer. He will eat only the coarsest of foods; he will wear only the shoddiest of clothes, and he will live shabbily.

I have always favored the voluntary principle of American industry, and have feared the injuries possible under a system of political coercion. I have felt that the attempted control of politics by business is no less injurious than the attempted control of business by politics. These are two separate fields in which cooperation is necessary, but where the loss of identity by either is injurious to the Nation. I believe we have men in Washington who know more about government than industry can possibly know. Likewise I believe there are leaders in our many industries and in agriculture who know what is best for their productivity and the Nation's prosperity. If political coercion of industry and labor is intended under the bill, I am opposed to it and cannot vote for it. If it merely attempts to set standards, regulatory in nature, similar to those set up for the transportation industry by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and without either punitive methods or spirit as regards industry, I am willing to give it a trial. I think it should be regarded as experimental. In order that complete independence of the board from undue political influence may be maintained, I believe the chairmanship should rotate annually, and I am submitting an amendment calling for this provision. I do not think the President should have power to remove the chairman of the board at will, or without showing cause for such action.

I regard the measure as experimental in nature, and if the punitive and coercive features against which I have protested, and which were present in the original bill, shall be carried over in the administration of the pending bill, I shall immediately ask for its repeal.

Mr. President, I have always believed in the principle of collective bargaining. I was born in the year of what was probably the greatest strike known at that time, in which that problem was involved. From my earliest days I have known the misery and anguish caused through the denial of this right. I have worked for the development and maintenance of this right ever since I went to work in industry as a boy. I have seen the gradual development of public conscience in this matter until today I can truthfully say that no man dares stand in the Halls of Congress and urge the defeat of this principle. We all believe that collective bargaining is not only the right of the worker, but the right of industry, and that it serves the mutual interests of both.

Mr. President, legislation has been found necessary to the development of public opinion in this field. There have been many employers who desired to give this right to their employees who were kept back by others who refused to recognize the usefulness of this principle. There have been a few employers who have fought against the principle of labor organization and unionism with every method at their command, and often flying in the face of common decency and the best interests of the communities in which they lived in order to defeat it. They have resorted to force, blacklisting, espionage, and organized terrorism in order to have their own way. But today they can find no one to champion their cause openly in the Halls of Congress, and collective bargaining, which they denied, is now guaranteed by the law of the land to every worker in the United States, no matter where he lives or how humble may be his occupation. The National Labor Relations Act, as I understand it, does this and no more. It is a guarantee that workers everywhere in the land shall have the right to assemble and organize without fear of being discharged or molested in any way. The law was at first the subject of controversy, and has not been clearly understood. Perhaps some modifications will be necessary to make it entirely clear. But the principle of collective bargaining stands written in it, and that principle has come to stay. The law does not compel any man to join any union. It does not compel a worker to work or an employer to employ. It does guarantee that workers shall have the right to organize so that they may come to their employers as a group or through representatives of their own choosing, and discuss with the employer the terms of their hours and wages and labor conditions. This seems to be such a just demand that it is strange it has not always been the practice in American industry.

Mr. President, I am greatly interested in the application of this principle to small establishments, for they are in the majority. There are only 120 establishments in the United States having 2,500 or more employees, as shown by the figures so fortunately furnished yesterday by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and cited by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in his very able discussion of this problem. But while there are comparatively few great establishments, there are 57,152 where the number of employees is between 1 and 5, 40,176 where the number of employees is between 6 and 20, 18,576 where the number of employees is between 21 and 50, 9,262 where the number of employees is between 51 and 100, 10,304 where the number of employees is over 100 and under 500, and 1,661 where the number of employees is between 500 and 2,500.

Thus it will be seen that the great preponderance of the employing establishments of the country have on their pay rolls less than 2,500 employees, and most of them less than 20. I am interested in these more than 97,000 establishments having less than 20 employees each. It is this type of business which stands unorganized today and where the difficulties of organization are great. The fact is that less than 15 percent of American labor is organized, and the great mass which is not organized often holds back the progress of better standards of work and wages. Under the law of the land it is now possible for workers everywhere, irrespective of the size of their establishments, to get together and organize collectively for their rights and interests. They are no longer left helpless. This represents a condition of improvement for both labor and industry, for I believe it means an increase of purchasing power for the Nation as a whole, which is so greatly needed.

Mr. President, yesterday question arose in the Senate as to the violation of industrial agreements. Experienced trade-union leaders will fight to the last for the strict and honest maintenance of labor agreements. During my 10 years' experience as Secretary of Labor, violations of contract were exceedingly rare—almost nil. We did have the experience of having certain constituent unions of the A. F. of L. now with the C. I. O. quit work under their agreements, but such action came through local officers and the national labor leaders of that constituent body of the A. F. of L. insisted that the locals go back to work, and they did return to their labors. The best statements I have ever heard made concerning the sacredness of labor agreements have come from the lips of these great labor statesmen. Inexperienced unionists who have only an academic understanding of these matters have been today the cause of most of our difficulties along this line. Voluntary organizations cannot be carried on successfully by inexperienced and theory-ridden leadership. Industrial and labor agreements must be regarded as sacred and must be kept, no matter what the cost. When differences arise, the proper adjustments can be made around the council table. Sensible workers know that their wages come solely and wholly from industrial earnings, and sensible employers know that wages must be sufficient, as President Harding said, "for comfort, enough to make his house a home, enough to insure him that the struggle for existence is worth existing for."

Mr. President, in the light of industrial discords two questions present themselves: The value and importance of collective bargaining and the relation of arbitration to collective bargaining. Collective bargaining is the right of the working men and women of the country, as it is the right of American industry. The actual application of the principle is largely the cause of differences that exist in certain industries. An excellent statement of the fundamental principles involved has come from the president of a great international union, who now occupies a seat in this Chamber. I refer to the junior Senator from Tennessee, the Honorable GEORGE L. BERRY. It was as long ago as 1908 that he said:

> The prosperity of the investor, management, and labor depends upon the prosperity and stability of the industry in which they are engaged. There exists between these elements an inescapable community of interest. They cannot take out of business more than they put into it jointly; and all wastes of whatever nature, whether wastes in the use of raw materials, inefficiencies, strikes, or lock-outs, visit themselves upon all who are engaged in business. Therefore I subscribe to the principle of conciliation, mediation, and, as a last resort, arbitration before considering the stoppage of business, which in itself is the largest element of waste.

Thus the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America grew in importance, in public respect, in influence, and in betterments, not only for the members of the organization itself but for the industry in which its members were engaged.

Mr. President, the foregoing quotation comes from the president of an organization that prints practically every newspaper upon the continent, working under an international agreement that has had a continued tenure for more than 30 years, and in all of that period of time there has never been a strike or lock-out in the newspaper field of America which was covered by this international voluntarily made arbitration agreement, except in one instance, and that occurred in the city of New York in 1923. The country was made aware of the strike that stopped the daily newspapers of that city, and again the president of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America, our colleague, Senator BERRY, said:

This is an illegal strike of one of our local unions; the local has violated an agreement which it made with the publishers. The publishers have not abrogated the agreement, and the international union, which underwrote the agreement, has not abrogated it.

We propose to make good our guaranty. This is the fight of the International Printing Press and Assistants' Union to maintain the sacredness of contracts and the principle of arbitration as the antidote against wasteful strikes. We will print these newspapers; we will cancel this local union's charter; we will fight our own members to the fullest degree of our influence, strength, and money to maintain law and order in the newspaper field of New York City.

Mr. President, the example to which reference is made can be found in any other international and national labor unions, and it results from a long period of education and discipline. It is the outgrowth of a complete understanding as to the value of cooperation on a sound business basis as between the investor, management, and labor. Moreover, it is my opinion that such a procedure constitutes not only the very essence of American industrial stability and tranquillity, but it is also a contribution to the perpetuity of our Nation itself.

Mr. President, under date of July 28 I received from John Possehl, general president of the International Union of Operating Engineers, a copy of a letter he addressed under date of July 23 to President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, on the subject of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

I am of the opinion that this letter will throw some light on the statements made here yesterday with reference to the American Federation of Labor.

I have known Mr. Possehl for many years. He is a scholar and a profound student of labor problems, a consistent trade-unionist, and one who strongly believes in the sacredness of labor agreements.

Upon receipt of this letter from Mr. Possehl I called him by telephone and requested him to send me a copy of the previous letter he referred to, which he sent to President Green, of the Federation of Labor, under date of June 3, 1937. I am not going to read that particular letter, but, as it is Mr. Possehl's analysis of the first bill, and because I am of the opinion it will be of service to those who desire to see, from a labor man's point of view, the difference between the original bill and the bill as reported out of the Committee on Education and Labor, I now ask unanimous consent to have Mr. Possehl's letter under date of June 3, 1937, placed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF OPERATING ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1937.

Subject: Fair Labor Standards Act of 1937.

Mr. WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.
American Federation of Labor Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The two bills brought within the subject of this memorandum—S. 2475, by Senator BLACK, of Alabama, and H. R. 7200, by Representative CONNERY, of Massachusetts—are practically identical and accompany the special message of the President to the Congress on May 24, 1937, on the subject of wages and hours of labor. I have studied the bills carefully, using S. 2475 as the principal source, and present you herewith my analysis thereof.

Part I: Part I of the bill is devoted to a declaration of policy, definitions, and the creation of a labor standards board.

Section 1 (a): As a part of its legislative declaration, the bill declares the evils of the employment of workers under substandard labor conditions in occupations in interstate commerce, in the production of goods for interstate commerce, or "otherwise directly affecting interstate commerce." That quoted phrase goes in its intent far beyond any legislative proposal which, offhand, I remember to have come before my attention. The recent decisions by the Supreme Court—I refer to those of April 12, 1937—were extremely liberal in their interpretations of the relationship between the National Labor Relations Act and interstate commerce, but the words of the new bill greatly exceed the decisions of the Court. So far as I am able to visualize the field, any enterprise which employs labor may be considered as having an effect upon interstate commerce. A cab owner, for example, who operates cabs within the limits of a political subdivision, no matter how small, and who, with respect to his employees, violates any of the provisions of this bill, could be held on the ground that his action affects interstate commerce. The illustration is not at all far-fetched, for if his attitude toward his employees resulted in a strike of those employees, then his consumption of gasoline would be reduced, thus affecting interstate commerce, for gasoline is clearly an article shipped in interstate commerce.

Section 2 (a) (6): The word "employer" is defined as any person acting directly or indirectly in the interest of an employer, and, insofar as any labor organization is an employer, such organization must come within the intent and purpose of the bill.

Section 2 (a) (8): A labor organization is defined as an employees' organization of any kind which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, or any of the other questions which arise between employees and employers. In that definition the bill is definitely at cross purposes with the National Labor Relations Act, for here, whether by intent or whether by careless draftsmanship, the way is left open for the reestablishment and the legal recognition of the company union.

Section 3 (a): A Labor Standards Board of five members is to be appointed by the President. The appointments are to be made with consideration to the industrial and geographic regions of the country. It is very easy for me to understand how appointments could be made with proper consideration either to the industrial or the geographic regions of the United States, but I fail to see how both could be given consideration at the same time. Certainly the two are in sharp conflict. To give industrial areas proper recognition in the matter of appointments must mean that geographical areas must be left unrecognized and, on the other hand, to make appointments with the idea of giving recognition to geographical regions must correspondingly leave important industrial regions without representation.

Beyond that the text discloses a much more serious evil, for there is nothing to indicate the peculiar qualifications which shall be required of those appointed. As a matter of fact, no qualifications whatever are set forth. There is in the bill no requirement that representatives, either of labor or of industry, shall be given places on the board. Under the bill as drawn, any five men, whether white, black, or yellow, whether honest or dishonest, whether qualified or not qualified, whether men of national importance or men utterly nondescript can be appointed to the Labor Standards Board and exercise complete jurisdiction over 40,000,000 wage earners and the employers of 40,000,000 wage earners.

Part II: The various sections of part II relate to the establishment of fair labor standards with respect to wages and hours and exemptions from such standards.

Section 4: This section of the bill relates to the extension by the Labor Standards Board of the provisions of the bill to employments in which oppressive wages are paid, in which oppressive hours of labor are worked and gives the board authority to raise or lower the standards which the board itself has set, with respect to employees in so-called oppressive employments.

Each one of the four paragraphs of the section includes a phrase which is singularly disquieting—each one states that the provisions of the bill may be extended as rapidly as the board finds that it may be done "without unreasonably curtailing opportunities for employment." The inference is clear and indisputable. It was definitely in the minds of the draftsmen of the bill that its provisions are so drastic and its effective operation so burdensome that industrial recessions are bound to occur. In other words, a bill designed, according to the President, to extend our social frontiers is to have the immediate effect of narrowing and restricting those frontiers. The experiment is far too dangerous a one with which to trifle.

Equally disquieting is the provision included in the two last paragraphs of the section which is that minimum-wage standards and maximum-workweek standards having been established by the board, the board may raise or lower such standards when it finds a change necessary or appropriate to prevent the depression of wage levels or to prevent hours of work from having an adverse effect upon the health or well-being of employees. The proviso discussed in the preceding paragraph is included—that such changes can be made without unreasonably curtailing opportunities for employment or the earning power of employees. Here, though, is to be read the conclusion of the draftsmen of the bill that a standard set by the board is, after all, no standard but merely something which can be raised or lowered according to the will of the board. Instead of stabilization, an added factor of uncertainty appears which must have its effect upon the industrial life of the Nation, and hence upon the lives of all of those who presumably are gainfully employed.

Section 5 (a): Whenever the board shall have reason to believe that wages lower than a minimum fair wage are paid to employees who are engaged in interstate commerce, it shall conduct an investigation; and if it determines that wages lower than a fair minimum are being paid or that the fixation of a minimum fair wage will not unreasonably curtail opportunities for employment, it shall proceed to establish a minimum fair wage for those employees made the subject of the investigation. In establishing such wage, the board is to take into account the cost of living and other circumstance affecting the value of the service rendered and is to be guided by the same considerations as would guide a court of law. The board is also to consider the wages paid for work of like or comparable character when fixed by collective agreements, and also similar wages as paid by those employers who voluntarily maintain fair-wage standards.

The objections to such a proceeding are manifold. Note that before the board can proceed with an investigation it must have reason to believe that substandard scales of wages are in effect. If the board is to have reason to believe that is the case, it must, of course, have before it data of such a character as to afford the basis of that reason, and that can be done only by the collection and compilation of evidence and its presentation before the board, or before an officer or officers designated by the board for that purpose. Such a procedure calls for regulation. Having in mind the mass of regulations which have made so relatively simple a statute as the National Labor Relations Act unwieldy, and in certain practical sense unworkable, it is immediately apparent that regulations compiled by the board covering the operation of this single phase of a most complex bill must result in a consumption of time and effort so vast as almost certainly to defeat its presumed beneficial design.

Once the board has reason to believe that substandard wages are in effect, it must then conduct an investigation which shall determine the condition to be true. The board then shall by mandate establish a minimum fair wage, taking into account as before noted, the cost of living and relative circumstances affecting the value of the work performed. There again, difficulties pyramid enormously, for the cost of living is an extremely variable and highly fluctuating figure and one which—to my satisfaction at least—has never yet been determined. Obviously, the most important criterion of the wage which shall be paid is the worth of the work which it represents, and that again is something tremendously difficult to determine. I point again to the excessive requirement of time, effort, and even of money necessary to bring about a determination of a fair minimum wage, and once that has been concluded, it is to be remembered that it can be made effective only if the board shall decide that it will not unreasonably curtail opportunities for employment.

Section 5 (b): Here is covered a question of determination of a maximum reasonable workweek. That is to be concluded under conditions substantially the same as those for the fixation of a fair minimum wage and the same difficulties are implied. For that reason, they are not here given new discussion. It may not be altogether inexpedient, however, to mention the probability that, in the great number of cases, both the factors of wages and hours will be included. The combination of the two can operate only to increase the complexities. If all the difficulties arise—and I firmly believe they will arise—in the fixation of wages and hours of work as I have outlined them above, then, when the two are considered together and taken up in their relationships of one to the other, more and more factors which cannot readily be reconciled will come to the fore and the expenditure of time and effort correspondingly increased.

Section 6 (a): This section treats with exemptions from labor standards with respect to wages and hours, and, as is so likely to be the case, one of the most vicious evils stands exempted. Among the strange inconsistencies, of which so many appear in this bill, is one in this paragraph which leaves the number of employees who shall exempt an employer from its provisions as undetermined—that is, the number must be filled in by the Congress during its consideration. The value of the paragraph, then, taken solely by itself, depends upon the point at which the number of employees may be fixed. If it is extremely low—say 5 to 10—the sweatshop employer in his most vicious aspect will be exempted. It is not necessary to give illustrations of the great number of employers, particularly in metropolitan areas, who employ workmen and workwomen in numbers of 10 or a dozen or less, and who conduct their enterprises, judged by any standard, under substandard conditions. If the minimum number of employees is set fairly high—20 or 25—a strong tendency may develop to encourage small decentralized industrial units established for the sole purpose of seeking exemption from the statute.

Section 6 (c): The board may provide, by regulation, that the employment of employees in any occupation under special conditions shall not be considered in violation of the terms of the bill if it finds that the special character of the employment makes such conditions justifiable. Such regulations may be applicable to the employment of learners and apprentices at wages lower than those determined for the industry, the employment of persons whose earning capacity is impaired by any one of several causes, deductions for board, lodging, and the like, if it is necessary for the employer to furnish them, overtime work in the case of peak or seasonal activity, and any other cases which seem to the board to justify themselves.

All of the five sets of conditions or circumstances are open to objection, the most serious being that which refers to the employment of learners and apprentices. The learner is one thing and the apprentice another, and it has been found from long and unpleasant experience that by certain classes of employers the policy has been pursued of carrying the learners at low rates of wages for so long a period as to qualify them both by time and experience as journeymen. Too strong an opposition against the inclusion of the classification of learner cannot be registered. The provision respecting those whose earning capacity is impaired by age or other limiting conditions is likely to be found in conflict with the compensation laws of the various States, and with respect to the matter of deductions for board and lodging there stands the determination of a question of fact. Under the slow procedure which it seems must almost inevitably be established by the board, overtime employment in periods of peak or seasonal activity must long have passed before the board itself could reach a conclusion respecting its justification and to cover the last point the general classification of other cases may mean nothing more than a kind of pigeonhole for all manner of exemptions which do not lend themselves to ready solution.

Part III: This part deals with the disbarment of unfair goods from interstate commerce.

Section 7: In this section are stated certain conditions under which it shall be unlawful to transport goods in interstate commerce. The section is not one which deals directly with the wages and hours of labor and, for that reason, is not discussed in detail. Its terms, however, are such as to cause hesitancy on the part of employers, to make them withhold their funds from productive enterprises, and, thus, to have an indirect effect upon the employment of labor.

Section 8 (a): This section, which seeks to protect interstate commerce from the effect of substandard labor conditions, makes frank reference to all commerce.

In other words, it extends directly and definitely to intrastate commerce. Here is no question of border-line case or of a so-called "no man's land"—the bill gives to the board authority to direct an employer who maintains his operations under substandard labor conditions, but who is not engaged in interstate commerce, to cease his substandard activities.

Section 8 (b): In this paragraph the position outlined in that preceding is so broadened and strengthened as to give the board complete authority over labor conditions in all industries, whether its products are sold in interstate or intrastate commerce.

Section 8 (c): The paragraph is brief. It is confined merely to the statement that it shall be unlawful for any person to employ any employee in violation of any provision of any order made under the preceding paragraphs in the section. Since a person is defined as an individual, partnership, association, corporation, business trust, receiver, trustee, trustee in bankruptcy or liquidating or reorganizing agent, it is immediately apparent that the control of the board over all forms of industry, and hence over employees in all industry is to be complete and final.

Part IV: This part refers to the devices by means of which substandard labor conditions may be eliminated.

Section 9 (b): This paragraph read in connection with the earlier parts of the bill practically eliminates intrastate commerce. State laws respecting intrastate commerce, even though beneficent, are nullified and the doctrine of State rights, which is as old as the Nation itself, is set aside. It reduces to the fact that an employer engaged entirely in intrastate commerce, whose employees were employed under substandard conditions, as defined by the board, even if those employees are satisfied with the conditions under which they work, may be brought within the terms of the bill.

Section 11 (c): Here again appears one of those frequent inconsistencies, for the bill having ruthlessly set aside State rights and the rights of employers engaged only in intrastate commerce, suddenly recognizes State statutes by a reference to the violation of the laws of any State. It should be added that the paragraph is not intended apparently to define the rights of the States, but rather to strengthen the power of the board.

Part V: In this part are established the general administrative provisions of the bill.

Section 12 (5): This paragraph grants to the board by a labor-standards order full authority to classify employers, employees, and employments according to localities, population, number of employees, and other circumstances. Employees may have no power to sell their services according to the classification and, hence, the valuation which they place upon them—that may be left entirely within the authority of the board. In the hands of unqualified members of the board (and, as before pointed out, the question of qualification is not recognized in the text of the bill) or of employees of the board, such authority is extremely dangerous to employers, employees, and to the entire commercial structure of the United States. For the bill to say that it shall be the policy of the board "to avoid unnecessary or excessive classifications and to exercise its powers of classification only to the extent necessary" does not in the slightest degree lessen the danger, for it remains with the board to determine what may be necessary or unnecessary.

It is interesting to note in this paragraph that the board may make such classifications, which it sets forth in detail, as it may consider necessary or appropriate to accomplish the purposes of any order which it may issue. That is to say, that conditions are to be changed to suit the order; there seems to be no thought that the order shall be drafted to suit conditions.

Section 12 (6): Here it is stated that an order relating to wages "may contain such terms and conditions as the board may consider necessary or appropriate to prevent the established minimum wage becoming the maximum wage." It is difficult to believe that the draftsmen of the bill could be either so artless in their thinking or so completely ignorant of the principles of the wages of labor as to feel that an order establishing a definite minimum wage rate could be so drawn as at the same time to protect rates higher than the established minimum. Wages of labor are certain to approximate a minimum fixed by statute, and no number or variety of terms and conditions which may be inserted in an order can prevent or even check such a natural tendency.

Again, it is stated that the board shall establish "such minimum wage standards as will affect only those employees in need of legislative protection without interfering with the voluntary establishment of appropriate differentials." Wages are not individual things. Wages paid one employee or a group of employees do not stand alone and apart from wages paid other employees and groups of employees. The whole structure of wages is closely woven into one great whole, and the fact that wages for one group are fixed under statute cannot help but have, whether the board so wishes it or not, a definite effect upon all other wages.

Section 12 (8): Under this paragraph the board is given authority at any time to modify, extend, or rescind an order in the light of conditions then prevailing. Presumably that is a salutary provision, but again appears the element of uncertainty which must be disastrous both to employee and employer. If the order of today can be changed tomorrow, on what basis can the employer proceed with his enterprise; and if the employer cannot proceed, then how can he either employ labor or pay the wages of labor?

Section 13: In this section is described the general procedure with respect to hearings. The procedures have been discussed in some detail under section 5 (a) and are not given further discussion here.

Section 14: In this section appears a further encumbrance to the efficient operation of the board, for here is given authority to the board to appoint advisory committees for purposes of investigating and reporting upon the fair value of the services rendered by employees. The appointment of such committees follows the usual procedure—appointments shall be made from lists of nominees submitted by employers and employees and shall consist of an equal number of persons representing employers and employees, and certain disinterested persons representing the public. Such advisory committees shall submit their reports within 60 days. If reports are not submitted within that time, the board may appoint new committees and the board may reject, either in whole or in part, the recommendations of such committees.

Now, for a moment, consider the time element. For nominations, appointments, and acceptances a period of at least 30 days must be required. After appointment the committee has 60 days in which to report. Presumably, the board would require 30 days more in which to analyze the report and to issue a labor order. Thus, 120 days will have elapsed, providing, of course, the board does not appoint a new committee or does not reinvestigate the entire situation, and that number of days must be considered as an addition to all of those required as necessary to convincing the board that reason exists for investigation. Issues involving labor should be settled immediately and as they arise; better still, they should be adjusted before they arise and not at the end of a minimum period of 120 days after they take form.

It is interesting to note, however, that in this section appears the first recognition in the bill of employees and employers as parties, in any sense or degree, to the administration of the bill. It can be regarded as nothing more than recognition, for they are given no authority. Again, in issues as broad and as far reaching as those of wages and hours of labor, as covered by this bill, the question may well be asked as to where the disinterested members of advisory committees are to come from, for those issues are so grave as to touch directly upon the lives of every citizen in this country.

Section 17 (b): By this paragraph is reintroduced the possible use of the Blue Eagle, or some other kind of bird, beast, or fish, to designate goods produced by those employers who conform strictly to the will of the board. In that is a distinct threat. The American Federation of Labor found manifold objections to the use of the Blue Eagle under the National Industrial Recovery Act. A device of that sort, however, seems to have a particular appeal for various Government departments, for several times it has been suggested that a device in the form of a label showing conformity with established Government standards be utilized.

Section 19: Again in this section are discussed regulations to be drawn and orders to be issued by the board. Again with respect to this section comes consideration of the element of time which has already been discussed in detail.

Section 23 (a): In this paragraph it is stated that nothing in the act shall be construed to interfere with the right of employees to self-organization or to bargain collectively. All that is true, but let the question be asked frankly, what is the use? Of what use to organized labor or to labor of any kind is the retention of the power to bargain collectively with respect to wages, hours, and conditions of labor, if when enacted into law the bill will give to a board plenary powers over all industry and over the wages and hours of labor in industry. Under the full operation of this bill such rights and authorities are abrogated and become of no use.

Section 23 (d): Here it is provided that nothing in any regulation or order by the board shall be construed to invalidate any collective bargaining agreement made by an employer. Again that may be accepted as true, but why should an employer enter into an agreement with his employees under the terms of this bill? But little would be gained in the way of security either to employee or to employer. The bill is so drastic in its terms as to give the board complete authority over all forms of industry, whether expressed in interstate or intrastate commerce.

These notes, though lengthy, have been written in outline and serve to show the length and complexity of the bill. Not all sections and paragraphs have been discussed. Some which have been given no attention are of such a nature as to make an argument either for or against labor rather difficult. They include provisions which refer strictly and definitely to employers, although, of course, any part of the bill which affects employers must, at the same time, also affect employees.

The bill is designed "to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards." I see but little therein which offers promise of establishing fair labor standards and that promise is largely nullified by the tremendous burden placed both upon employees and employers in establishing such standards. In order to determine the fair labor standard it is necessary, it seems to me, first to decide upon the constituents of a fair labor standard, and on that point as I read and understand it, the bill is entirely silent.

I see but a single factor in the bill which affords any degree of satisfaction to organized labor. Clearly, in order to present data which shall give the board reason to believe that employees of some employers are working under substandard conditions, some form of organization will be necessary. That bit of satisfaction, however, is largely offset by the fact that organization necessary to present factual material, need not be permanent and need be only of a transitory type which could be readily bent to its own uses by some of the less responsible organizations of labor which just now are in possession of considerable strength.

With kind regards, I am,

Fraternally yours,

_____,

General President.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, because I discussed a part of the subject matter of this letter with Chairman BLACK yesterday, I am going to present the copy of Mr. Possehl's second and later letter addressed to President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, under date of July 23, which I have already referred to. I ask unanimous consent that the second letter may be inserted in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF OPERATING ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., July 23, 1937.

Subject: Fair Labor Standards Act of 1937 (as reported with an amendment.)

Mr. WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: On date of June 3, 1937, I addressed to you an analysis of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1937, as originally introduced in the Senate and the House of Representatives by Senator Black and Representative Connery, respectively. I am taking the liberty of sending you now an analysis of the amended bill as it is at present before the Senate:

On May 24, 1937, the President sent to Congress a special message in which were discussed methods for the establishment of fair labor standards. On the same day two bills—S. 2475 in the Senate and H. R. 7200 in the House, and together known as the Black-Connery bill—designed to fix such standards by law, were introduced and referred to appropriate committees. Hearings were held before a joint committee and on date of July 8, 1937, Senator Black reported S. 2475 to the Senate with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and a report—no. 884.

The bill, and hereafter that term refers to the bill as amended and reported, exhibits marked changes in a comparison with that originally introduced. It is less devious. More important, it does not carry, providing it is enacted into law, so sweeping an assumption of authority. On the other hand, it does include elements which are faulty and which should be discussed.

From the legislative declaration part I, section 1 (a) have been eliminated two clauses: (4) which states that the employment of workers under substandard conditions "causes industrial dislocations directly burdening and obstructing interstate commerce" and (6) "causes undue price fluctuations impairing the stability of prices of goods in interstate commerce." It seems a reasonable conclusion that the clause last quoted was excluded with the thought that in it were to be read potentialities if not necessities of price fixing. An assignable reason for the omission of the first of the two quoted clauses does not as easily come to mind. Its principle appears to be clear and if it was the truth in the original, it probably is also the truth in the amended bill.

Whatever may have been the motives or the reason on the broad ground that the phrasing of legislation should be made as simple as possible, the result of the two exclusions is doubtless salutary. The opening sentence of the section, however, remains unchanged, and it still stands as the declaration of the evils of employment under substandard labor conditions in the production of goods for interstate commerce or "otherwise directly affecting interstate commerce."

But little commerce exists which does not directly affect interstate commerce. In a nation woven into as solid a unit as are the several States of the United States, through all the varied systems of communication, that part of commerce which is so purely intrastate as to have no direct effect on interstate commerce is relatively unimportant. In those few words last quoted the pending bill holds a device which opens the way for Federal regulation of all commerce.

In the section given over to definitions one commendable change is to be noted. The offending definition of a labor organization which made possible the legal recognition of the company union has been omitted. Others have been excluded, including that perfect rhetorical gem which stated that "the singular includes the plural and the plural includes the singular."

Other definitions are broadened. That, for instance, of employee includes workers in agriculture as in the original bill, and then proceeds to define agriculture as including cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, market gardening, poultry, and so on through a substantial list of activities. In respect of that definition a single thought is expressed that in some branches of agriculture, particularly the last three of those named above, are employed workers of exactly the same trade classifications as those to be found in other forms of industry who are presumed to benefit under the terms of this bill.

The definition of child labor is also greatly broadened. That, however, is not discussed here, nor are any of the effects of the bill upon the employment of child labor given discussion. It is felt that those parts of the bill can be treated much more effectively by those whose field of endeavor brings them more clearly into contact with that form of employment.

In no important particular does that section devoted to the Labor Standards Board vary from the corresponding section in the bill as originally introduced. Indeed, with the single exception that the amended measure includes a statement giving to the board authority to adopt its own rules of procedure, the two are identical. That fact does not indicate, though, that the section is not open to critical comment.

The truth is quite the opposite. In the matter of the appointment of the board there is no lessening of the evil, no shrinkage in its impracticabilities. The difficulty of reconciling industrial areas with geographical reasons is present in the same language as before; the same complete lack exists of expressed qualifications which shall be possessed by those who may be appointed to membership on the board.

The failure to define requirements satisfactorily for service makes that section of the bill objectionable to organized labor. It is not necessary, it will be observed, that members should be acquainted with even the most simple rudiments of industrial practice. No requirement is introduced that members shall possess any specialized skills. There is no suggestion that there should be demonstrated any degree of interest in the problems of labor, whether organized or unorganized.

Parenthetically, it should perhaps be said, that at the convention of the American Federation of Labor held in 1936 at Tampa, Fla., the question of legislation covering various aspects of labor relations held the attention of the committee on resolutions. That committee reported a resolution, unanimously adopted by the convention, which assumed the position that the American Federation of Labor would not support legislation which did not provide for direct representation of labor on any administrative body to be established by the measures under discussion. The pending bill carries with it no such provision.

The fourth section is opened with a series of propositions followed by a declaratory paragraph which concludes subsection (a) of that section of the bill. Of those premises there are six with some of which complete agreement comes swiftly and quite without effort. Others require thought before full accord can be reached and in one instance it is difficult to give much more than a somewhat qualified assent.

There is but little hesitation in saying that a weekly wage of $5 or less is unconscionably low. There is none at all in a further statement that if the conditions of the business are so unstable, if its debit and credit relationships are so precarious or its margin of profit so narrow as to compel the payment of a $5 wage, then the time is at hand for that business to conclude its affairs and to turn its capital into other channels of investment. To those industrial organizations which, operating under normal conditions, find it essential to engage in a workweek of 84 hours, the same thoughts, though perhaps somewhat modified, are applicable.

No doubt can be entertained that such low schedules of wages and such high schedules of hours create unfair competition among employers of labor. The necessity that workers in the United States be protected by the elimination of substandard wages and hours will not be denied. General agreement will be found in the expression of an opinion that the changes necessary to achieve the results must be developed carefully and cautiously without disruption or dislocation of business and industry.

On that last a word may be offered. It must not be construed as a defense of low wages and high hours when it is said that the resulting change, if the bill becomes law, is bound to be drastic. No matter how careful and cautious may be the procedure, disturbance, and dislocation of industry are certain to occur. It is impossible through mandate having the force of statute to impose new schedules of wages and hours upon an industry without disturbing that industry. The disturbance may or may not be far-reaching; it may or may not be particularly grave. It may extend over a long period or be only temporary, but disturbance will follow.

Against the premise which says that those workers whose wages are the lowest and whose hours are the longest and who are unable to improve their condition through the medium of collective bargaining, a certain dissent must be laid. There are organizations ready and qualified to give them aid. There have been such organizations in the past. On that single point nothing further need be said.

The series of propositions having been stated, it is declared to be the policy to maintain minimum wage and maximum hours standards at levels which shall be conducive to the general well-being of workers and at the same time operate to the profitable operation of business. It is all notably praiseworthy.

The text plunges then into the details of the measure. First to be noted is that it is mandatory upon the board to declare minimum wages, whereas in the original bill that was a qualified authority—that is, only when the board had reason to believe that wages lower than fair minima were paid was it obliged to make investigation and determination and to issue corrective orders. Until the board had been persuaded of a substandard condition nothing could happen.

Providing, then, that opportunities for employment shall not be curtailed, the board shall from time to time declare minimum wages which shall be adequate for the occupation or occupations to which they are applicable. From the context the word "occupation" obviously refers to the means of livelihood pursued by the worker. There is no reference to industry.

The omission is important. An occupation in one industry may command a different scale or wages, may differ widely in its requirement of skill from the same occupation when pursued in another industry. The toolmaker in the precision-instrument industry is in every way, excepting only in the knowledge of the fundamentals of his craft a different mechanic from the toolmaker in an industry where the principal requisite of the tool is that it be sufficiently rugged to withstand long service under hard and not particularly intelligent usage.

It is not necessary to confine illustration to skilled trades. Common labor, for example, employed in the foundry industry is not the same as common labor employed in, say, the knitted-fabrics industry. The differences are both quantitative and qualitative.

Still speaking of common labor, the same differences persist in the separate units of the same industry. In the machinery and machine-tool industry both quantity and quality vary as between the foundry, the several contributive divisions, and the machine shop proper. One of the conspicuous characteristics of common labor is that, in the sense ordinarily accepted, it is not common.

So if minimum wages for an occupation are to be declared without regard to the varying requirements demanded of that occupation by different industries, the problem, insofar as the board is concerned, is comparatively simple—that is taken strictly in a comparative and not an absolute sense. Great inequities and grave injustices to large groups of workers will result, but those do not affect the problem as it is before the board. If minimum wages are fixed with full consideration of all the differing qualifications for workers in the craft imposed by each one of the employing industries, the board has before it a problem of great and widely ramifying perplexities. If attention is extended not only to occupational characteristics as modified by the needs of the different industries, but beyond those to the distinctions of those characteristics within each industry taken by itself, perplexities multiply beyond ready imagination.

Notwithstanding the enormous maze of detail, how indeed can minimum wages otherwise be declared than with full regard to the refinements of differences in occupational employment? If a workman is so unfortunate, so hapless in his birth, family, training, education, ambition, and mentality as to be incorporated into the great mass of common labor, is he to be deprived by statute of the scant advantage in earning power which is his by reason of the fact that he is the possessor of the narrowest of margins of intelligence, physical strength and willingness over his fellow workers? Whether or not it is easily believed, the fact is that even in the great body of common labor are gradations of ability. They would not be visible to the collective regulative mind of a board but they are clearly apparent to direct employers and to the other workers in the group. It is no denial of the principle of minimum wages to say that those degrees of difference should be recognized and their rewards protected.

Perhaps something of that sort is rather vaguely contemplated by the bill, for it reads that minimum wages shall be declared for the occupation to which they are applicable "from time to time." The meaning is not clear. Does it mean that a minimum wage will be fixed for an occupation in one industry at one time and for the same occupation in a different industry at another? Or does it mean that wages for the same occupation in the same industry will be subject to frequent change, or again does it mean that adjustments will be made so carefully and so often as to take account of all or many of the different individual gradations of ability? The last question is probably not the correct one and yet if it is not, how small a degree of equity, in last analysis, resides in the bill.

After all, the industry in which the occupation finds expression is a most important factor. To the industry, as before mentioned, there is no reference. Apparently it is not considered necessary that the members of the board should be acquainted with the peculiarities of requirement of the different industries. To the board, no matter where or how employed, a laborer is a laborer and that is all there is to it.

It may be the intent to compensate for the failure, to mention industry or the board's conceivable lack of knowledge of industry through the appointment of advisory committees as provided by section 11. There once more is a departure from the original bill, for the measure now pending makes mandatory the use of advisory committees. In the bill, as first presented, the use of such committees was discretionary with the board.

Even in that section of the bill no mention is made of industry. The personnel of advisory committees—equal numbers of persons representing the employees and the employers in the occupation under investigation—justifies a hope that the minimum wage determined will be declared for the occupation in a specific industry, but that is pure assumption. The bill does not so state. The reference is solely to the occupation. By the composition of the advisory committee the difficulties above discussed may be reduced, but not necessarily so. They will not be eliminated.

The minimum wages to be declared by the board shall be as nearly adequate "as is economically feasible, without curtailing opportunities for employment", to maintain a standard of living necessary for health, efficiency, and general well-being. Excellent. But in the minds of the authors of the amended bill as in those who drafted the original measure, although not so clearly apparent, is the same haunting fear that effectuation as law will reduce opportunities for employment.

The feeling is not without justification. How could the fact be otherwise? Again, without defending the low wage industry or a section—either producing or geographical—of an industry which is definitely substandard in the matter of wages, how is a new wage structure to be imposed without affecting employment. It cannot be done.

If such an industry employing, for example, a labor force made up in large proportion of unskilled or common labor has reason to believe its average hourly rate of wages is subject to sharp increases ranging upward to perhaps 100 percent, what is likely to be its attitude toward immediate business relationships. Obviously, it could well be one of caution. It will be slow to accept orders or contracts involving any considerable volume because of an apprehension that increasing wage costs under law will bring positive loss instead of anticipated gain. It will be reluctant to make substantial commitments for raw materials lest increased cost succeeded by an increased selling price will cause goods to remain unsold or to become stagnant and unmoved until the market shall have had time to adjust itself and become accustomed to the change. So delicate is the mechanism of the market that once out of balance it does not always move back rapidly to a state approximating equilibrium.

Those two conditions out of many which could be recited are not offered in opposition to the adoption of schedules of minimum wages. They are presented merely as indices of a certain decrease in the employment of labor. Hesitancy in the solicitation of new business and slowness in making commitments for necessary materials can result only in the curtailment of opportunities for employment.

That is not all. What of the workers in the occupational wage brackets next above those for which minimum-wage schedules are declared? Suppose the minimum wage for an occupational group were to be advanced by order of the board to 40 cents per hour. What happens to those who received that rate before the increase was ordered?

Will the wages of those be correspondingly increased? Probably not. Indeed, from the viewpoint of the employer, why should they be increased? If the services they rendered before the enactment of the statute were worth only 40 cents per hour, why should they be worth more after the passage of a law which admittedly does not apply to them? They are not, of course, worth more.

Occurs, then, a congestion of labor around the 40-cent level, or at the level to which the board has advanced minimum wages for the occupational group. The employer notes a decided bulge at the declared level, and as he believes should be the case with an overexpansion in any particular group of workers at any specified wage rate, he proposes to himself that it be reduced. Let those who have benefited under the law earn their increased wages. If 40-cent men must be employed, let them earn 40 cents per hour.

The possibilities of curtailment of employment through numerical reduction of occupational groups extend much more widely and in far greater detail than can possibly be recited here. Those constitute a study in themselves. Merely as an index of the evils inherent in the fixation of wages by statute a single and altogether obvious illustration will suffice.

Three workmen, 1 at 35 cents and 2 at 30 cents, have been employed on a particular job—a total wage cost of 95 cents per hour. Why not speed up a bit—two 40-cent men required under statute—and drop one of the others? The result is both interesting, and as the employer sees it, extremely practical—one man less, a reduced wage cost of 15 cents per hour, and completed obedience to the law. The scheme is sound and it will be followed.

As earlier suggested, the bill carries no price-fixing provision. It is not argued that such requisites should be included, but in their absence increased wage costs are extremely likely to be translated into increased costs to the consumer. Evidently the authors had that rather strong possibility in mind when the bill was drafted, for in section 8 is found a provision which authorizes the United States Tariff Commission to investigate increased costs results from its operation should it become law, and to propose adjustments in rates of duty which would not hold domestic goods in a position of disadvantage in relation to foreign goods.

In identical language, excepting only that the words "maximum workweek" are substituted for the words "minimum wages", the board is placed under mandate to declare a maximum workweek for any occupation or occupations which shall be as nearly adequate as possible to maintain the health and well-being of the workers. The discussion directed toward the minimum-wage provisions of the bill does not require any very substantial modification to render it applicable to the subsection devoted to maximum hours. No new points of consideration are raised.

One fact coming from the combination of maximum hours with minimum wages does require brief mention. A maximum of 40 hours of work per week applied to a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour, above and below which, respectively, the board cannot function, brings a wage of $16 per week. On the basis of 50 weeks of work—under present conditions, a hope rather than a conviction—the return to the individual would be $800 for the year's work. It is not much money.

That is not written scornfully. Any advance that can be secured to labor is worth a great deal. On the other hand, it must be noted that according to the Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1936, the average wage paid common labor in the United States in 1935 in several different industries, all of which come within the terms of the bill, was slightly in excess of 45 cents per hour. The inadequacy of that figure and the data which support it are admitted, but it does point to the strong probability that the benefits of the legislation, if completed, will not extend as widely as its supporters have hoped.

Succeeding that section given over to the establishment of minimum wages and maximum hours is section 5, by which agreements consummated by collective bargaining are presumed to be afforded protection. Apparently a satisfactory measure of protection is granted, but by some who have analyzed the bill it has been pointed out that the inclusion of the phrase "allowed by law", in the opening sentence of the section, extends its protective features to the company union. If that is true, then nothing has been gained by omitting from the amended text section 2 (a)–(8) of the original bill, which opened the way to legal recognition of that form of organization.

Even in the face of the probable intent of the language, it is difficult to resist a feeling that the bill operates to weaken the structure of collective bargaining. There seems to be evident no reason why employers should enter into agreements with those labor groups which come within the scope of the bill. They will observe the law, if passed, and stop short with observance, excepting only as some unforeseen or uncontrollable factor forces them into a more advanced position. Certainly there is no reason why employers should make collective agreements, for example, 42 cents, if under statute they can secure equally good labor at a legalized rate of 40 cents per hour. More and more labor will be brought within the wage schedules fixed by the board; increases in wages will be met, in large part, by reductions; and the strong tendency will be to delay collective-bargaining agreements and to permit existing agreements to lapse without renewal, until by each employer the limit of regrouping labor within declared schedules has been reached.

In section 9, where are recited the general administrative provisions of the bill, it is required that a labor-standard order "shall define the occupation or occupations, the territorial limits within which such order shall operate, and the class, craft, or industrial unit or units to which such order relates." In that language the objection that no reference is made to industry appears to be answered. That, in truth, is precisely not the case.

What is meant by the term "industrial unit"? Does it mean one industry—the steel industry, for example—as differentiated from another, say, the leather-goods industry? Or does it mean the manufacture of shoes taken apart from the basic leather industry? Or, further, could it mean without regard to other materials, the manufacture of fabric shoes? Or, once more, could it mean only the foundry division of the machinery industry? And if that is the event, what community of basis will be discovered between the comercial foundry and the foundry of a single unit included in any broader industry?

In that is perplexity, in what follows is real danger, for not only must the board define the class or craft covered by its order, but it has permissive authority to classify employers, employees, and employments. A host of questions immediately arises. They are so many and so varied that they cannot even be suggested here.

Let it be stated briefly that the classification of employers and employees or employments constitutes a task of enormous if not insurmountable difficulties. So far as this analysis is concerned, employers may be left to speak for themselves and this paragraph will be limited to employees. By whom are they to be classified? Classifications made heretofore by bodies organized for that purpose have wandered so far from fact and practicability as to reduce quickly to absurdity. Most industrial plants, whether they employ many or only a few, have among their workers some whose duties are such as to defy classification by employer, by the employee himself, or by other employees. Even accurate classification, if it were possible, would not satisfy the basic question: The real criterion of the wage lies in the value of the work and not in the classification to which he may be assigned.

In that section of the bill, no matter how conscientiously administered, lie certain injustices and an incalculable harm which cannot be avoided. Classification of employees and employments inevitably will rob great numbers of individual workmen of the fruits of their aptitudes. It will take away the rewards of lesser skills and reduce all workmen in the lower wage occupational groups to the level of the mass.

In many respects the bill holds no improvements over the measure as originally introduced. The exempting paragraphs include all the evils, particularly those respecting the employment of learners, which were apparent in the bill as first drawn. The full use and meaning of the union label is endangered now, as it was before. Probably it is genuinely the intent to limit the operation of the bill strictly to interstate commerce, but ambiguities of language suggest possible confusion in that direction. If anything, the time element is given even less consideration than before. In the bill as it now reads almost any period can be devoted to investigation before declaration need be made by the board. That stands as the most serious kind of fault, for it is still a truth—without meaning to be at all cryptic—that the best time to adjust a labor issue is before it arises.

In the bill as it is today before the Senate appears but little of positive good to labor. It holds even less of positive good for industry. It may be argued that it represents a start toward better conditions for labor, and that very likely is true, but any gain which may be accomplished must accrue at such tremendous cost to all, excepting only the comparative few who will benefit directly—to the great numbers of the workers, to the employers, to industry, and to the Nation—that it seems better to postpone those scant advantages until, through further time and considerable study, a bill may be introduced which will be demonstrably utilitarian in its scope.

It is but a cold and cheerless argument to say that a poor bill is better than no bill at all. A poor bill is altogether unnecessary. A bill hurriedly prepared is equally unnecessary. The possibilities of positive harm are too grave and far reaching; the potentialities of danger too apparent to justify hurry. In this case time should not be of the essence.

With kindest regards, I am,

Fraternally yours,

JOHN POSSEHL, General President.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am extremely anxious that the Senate shall adopt the amendment which I have submitted, which is, on page 51, line 3, after the word "agriculture", to insert a semicolon and the following:

Or any person whose compensation is paid upon a commission basis exclusively.

I am familiar with the conditions of those who work upon a commission basis. They prefer to work upon that basis rather than to accept a minimum wage or any other kind of wage. They want to be paid exclusively for that which they do.

Last night to my home came a young man to transact some business in the nature of some work in the house. His bill was rather high, and I ask upon what basis he was paid. He said he was paid upon a commission basis, and informed me that he would not work on a salary basis but wanted to be paid entirely upon a commission basis.

I believe there are between 500,000 and 1,000,000 people in the United States who work upon a commission basis. Many of them are the kind of workers who do a few days' work now and then. I cannot see how under any circumstances we can apply the restrictions of the bill to such people instead of submitting the matter to the board. Accordingly, I hope the Senate will adopt my amendment to exempt from the bill those who work upon a commission basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think we all recognize that there is a general desire to dispose of the bill at the earliest possible time. In order to avoid having a late session this evening I am going to propose a unanimous-consent request, prefacing it with the statement that later I shall move a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes tomorrow, during the further consideration of the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment or motion relating thereto, and that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. the Senate shall proceed to vote without further debate on the bill and all amendments thereto.

Pending that request, I ask unanimous consent that the roll call provided for under the rule be waived.

Mr. McNARY. With the qualification that we shall recess this evening at not later than 5:15?

Mr. BARKLEY. We desire to have an executive session.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not understand the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky with reference to the roll call.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the rule, whenever unanimous consent is requested to fix an hour to vote on the final passage of a measure, a quorum must be called. It is my desire to waive that requirement of the rule.

Mr. McCARRAN. It does not mean we cannot have a quorum called tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no. It is simply my desire to avoid calling a quorum for the purpose of entering into the agreement at this time. It is not necessary to have a quorum called now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m., during the further consideration of the pending bill, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment or motion relating thereto, and that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. the Senate shall proceed to vote without further debate on the bill and all amendments thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in order to clarify the agreement—and I must confess I do not quite understand it—it would seem to mean that any Senator may speak 15 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on any amendment thereto.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, does the proposal mean that in the event there are amendments to be offered which Senators desire to discuss, the Senator will suspend the 3 o'clock limitation?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. All debate will end at 3 o'clock, and the Senate will vote at that time on the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the proposed agreement also include any motions that may be made?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. It includes all amendments and motions that are to be voted on?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. If all amendments to be offered had not been disposed of, would we have opportunity without further debate to vote upon all pending amendments?

Mr. BARKLEY. There would be no limitation as to voting on any amendments, but discussion would end at 3 o'clock.

Mr. GEORGE. It would be in order then to offer further amendments?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; absolutely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object, I obtained the floor once this afternoon, but under a parliamentary ruling, which, of course, was correct, I was not permitted to call up my amendment in the nature of a substitute until all so-called perfecting amendments had been offered and disposed of. Under the unanimous-consent request submitted by the majority leader I might find myself without an opportunity to say a word when the time came to vote upon my amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I shall be glad to cooperate with him and with the Chair to secure an opportunity for him to discuss his substitute, although he may have to do it prior to its being actually offered on the floor, due to the technical rules.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Connecticut would have a perfect right to speak to his amendment, which has already been read from the desk, prior to the time the amendment comes before the Senate for action.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; I shall be glad to help the Senator secure such an opportunity.

Mr. McCARRAN. That would be before 3 o'clock?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. At 3 o'clock all discussion would be cut off. Am I right about that?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I have it understood that if we recess now, I shall have the floor tomorrow morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator would have the floor tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to offer a suggestion to the majority leader. In view of the unusual situation in which I find myself and the unusual legislative situation concerning my proposal, I wonder if he will ask for this consent with the exception, under the circumstances, of my substitute bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is difficult to do that. I will see that the Senator from Connecticut has an opportunity to speak.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, my position is the same as that of the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. I proposed to offer, in the form of an amendment, a substitute bill; and I, too, have yielded, pursuant to the ruling of the Chair today on the parliamentary procedure. I desire to have an opportunity tomorrow to offer my amendment and to say something on it. I therefore reserve the right to object, and I do object, if I am to be prevented from offering and discussing my substitute.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that we will take care of the Senator and give him an opportunity to discuss his substitute. There will be no trouble about that. Many Senators may have amendments to offer at the last minute that they may not be able to discuss; but I realize the special situation of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I will cooperate with him.

Mr. BRIDGES. Then, I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has the floor. Does the Senator from Nevada yield for that purpose?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of Brig. Gens. Bernard William Kearney and Ralph Kenyon Robertson, both of the New York National Guard, to be brigadier generals, National Guard of the United States.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Leighton Shields, of Missouri (now serving under a recess appointment), to be district attorney, United States Court for China.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report back favorably a number of nominations of postmasters. In doing so, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations for Mississippi be considered at this time, because they are endorsed by both Senators from the State concerned. I ask that the Mississippi nominations be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that certain nominations of postmasters just reported by him be considered and confirmed en bloc. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nominations, as follows:

John R. Meunier to be postmaster at Biloxi, Miss., in place of J. R. Meunier (incumbent's commission expired Dec. 16, 1934);

Troy McGehee to be postmaster at Brookhaven, Miss., in place of C. E. Day, removed;

Virginia C. Welborn to be postmaster at Electric Mills, Miss., in place of E. A. Temple, resigned; and William J. Pettyjohn to be postmaster at Marks, Miss., in place of L. M. Wilson, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

GEORGE T. MITCHELL

Mr. LOGAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably the nomination of George T. Mitchell, of Mississippi, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Mississippi, vice Lester G. Fant, term expired.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Mr. Mitchell be acted on at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the nomination of Mr. George T. Mitchell be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there has been a vacancy in this office in Mississippi for some months. I hope there will be no objection to the confirmation of the nomination.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the nomination been reported from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HARRISON. It has.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BILBO. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified. That completes the transaction.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in order the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD—EXPERTS AND ATTORNEYS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Social Security Board nominations which were passed over yesterday are nominations which ordinarily we should ask to have considered en bloc. The nominations have all been passed upon by the various Senators from the States from which the nominees come; but I ask that they be taken up one by one.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was the agreement which was entered into yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the order made yesterday.

The clerk will state the first nomination in order.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Mary E. Austin, of New York, to be Assistant Director, Bureau of Public Assistance (field activities).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Paul E. Batzell, of New York, to be Chief, Division of Administration, Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before voting upon these nominations, I should be glad to be advised of the salaries which are being paid. Some information has come to me that the salaries paid are too great for the positions occupied and for the capacity of the persons selected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot give the Senator that information. The Chair understands that under the law, anyone nominated for an office paying in excess of $5,000 annually has to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Aside from that, the Chair has no information on the subject.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to direct an inquiry to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The salaries vary.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is not about the salaries that I wish to inquire of the Senator. The Senator from Tennessee has been in charge of the investigation of these various nominees; has he?

Mr. McKELLAR. In part only.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I was interested in this phase of the subject: I went over the entire list of nominees, and I find on the list no one coming from an area west of the Mississippi River. I wondered if there was anything about the Social Security work that persons west of the Mississippi River are eligible or qualified for. Was that subject discussed by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I did not make the appointments, and we have only what was brought before the committee. The report itself shows just exactly where the nominees come from. For instance, sometimes they are designated as coming from one State, and it is found that they really live in another State. The situation is a very curious one.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the floor, but I shall be very glad to respond to any inquiry from the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Apropos of what the Senator has said, I wish to inquire if it is true, as it has been rumored, that some of these nominees are not known at all in the communities from which they are supposed to have been nominated?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is one of the reasons why I wanted them taken up seriatim. I will tell the Senator from Missouri what the committee did. The committee, as it does in all such cases, sent the nominations to the Senators from the States from which the nominees come. In the cases of those who are named on this two-page list—and they are not all of those whose names were before our committee—the names have been sent to the two Senators from the respective States, and in each case the Senators have recommended the confirmation of the nominations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that the reason why the list seems to contain the names of nominees only from a few States is that the set-up of administration in some States is complete, and in others is incomplete? For instance, I notice that the set-up for Massachusetts is complete. Including the regional officer, the assistant regional officer, and the general counsel, the whole list is complete. I suppose every State in the Union has a set-up and that in due time the nominations will appear. Am I correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. If they are to receive over $5,000, the nominations will come to the Senate. Only the nominations of experts and attorneys will come to the Senate, regardless of the salary. For instance, the personnel director, Mr. Aronson, from New York, draws more than $5,000, but his nomination does not come before us because it appears that he is neither an expert nor an attorney for the Board, although he is actually an attorney.

Mr. WALSH. The fact is that there are other nominations to come from other States later if the officials receive salaries of $5,000 or more. This list does not mean that there are States in the Union which have not social security set-ups, does it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. I think every State in the Union has such a set-up.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of the independent offices appropriation bill I may say that this matter was brought to the attention of the committee. It appeared that there were a large number of employees who were appointed without the civil service under authority contained in the original act. The committee called for the files of the employees who were appointed on the ground that they were attorneys or experts, and after looking into the files of employees, because of many complaints that were made to the committee by Members of the Senate, complaint as to an appointee in the State of Colorado, for instance, because the appointee came from the State of Rhode Island, or as to an employee put in charge of an office at Paducah, Ky., who was a resident of Michigan, and similar cases. The committee went into this matter at some length. After consideration, it recommended the language which is now law. The language was first adopted by the Senate and caused the bill to be held up in conference for some little time, but the House finally acquiesced in the Senate view.

The language of the law is that employees who are not under civil service and who receive $5,000 or more, should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Of the two-hundred-and-some employees without a civil-service status, appointed on the ground that they were attorneys or experts, there are a few more than 50 who receive salaries of $5,000 or more. There are many States where there are no appointees under this classification receiving a salary of $5,000 or more. It happens that there are quite a number from the State of New York. The list was sent to the Senators from the States, and, of course, the committee knows nothing about the individual cases. All the committee could do was to forward the list of appointees to the Senators from the respective States, and ask for information.

I may say that one reason urged by the House conferees against the adoption of the provision was that they felt that some of the people employed by the board would not be known to their Senators, and their confirmation might be delayed. The fear seems to have been well founded, as is shown by the delay Senators have caused the committee to incur because they have not reported to the Committee on Appropriations as to these nominations.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I find upon this list the names of 13 persons listed as residents of New York. With the exception of one, I never heard of any of them. But when the list was submitted to me I wrote to each one of these persons and asked for a full outline of his background and experience and capacity. I have no reason to doubt that the statements made to me are correct. I assume these are all the patronage of my colleague, and if it will save him any embarrassment, I ask that the 13 from New York be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator states he wrote to these individuals and asked for their background, and I suppose he desired to obtain information as to their competency and their qualifications. Did he receive any replies?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. Did those replies justify the Senator in endorsing them?

Mr. COPELAND. I had a very full report from each one of them.

Mr. KING. From the appointees themselves.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; a very full report, and I know that no one of these appointees would put on paper any statements that were not absolutely correct. From my study of the recommendations I believe these persons are doubtless the very best to be selected in the United States, and I think they should be confirmed without hesitation on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, it may be entirely probable that all of the experts in the United States qualified to draw salaries of over $5,000 from the Social Security Board would be confined to the area east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio River, but I wish to ask the Senator from New York whether he considers it probable that all the lawyers in the United States competent to be attorneys for this Board are confined to that same rather narrow geographical area.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have some information from the Board in reference to the number of lawyers, and where they come from, which ought to be presented at this time.

Eighty-four lawyers are employed in the General Counsel's office of the Social Security Board. These attorneys come from 36 different States. Their average age is 37, considerably lower than the average age of the legal staff of the Solicitor General of the United States. Among these 84 lawyers are graduates of 40 different law schools, and no single law school has more than 7 graduates on the staff.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, seriously, I have no doubt that these persons from New York are thoroughly qualified. The one I happen to know is one of the outstanding persons in the particular field involved. So, without any further discussion, I ask that the 13 from New York be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that would be contrary to the agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An agreement was entered into yesterday that the nominations should be considered seriatim.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, on occasions my colleague loves to confer honors upon me, and I appreciate the one which he has attempted to proffer to me just now. However, it so happens that I cannot accept his praise. I had nothing to do with any one of the appointments before us now, so far as recommending the appointee was concerned, nor had I any knowledge of the appointments except as to three of them. I did not recommend even these three, but chanced to know of their qualifications. Since then I have become informed as to the others, and they are all eminently qualified from the standpoint of ability and character. The only reason for their choice, I am sure, was their special knowledge of this very technical subject.

I do wish to say that one or two of these persons were sought by the Government; they did not seek the places. Miss Jane M. Hoey is one of the most eminent social workers, if that is the correct term, in the United States. She is one of the dozen or so women in the whole country who are preeminent in that great field. The Government had great difficulty in getting her services, and it was at a financial sacrifice that she came to organize the work down here. I do not know how long they can keep her here, but I hope for some time to come, because everyone who is informed recognizes her great ability.

The gentleman having charge of publicity, or whatever the technical title may be, Mr. Resnick, was also brought from another field at a financial sacrifice. He has done a very wonderful job.

While I do not know any of the other appointees, I have inquired as to their qualifications, and I think they were very excellent appointments. It just happens that 13 came from New York.

The clerk will state the next nomination in order on the calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas C. Billig, of Maryland, to be senior attorney.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert P. Bingham, of New Hampshire, to be principal attorney.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas C. Blaidsell, Jr., of New York, to be Assistant Director, Bureau of Research and Statistics.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ruth O. Blakeslee, of Pennsylvania, to be Chief, Regulations and Procedure Division, Bureau of Public Assistance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas C. Broadaway, of Arkansas, to be senior administrative officer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou, O Lord, shalt endure forever, and Thy remembrance unto all generations. Of old Thou hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of Thy hands. We pray Thee, our Heavenly Father, that our love may be without dissimulation; may we abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good. Oh, let us magnify the Lord and exalt His name together. O gracious Lord and Savior, we praise Thee that light is sown for the righteous and gladness for the upright in heart. So lead us with Thy spirit that in our homes we may be devoted and patient, in our social relations brotherly, in our deliberations just and wise, and in all things meet Thine approval. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 289.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 289

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5417, a bill to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Is the gentleman going to cut off unanimous-consent requests this morning by bringing up this resolution in such a hurry?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I was not aware of any hurry. This is Friday, according to the calendar, and we are eager to expedite the business of the Government so the House may reasonably adjourn. What unanimous-consent request has the gentleman in mind?

Mr. FISH. I am interested in adjournment and I agree with the gentleman's statement in that regard, but I want to propose a unanimous-consent request to speak out of order for 5 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. On what subject?

Mr. FISH. On adjournment.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Has the gentleman any valuable suggestions to make?

Mr. FISH. Yes; very valuable. I want to urge the housing bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is not a controversial matter, because we are all for a housing bill. We expect to have a housing bill up for consideration before we are out of here, so the gentleman is not going to make any contribution in that respect.

Mr. FISH. We have been speaking about it for the last year, but we hope to get to it pretty soon. I happen to be on the committee considering this matter, and I want to make a few remarks on the housing bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In favor of the Housing bill?

Mr. FISH. In favor of the housing bill; yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes on the rule to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am as eager as any Member of the House to see Congress adjourn and to get home and go fishing. However, there are a few little matters I think Congress should consider before adjourning.

First, I want to go on record before adjournment in favor of a minimum-wage law. I have been advocating this for a number of years. I should like to see that feature separated from the bill which has been introduced with respect to maximum hours and the setting up of a special board, and a straight minimum-wage law brought in to stop the exploitation of labor in the sweatshops throughout the country.

I should also like to see put through Congress before adjournment a very proper anti-third-term resolution, such as was adopted by the Senate a few years ago under a Republican administration. And I strongly favor the final adoption of the Gavagan antilynching bill before adjournment.

Lastly, I should like to see a proper national housing program enacted into law. During 4 long years the woes of "the forgotten man" have been paraded before the country and agonized about by Democratic orators. President Roosevelt, after 4 years of the New Deal, admits that one-third of the American people are ill-housed, yet up to now has done very little to remedy the situation. The United States is one of the few civilized nations in the world without a national housing policy or program. In spite of all the talk and idle promises, nothing has been done for the families who cannot pay more than $20 a month in rent. The Nation faces the worst housing crisis in its history.

With that situation before us, the Congress talks about running out on these people. It is not only the President that has forgotten the one-third of our ill-housed, but also the Members of Congress. I do not want to make a partisan speech on this vital social and economic problem. There should be no more politics in housing than there is in public health, education, or national defense.

It is true that the Wagner-Steagall housing bill does not contemplate answering all the housing needs of the United States, but it is, however, a long forward step in the line of a sane, realistic approach to a problem whose successful solution can no longer be postponed. Under this bill approximately 300,000 families would be rehoused, and if full advantage were taken of the rural housing provisions as well as urban housing provisions the total amount of housing built might well be 500,000 families. The rental which it will be possible to achieve under this bill in the larger industrial centers of the country, where land costs are higher, will run from $5 to $7 per room per month. This means real low-cost housing for the urban industrial section. In the smaller cities and rural communities rents as low as $4 per room would be possible, and here, again, rents are brought down to the income level of the lowest earning group in that locality.

The appalling housing situation can no longer be concealed; the decline of real-estate values and the securities based on them is told in the press. Billions of money invested in real estate, mortgages, and municipal bonds are in jeopardy.

Millions of our people living in shambles, thousands of families without shelter, billions of investment endangered, cities faced with bankruptcy; the Congress must not adjourn before acting on this legislation.

Speaking for myself, and as far as I may for Republican fellow Members, I do not want Congress to adjourn until these all but forgotten ill-housed American citizens have been remembered and a national housing policy has been written into law. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5417) in reference to tolls on the Panama Canal. This is a matter which has been before the House for many years. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, there are no requests on this side to speak on the rule.

As far as I am concerned, I am very much in favor of this legislation. There have been in previous Congresses differences between the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with regard to the form which the legislation should take. I understand such differences are now adjusted, and that this bill comes before the House with the unanimous endorsement of those who have given the subject the most careful consideration from the standpoint of public interest.

I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] wants 5 minutes to speak out of order. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to yield that time to him. There are no other requests for time on this side.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman's speaking out of order, unless he is going to refer to the daily statement of the Treasury Department.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak out of order, and I will not refer to the statement which the Treasury Department publishes and which the Democratic administration certainly does not like to have cast up to it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized to speak out of order for 5 minutes.

Mr. RICH. I thank the Chair.

Mr. Speaker, I agree for once with my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], and I want to quote him:

Communist plot laid to N. L. R. B. RANKIN says members seek to destroy industry in South.

Representative RANKIN, Democrat, of Mississippi, last night charged that members of the National Labor Relations Board are conspiring with certain communistic influences to destroy industry in the South.

This is taken from the Herald.

May I also quote Senator GEORGE that—

Senator NYE, of North Dakota, spoke for a large section of the population of the United States when he declared "the National Labor Relations Board seems to have gone out of its way to demonstrate to the public that it is a partisan body rather than a judicial institution."

I may say I have heard quite a number of manufacturers refer to this Board as being partisan, stating that the Board seems to want to coerce manufacturers into dealing with the C. I. O.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a letter received from the Eskimo Knitting Mills, of Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., July 27, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
Congressman from Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: By now you have a fairly good picture, from the actual experience of our plant, about which I wrote you previously, as to just how destructive, both to labor and industry, is the present Wagner Labor Act, as well as the present policy of the National Labor Board.

I will again summarize briefly what happened at our plant during past 2 months, which will convince you that had we, the manufacturers, any rights at all, and had the policy of the National Labor Board been a constructive one, our plant would still be operating today and 100 to 150 employees would still be working:

(1) On June 4, employees were happily at work, earning $25 to $50 per week for skilled labor; $14 to $22 per week for unskilled labor. The owner, who had enough guts to sell the last of his securities and put $25,000 additional capital in this business when it needed it 3 years ago, is working 14 to 16 hours per day on the road and in the office in his effort to obtain sufficient business to keep these employees working and content.

(2) On the same day C. I. O. organizers came to our plant and through a loud amplifying system, which could be heard for a block, talked to our employees from the street, advising that they were slaves of the owners and requesting that they join the C. I. O. in order to obtain more wages and better working conditions. Employees were stopped on the street, threatened unless they joined they would be harmed—organizers went to their homes and threatened destruction of entire families unless employees signed C. I. O. cards.

(3) Owners, realizing that the law gives them no protection whatsoever, called in organizers and requested that they talk to employees inside the plant, and if after several talks employees decided by majority to join the C. I. O. it will be perfectly satisfactory to employers.

(4) For period of a week C. I. O. did not take advantage of employer's proposition, but continued in their violent effort to obtain members by force. On June 19 employers wrote to National Labor Board, advising them of proposition they made to the C. I. O. organizers, inviting them to come inside and talk to employees, and requesting the good offices of National Labor Board in this controversy, suggesting that they consult with C. I. O. organizers and request that these people, instead of using violence, speak to employees in the plant and then find out the will of the majority of employees.

(5) This letter to National Labor Board was sent via registered mail and a reply was received next day advising owners that the National Labor Board cannot interfere unless there is dissatisfaction among employees.

(6) A week later, after C. I. O. organizers have been able to obtain by force a few signed cards, they called on National Labor Board and made charges against us. It is interesting to note that while we were endeavoring to obtain a fair settlement of this matter and called on National Labor Board for help they were not in position, according to law, to do anything for us; but as soon as the C. I. O. organizers, by force and illegal methods, have been able to obtain a few signed cards the National Labor Board were ready to jump into the picture.

(7) A full reply was made to these charges by the owners but the National Labor Board was not ready to give us a hearing, notwithstanding the fact we asked for one, and they again did not appear in the picture until 5 weeks later, after the C. I. O. organizers had finally scared all the employees from the plant by beating them on the street, threatening them at their homes, and pulling the dresses off the girls on the street, and called what is known as a strike, did the National Labor Board again appear in the picture.

(8) As it stands today, C. I. O. organizers have all these employees under guard from early morning until late at night. No matter what their wishes were, they were forced to sign cards and join the C. I. O. organization against their will, and this can be definitely proven.

(9) The company is now in the process of being turned over to its creditors for protection of such creditors and, of course, final liquidation. Employees are still out; most of them demand that they be allowed to return to work, but the present position of the C. I. O. organizers is they must obtain some advance in salary for them, otherwise they have not accomplished anything. C. I. O. organizers as much as told us that no matter how good the wages are we must agree to some little advance, or otherwise it will show that their efforts in organizing our employees have been in vain.

(10) I am simply writing you this because while this company will soon be out of existence there are thousands and thousands of mills of our size who cannot pay for protection, and probably if they could they would not want to stoop to advices of officials that they pay for protection, for we have been advised to this effect by high officials of this city.

Unless something is done to pass Senator VANDENBERG's amendments during this session of Congress, you will find a very sad condition in this country by the time you return to Congress next session, for the same practices are applied all over the country, and I know that in our immediate neighborhood there are five factories closed down at this time due to the same condition as above related.

Yours very truly,

ESKIMO KNITTING MILLS,
J. ROSENFELD, Vice President.

Mr. RICH. I do not know these people, but they give quite a report on what the N. L. R. B. is doing to foster the C. I. O.

May I call the attention of the Members to the statement made by Mr. Green, of the American Federation of Labor, that—

No hostile employer in America has done the cause of labor more harm than those who fomented, executed, and administered the policies of the Committee for Industrial Organization during the past 18 months.

I want to say here that the National Labor Relations Board was set up for a purpose, and the purpose was a good one. The intention was to eliminate strikes and try to settle all differences between employers and employees. In itself this is an admirable thing.

I recall very distinctly the statement that was made on the floor of the House that if we established this Board we would do away with strikes, but, Mr. Speaker, we have had more strikes in this Nation since this Board has been established than we have ever had in our history in the same length of time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I hope to get time in a few days to go into this question fully. They are stirring up strikes, they are promoting strikes in the territory with which I am familiar in the Southern States, and causing the closing down of industries, destroying them.

Mr. RICH. That is in Tupelo, Miss.?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and in Tennessee also, and in other places in Mississippi, as well as other places in the South.

I have a copy of that letter, and I have received protests from almost every State of the Union within the last 36 hours. This is the most dangerous thing we have ever placed in the hands of an irresponsible group of men.

Mr. RICH. This is the first time I have ever agreed with the gentleman from Mississippi, but I certainly do agree with him in this instance.

Mr. RANKIN. I knew if I kept preaching to the gentleman, I would convert him on something after a while. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. And I knew if the gentleman ever got on the right track he would be converted.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. AMLIE. Is not the gentleman from Mississippi the first convert of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not think so. If I could refer to something I stated I would not refer to, I believe I could show that there are many millions of people in this country who agree with me.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If this thing keeps up there will be converts all over Wisconsin before it is over. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5417) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5417, with Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk a letter which I ask unanimous consent may be read in my time.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON,
Hyde Park, N. Y., July 3, 1937.

Hon. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND,
Chairman, Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLAND: There is transmitted a letter from Dr. Emory R. Johnson, chairman of the Committee on Panama Canal Tolls and Vessel Measurement Rules, and a list of corrections to the text of the rules as modified by the committee and printed as part VI of their report. These corrections, to insure a more definite and uniform interpretation of the rules, are acceptable to the Secretary of War and the Governor of the Panama Canal, and the Rules for the Measurement of Vessels for the Panama Canal, as modified by the committee, now meet with my approval.

I concur in the opinion of the Members of the Tolls Committee that the provisions of H. R. 5417, introduced by you and reported favorably from your committee, embody fully their recommendations for necessary remedial legislation approved in my message to the Congress. This bill offered a satisfactory and permanent solution of the problem which requires that the rules of measurement and the other administrative matters recommended be not included in legislation.

This legislation is considered in the public interest. Its prompt enactment is necessary to the proper administration of the Panama Canal.

Very sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

[Transmittal]

UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA,
WHARTON SCHOOL OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE,
Philadelphia, June 14, 1937.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT: There is submitted herewith a list of corrections to the text of the Rules for the Measurement of Vessels for the Panama Canal, as modified by the Committee on Panama Canal Tolls and Vessel Measurement Rules, and printed as part VI of the report of the committee, beginning on page 88, Senate Document 23, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session.

After the report was printed representatives of the steamship owners, as well as the Canal authorities, brought to the attention of the committee certain minor revisions in the text which they felt were desirable and necessary to clarify the meaning and insure the intent being more definitely and uniformly interpreted by all admeasurers in applying the measurement rules. After careful consideration of all proposals submitted, and after conferences with the representatives of the steamship owners and Canal authorities, the members of the Committee have reached the conclusion that these revisions and no others are necessary to carry out the intent of the recommendations of the Tolls Committee.

It is the opinion of the members of your Committee on Panama Canal Tolls and Vessel Measurement Rules that the provisions of the pending legislation, H. R. 5417, or S. 1912, with which it is identical, embody fully the recommendations of the Tolls Committee with reference to the necessary remedial legislation outlined in our report and approved by you in your message to the Congress.

It has been brought to our attention that a bill, S. 2493, sponsored by the steamship interests and intended as a substitute for S. 1912, was introduced by Senator COPELAND and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. A satisfactory solution of the problem requires that the rules of measurement and also other matters recommended for administrative action by the President in our report, for reasons clearly set forth therein, should not be included in the legislation but should be left for administrative action by the President.

Sincerely yours,

EMORY R. JOHNSON.

"APPLICATION AND INTERPRETATION OF RULES

"82. Art. XXV. The Board of Admeasurement of the Panama Canal is charged with the application of these rules and, subject to the approval of the Governor, all questions of interpretation arising thereunder shall be decided by the Board. In applying the rules, the Board will be governed by the principle that there shall be no change in the present treatment of spaces except as herein provided, and, with the approval of the Governor, may provide for the treatment of any space for which provisions has not herein been made."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD in my time the papers accompanying the letters of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, while I have yielded myself 15 minutes, I hope I shall not be compelled to consume all of that time. This matter has been before the Congress for many years, and many bills have been introduced to correct the situation that this bill is intended to reach. In all, there have been 26 bills introduced, and four times the bill has passed the House. In the last Congress a bill, substantially the same as this in its general effect and purposes, was introduced and was taken up under a motion to suspend the rules. It received a majority vote, more than a majority of those present, but failed to receive the necessary two-thirds to suspend the rules, by about seven or eight votes. At that time Mr. Lehlbach, a Member from New Jersey, who was the ranking Republican on the committee, and I, as chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, opposed the bill. I opposed it for the reason that while the bill that was then pending before the House made provision for certain changes in the Panama Canal rules, yet the bill also authorized the appointment of a committee, a neutral committee of three, to study the Panama Canal rules and recommend modifications. To me it appeared at that time, as it appears to me now, that if we were going to appoint a committee to study the rules and suggest changes, the work of such a committee should precede the legislation.

That was the view taken in the Senate when a similar bill was considered there. In the last Congress a resolution was passed authorizing the President to appoint a neutral committee of three to study the Panama Canal rules and make recommendations to Congress. That committee was appointed. It consisted of Dr. Emory Johnson, who is a distinguished author and also a professor in the University of Pennsylvania, who had peculiar knowledge with respect to Panama Canal rules, because in 1912, before the original Panama Canal rules were adopted, he served as special commissioner for the purpose of framing the rules that were subsequently submitted to Congress and adopted. The other members were Admiral Rock, who was the former head of the Bureau of Construction of the Navy, a distinguished naval officer, and a civilian, former Governor Weaver, of Nebraska. These men have united in a voluminous and excellent report, in which they have gone minutely into the problem and recommended the bill that is now before the House.

Frequently it is said that the general purpose of the bill is to do away with what is known as the dual system of measurement. That designation arouses confusion in the minds of the Members of Congress; and yet, after all, it is a very simple proposition. It should be borne in mind that there are certain statutory rules for measuring the tonnage of ships. They are known as the United States rules. The tonnage of vessels really means their capacity or size, and the primary objective of those rules is to fix the tonnage for the purpose of harbor dues and port dues in the various ports of the world. All nations have such rules, not identical but similar to the United States rules.

It was realized before the Panama Canal was opened, when the question of toll charges was studied, that it would be necessary to provide a special system of measuring vessels in order to be equitable, in order to be fair, in order to be stable, in order to be uniform, in order to make the measurement applicable to the situation that it was designed to meet, to wit, the determination of the earning capacity of the ships as a basis for charging tolls for the use of the Panama Canal. It was found to be necessary to have a special set of rules known as the Panama Canal rules. It was the function of Dr. Johnson, as special commissioner, and those who were with him to work up those rules before the Canal opened. This they did, and Congress on August 24, 1912, passed a law whereby it was provided that the tolls that were charged should not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton. The Congress intended that "net registered ton" should be net tonnage based upon the Panama Canal rules. Shortly after the Canal opened the question of charges made on lumber passing through the Canal on the deck of a vessel was raised. The question was submitted to the Attorney General for his opinion, and the Attorney General ruled that net registered tonnage meant net registered tonnage under the United States rules and not under the Panama Canal rules. The law that was passed in 1912 provided a maximum and minimum; that is, that the charge on a vessel transiting the Canal should not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton and should not be below 75 cents. Under the law the President had been given authority to proclaim the rate of toll, and he fixed it on laden vessels as $1.20 per net registered ton as measured by the Panama Canal rules. When it was ruled by the Attorney General that the act of August 24, 1912, had reference to United States rules, it was found necessary to measure according to both sets of rules, the Panama Canal rules and the United States rules. The President directed that if the amount due at the rate of $1.25 per ton according to the United States rules was less than the amount due at the rate of $1.20 per net ton according to the Panama Canal rules, then the larger amount could not be collected.

In other words, if $1.20, based on the measurement rule that was fixed for the Panama Canal should exceed $1.25, according to the United States rules, then the difference between the $1.20 and $1.25 could not be collected. President Wilson and every President of the United States since and every Secretary of War has realized the existence of an iniquitous situation, as all vessels transiting the Canal must be measured according to the Panama Canal rules and according to the United States rules, and then the lesser tolls collected.

The question naturally arises, Why should not United States rules be used? In 1869, when the Suez Canal was opened the authorities tried to apply rules similar to the United States rules, and they found them to be unworkable. Then in 1872 they tried the British rules of measurement, but they, too, were found to be unworkable. There followed an international convention, held either in 1872 or 1873. It was found that the only effective, practical way to charge tolls for the Suez Canal was to prescribe rules of measurement applicable to the Suez Canal; just exactly the policy pursued later by Dr. Johnson and recommended by him for the Canal.

We are asking now that the maximum shall be $1 and that the minimum shall be 75 cents. That is lower than the $1.25, but according to the toll records of 1936 the total decrease in revenues will be about $1,000,000 or less.

Now, let me tell you something about the operation of these rules. The difference between the United States rules and the Panama Canal rules has meant, according to the Bureau of Efficiency and the Bureau of Statistics on the Panama Canal, that the United States has collected $92,000,000 less than it would have collected if the Panama Canal rules had been in effect. Of the $92,000,000, $51,000,000 would have been collected from foreign ships and $41,000,000 from American ships. One result of the present system is that we are subsidizing foreign ships to the detriment of American ships. When this is put into effect it will only increase the rates as far as American ships are concerned very slightly.

Now, let me show you briefly some of the differences in the two rules. This is a passenger ship [indicating]. These colored portions are what are known as exempted cabins in measuring the tonnage. This is a peculiar technical construction of the Bureau of Navigation, but it is similar to the results in all other maritime nations. If there happens to be an opening here [indicating] so that water can come in this space [indicating], and any part of that space is exempted, then that whole deck becomes exempted from measurement in determining the tolls that shall be paid. The result in this case is that the chargeable space, which is this line before reconditioning [indicating], has been brought down to this line by reconditioning [indicating]. That entire portion between these two lines has been taken out of tonnage on which tolls would be based and on which tolls would be paid.

Then there is another little interesting thing. Let us take a freight ship. Here is an exempted space [indicating] and another exempted space, and another [indicating]. The owner wants to get rid of the additional space in here [indicating]. You will remember, this is under the United States rules, and the United States rules permit as much reductions as possible, because we must meet other maritime nations in competition with us. We cannot afford to pay any more port and harbor dues than we have to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

So what is done? The shipowners provide here what is called a "tonnage hatch." That has to be 4 feet wide, and it has to be the breadth of the vessel. Then they put some openings down here [indicating]. These are known as "freeing ports", the theory being that if that hatch is provided, the water will enter the hatch, and dry cargo cannot be carried in the exempted space. The water is supposed to enter this tonnage hatch and escape through the freeing ports. The truth is that the tonnage hatch is well covered, and no water is going to get in there. The covering is not fastened to the ship, but it has cleats and other devices that make it perfectly safe and tight. The tonnage hatch does not affect the carrying capacity of the ship, and the cargo can be carried in the space just as well as though the tonnage hatch were not there, but the owner pays nothing. Other nations of the world are taking advantage of these rulings in the building of their ships. Some question was asked me, "Are you not lowering rates?" No. We are stabilizing rates. We are stopping the reduction that is constantly going on by reason of the application of these United States rules. We are getting back to the law that was passed on August 24, 1912, whereby the President of the United States was charged with the authority to administer the Panama Canal and to operate the Canal, assessing tolls—charges with respect to one definite and clear set of rules for the measurement of these vessels.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON. Do I understand that if this legislation is enacted it will decrease the present rates through the Canal?

Mr. BLAND. At the present time the maximum is $1.25. Under this bill the maximum is $1. There will be no material reduction. The decrease on the total tolls collected will be about $1,000,000 for the first year. I have the figures here: About $500,000 on American vessels and $400,000 on others; but we will stop this constant use of United States rules to reduce tonnage and tolls from time to time. I have a diagram here which shows how these measurements have come down from year to year and how the application of the United States rules to tolls through the Panama Canal creates a situation so confusing that we do not know what the revenues are going to be. The proposed law gives stability.

Mr. CARLSON. I may say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries that the millers of the Middle West are seriously suffering now because of too low rates through the Panama Canal. Wheat is moving from the Pacific Northwest through this Canal to eastern Atlantic ports at much less rates than wheat can be transported to the eastern seaboard from the Middle West.

Mr. BLAND. In my opinion, it will not affect them at all. The tolls are applicable to many different classes of vessels. The decrease per vessel will be immaterial and will not affect those rates. Of course, the 10-percent margin will permit the President, if necessary, to increase the tolls, but it is intended that the Panama Canal shall not be a profit-making venture.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Under the proposed revision foreign ships will pay a larger proportion of dues than they are paying now?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. They have been the chief offenders in this.

Mr. BLAND. We cannot describe our own people as offenders because they are trying to escape charges, if they can, for practically all will do that.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as is customary when the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries takes the floor, he has made a clear, careful, and accurate statement of the legislation now before you.

This legislation was the result of a hearing which, to my mind, was one of the most lucid and most able presentations of a public question that I have heard before a committee during my service in Congress. The gentleman from Virginia has stated that this legislation will avoid the necessity for dual measurements, which create confusion and throw an added burden upon the American shipper. You who have gone to sea know that in American ships the public spaces, the saloon, the recreation rooms, all the public facilities and utilities aboard ships, are more commodious and more spacious and more comfortable—I might almost say more luxurious—than they are on foreign ships. Under the present rule that public convenience, that public service, that public utility on the American ships is penalized, things which are provided for the purpose of giving the traveling public comfort. American ships are paying an added toll by reason of that fact.

Because of their construction, foreign ships have escaped a number of toll phases that are applied to American ships; and, as the distinguished chairman suggests, the American ships are penalized in the sum of at least $400,000 per year.

This legislation is sound. I have heard only one objection to it. The legislation delegates the power to the President to make these rules. I am, of course, opposed, as are many Members of the House on both sides of the aisle, to granting any more blanket or wholesale delegation of legislative power to the President. However, this is not a legislative power; it is a ministerial power, a power that is used by the President only on the recommendation of those who have charge of the technical side of this question, so, in my judgment, that objection necessarily fades away.

I want, in passing, to refer to the services of the United States engineers who built the Canal and are now in command of the Canal Zone.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes up a new subject, will he yield for a question?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the effect of this proposed new schedule of rates be to equalize differences between domestic and foreign ships, or will it aid our domestic shipping against the railroads in transcontinental traffic? I may say in this connection that I do not think our domestic shipping needs much aid against the railroads in transcontinental traffic, because they get nearly all of it now. Will this legislation still further lower rates through the Panama Canal to intercoastal shipping in competition with the railroads?

Mr. CULKIN. It is not going to have any material effect, I may say to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I talked to the Canal authorities about that only this morning. They said they did not think it would affect them in the slightest.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the chairman of the committee.

I may say that the total tonnage which moved through the Canal in 1936 was about 22,000,000. The tolls were $23,000,000. The effect of these rates which will work a reduction of approximately a million dollars, while not doing an injustice to the foreign operators, will give the American operator his definite and rightful place in the sun.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. What position did the American operators take on this bill?

Mr. CULKIN. That, of course, is a bit mooted, I may say to the gentleman. When a representative or a committee of economists appeared before the committee they seemed to acquiesce entirely in the findings of this committee that was appointed by the President. Subsequently I received a letter in opposition, but principally they objected, as I understand it, to the delegation of the power to the President to make the rule. That is, they took the position the details of this regulation should be written into the law and not into rules. This procedure, as I said a moment ago, I think that is unsound, because this function is not legislative. It is definitely a ministerial function and must be delegated.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the operators take a position against the bill?

Mr. CULKIN. Subsequent to the hearing there was some objection. There was one operator whose name I will not mention who objected during the hearing, but it appeared subsequently, during his absence it may be said, that he himself was one of the chief offenders under the present conditions.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. The testimony before the committee showed that only three lines would have any increase in rates and perhaps one other line.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Did the railroads appear at the hearings on the bill?

Mr. CULKIN. There was no appearance by the railroads, so they must have regarded it as academic, because they are very active in these matters.

Mr. BLAND. May I say to the gentleman that the distinguished committee of which he happens to be a member and the committee which is charged with the consideration of railroad legislation, have reported this bill many times?

Mr. CULKIN. I was walking over here today, and I met the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, Mr. LEA, who is perhaps the leading and foremost legislative authority on Panama and Panama affairs in this country. I think I breach no confidence when I make the statement—at least he is here and he can contradict it—that he is heartily in favor of this legislation. I think he is the best technician in America on this question. The legislation, in my judgment, is wholesome, sound, and needed, and will bring order out of confusion and out of measurement chaos.

I want to emphasize in my discussion of this question the service that the United States engineers are performing in connection with the Canal Zone. America's memory is short, but America should remember that after the French failed and after civilian engineers had at least partially failed, the United States engineers undertook the building of the Panama Canal. They built it on time and within the estimates. Upon the completion of the Canal Congress wisely wrote into law a code which included in its provisions a proviso that the Governor of the Canal Zone must be an engineer officer of 2 years' standing in the service of the Zone. So that the United States engineers have been in charge from the beginning. In the construction of the Canal they first fought the difficulties of terrain, the difficulties of the soil and built the Canal, meanwhile successfully fighting tropical diseases. When the engineers took over the Canal Zone for the purpose of constructing this Canal, the Canal Zone was without doubt the foulest and most terrible plague spot in the whole world. It had been so historically, and the task fell upon Colonel Gorgas and his associates in the Public Health Service, who went in there and did the most magnificent job of correcting an evil condition of climate and disease that perhaps ever confronted civilized man.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the Canal Zone in those days and from the beginning had perhaps been the foulest plague spot of any place in the world.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I note here a provision which says that in addition to the toll based on the measurement or displacement tonnage, tolls may be levied on passengers at rates not to exceed $1.50 for each passenger. I refer particularly to the words "may be." Are there any rates now levied on passengers?

Mr. CULKIN. I understand there are not.

Mr. Chairman, under the direction of the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, it has become almost a complete social Utopia, complete as to health, as to environment, a marvel of administrative efficiency, the most remarkable, in my judgment, of any administration that has ever come to my notice. I merely mention these facts for the purpose of emphasizing that these same engineers are today, and have been since the beginning of the Republic, the keepers of the public domain in America.

They planned the railroads, built the bridges, and opened up the country in the beginning. They are now engaged in this great work. They are now engaged in the development of rivers and harbors and in flood control. To my mind, they are, under the leadership of General Markham, the greatest public servants any country in the world has today. I call this to the attention of the House in these days when Members of the House are chasing strange gods, if you please, new economic leaders, most of them tyros, and many of them unqualified, not fitted to pass upon these economic questions.

In conclusion, may I say that while the United States has the engineers in command so far as these phases of the public domain are concerned, there will be sound economic conclusions in their findings. The selfishness of locality will be curbed, and true national development, a development in the interest of all the people, not in the selfish interest of locality or of politics, will be attained. I ask the Congress to watch its step when it is suggested that this great body of men be relegated to a position of less influence.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has stated that in Panama they have attained as nearly complete a social Utopia as possible.

Mr. CULKIN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Has the gentleman been there?

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to get information. I am wondering if the gentleman would give the House the benefit of a description of the conditions which prompt him to say Panama has arrived at as nearly complete a social Utopia as possible. I am interested in that statement, and I would like to have the gentleman tell the House, if he will, of what this social Utopia consists.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman, of course, is somewhat facetious, but may I suggest to the gentleman so that his viewpoint may be liberalized, although I know the gentleman is broadly intelligent and cannot be much liberalized, that he take a trip down to the Canal Zone and observe the workings of that system. From the standpoint of health, from the standpoint of sanitation, and from the standpoint of every phase of administration the situation is ideal. I do not believe the system would be effective or efficient in this turbulent democracy. The people involved are more or less employees of the Canal Administration. They enjoy many privileges, and, of course, they are giving very remarkable and loyal service.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman misunderstands my state of mind. I am seeking evidence. The gentleman used a phrase which appealed to me, because we are all seeking Utopia. This has been the history of the efforts of mankind for thousands of years. I am very eager to obtain the benefit of the gentleman's reasons for stating that in this little place in Panama they have arrived as nearly as is humanly possible at a complete social Utopia. Of course, the phrase "social Utopia" goes far beyond sanitation and health. I wonder if the gentleman will give the House the benefit of the profound information, of which I, as well as all other Members of the House, know the gentleman is possessed.

Mr. CULKIN. I think I must yield myself 2 additional minutes, in view of this last barrage.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. In just a minute.

As I have stated, the Canal Zone is an economic Utopia. It is a Utopia from the standpoint of public health and administration and from the standpoint of living. The residents of the zone are a happy, contented, and cultured group. There are involved, of course, very largely only those who are in the Government service and operating the Canal or operating the various adjuncts of the Canal.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman now states it is an economic Utopia. I was discussing a social Utopia.

Mr. PIERCE. If the gentleman will permit the interruption, tell him it is a free port, with no tariffs.

Mr. CULKIN. That will not appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

What I prescribe for the distinguished, learned, and gracious gentleman from Massachusetts is that he go down to the Canal Zone and see the things which I have not time to fully and adequately describe. These conditions approach an economic and social Utopia, not only by reason of the added buying power given to this group but because of the security of life these people enjoy. If the gentleman will go there and look in their faces he will see a contentment which bears out my statement that the Canal Zone is in fact a social Utopia.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HILL of Washington. The gentleman went to the Panama Canal and became convinced of the existence of a Utopia down there.

Mr. CULKIN. I think I was there on three different occasions.

Mr. HILL of Washington. And the gentleman is convinced it is a modern Utopia?

Mr. CULKIN. I think the situation there is a remarkably happy one. They have some limitations, I assume, and, of course, no man or woman is ever completely happy.

Mr. HILL of Washington. May I ask the gentleman why he does not come out to the Coulee Dam, and other places out there, and be likewise convinced?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. In just a moment. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] invites the whirlwind, of course, when he asks me that question, as I disagree so completely with him. I am going to content myself by referring to my conventional statement with respect to the Grand Coulee. I am not going to call it again a raid on the Treasury, as I tried that several times.

Mr. HILL of Washington. We would just like to have the gentleman come out there.

Mr. CULKIN. I have been over most of the West, but not in the Grand Coulee area. I am simply going to say it is utterly uneconomic as compared with the Panama Canal and its purposes.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I think the gentleman would be convinced, just like the gentleman who is now sitting in the chair was convinced, if the gentleman would come out there.

Mr. CULKIN. I am a strong admirer of the West and its great people.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman has referred to a social and economic Utopia and there has been continual references to the matter of free trade, open ports, and no tariffs; and I think the gentleman should point out that in the Canal Zone we do not have extensive manufactures. In other words, the labor problem is not involved there and it is primarily a fixed-salary proposition.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes. The gentleman is correct in his statement. The people there do enjoy social security.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And, certainly, if I am on a fixed salary, where I am not engaged in any productive effort but simply rendering service, it is to my peculiar benefit to buy goods on a free-trade basis. Will the gentleman clear that up for us a little bit so that the story will not go out that the gentleman is standing here pleading for free trade?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] misinterprets my remarks. I am not for free trade. The conditions in the zone that I have described are not due to free trade. They are due to administration and the fixed tenure of the employees.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I would like to tell my colleague that I have visited the Panama Canal and I have gone through the Suez Canal, and I want to cooperate with my colleague with respect to what he has to say regarding a Utopia in the Panama Canal Zone as compared with the hell hole we found it when we originally went there and as compared with the Suez Canal. The Panama Canal is a Utopia by comparison.

The preceding gentleman, our colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], referred to former Gov. Arthur Weaver, of my State, being a member of this commission. I have discussed with Mr. Weaver the report of the commission. Mr. Weaver is a great statesman, a great enthusiast for water navigation. He is a farmer and has given his entire life to a study of water navigation; and I am sure, Mr. Chairman, in answer to some of the questions of our colleague from Kansas in regard to lower rates through the Panama Canal, perhaps working a hardship on the farmers of the Middle West, Governor Weaver would have done everything possible to eliminate any discrimination against the farmers of my district.

Mr. CULKIN. Governor Weaver is one of the signatories to this report. He rendered excellent service to this committee.

Mr. STEFAN. If the gentleman will permit one further question, under the Panama Canal rates, would you eventually eliminate this bootlegging space in the foreign ships, as I have observed it in my travels around the world?

Mr. CULKIN. That situation will be equalized and will be straightened out under these new rules.

Mr. STEFAN. And the rates would be reduced approximately $1,000,000.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. But it would give the American shipping industry an even chance with foreign ships by preventing this bootleg space.

Mr. CULKIN. It equalizes the tolls charged for space given to the public for public comfort.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me say that this discussion which has gone afield should not cloud the extreme merit of this bill, and I speak emphatically for its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I heartily commend the chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], and the members of that committee for bringing this legislation to the House of Representatives. Here we have a bill that I believe will become a law and which should have been a law 20 years ago.

When the United States built the Panama Canal it presented Uncle Sam to the world as an engineering genius. Under the limitations of the existing law, in the administration of the Canal operation, Uncle Sam has been presented to the world as an easy mark as a toll collector.

In the former consideration of this bill I have appreciated the opposition that developed on the basis of a fair difference of opinion, but the report presented to Congress through the President's commission has eliminated the last reasonable opposition to this bill, as I see it.

A suggestion, however, has now been made and perhaps will be urged in another body that instead of giving the President the power to make rules of measurement we should write those rules into inflexible law. In my judgment, that is exactly what we should not do. An inflexible rule has been the reason that for 20 years the shipowners have had the opportunity, of which they have availed themselves, to evade the payment of tolls on millions of tonnage actually carried through the Canal. An inflexible law, so far as operating authorities are concerned, has made Uncle Sam powerless to control tolls on actual pay space on ships transiting the Canal. Take this big shelter deck. [Referring to a map.] By a little manipulation of structural changes this deck can be filled with 3,000 tons of cargo, equaling a train of 120 loaded cars, and can pass through the Canal without paying any toll whatever on that tonnage. Uncle Sam has been compelled to look on with hands in his pockets, powerless to exact one cent of such toll. Because of mere structural changes in the ship, not affecting its carrying capacity, the Government, with full knowledge of what was being done and why, has been helpless to protect itself.

Every ton of cargo carried on that shelter deck was just as much protected as a ton carried on any other deck of the ship, and yet under existing law has been exempt from the tolls.

Another situation that has developed is the discrimination constantly practiced in levying of tolls, not only between our own ships but as to the ships of foreign nations. Two or three years ago when I last looked into this matter in detail, I learned of the great variation in tolls charged on actual pay space as between different nations. I found there was a variation from 77 cents to $1.26 a ton, a variation between the lowest and the highest of 49 cents a ton in what we were charging nations using the Panama Canal. Strange to say, of all those nations using the Panama Canal, the United States was paying next to the highest toll.

The suggestion has been made here today that this bill may lower freight rates. There will be no change that will affect the freight rates, in my judgment. The new rules propose to eliminate some space from the pay space heretofore charged for but which has been unsold or unoccupied space. No space is proposed to be eliminated that is actual load-carrying pay space. The elimination of such space from tonnage measurements will to that extent lower the tolls, but to a small amount. At most, on the average year the toll reduction will probably not exceed one dollar out of twenty-six, including this elimination of space that has not heretofore carried any pay load.

Under the present law some ships in ballast, without any load, have paid a higher toll than ships fully laden, because of the absurdities of the existing fixed arbitrary rules that could not be changed without an act of Congress. Under this proposed legislation the necessary flexibility of administrative management necessary for the proper conduct of a business enterprise by private business or by the Government will be much improved. Business management of the Canal requires authority to change rules to suit the evolution of ships. The ships of the world are in an evolutionary period, changes and improvements constantly being made. Fixed unchanging rules cannot properly control a constantly changing situation. If we write rules unchangeable except by act of Congress, every time a change is needed those interested, those profiting by unwarranted advantages of existing law, will persistently, year after year, resist any change. So in presenting this legislation this committee is doing a useful, constructive service for the country. They are helping Uncle Sam to conduct his business in a just and businesslike way.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I made some inquiries a little while ago purely for information about the passenger-tolls rate of $1.50. I understand that is existing law today.

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. It has never been exercised?

Mr. LEA. No. That has always been the law. It was anticipated the time might come when the passenger traffic would become so great and, perhaps, the ship devoted so much to passenger traffic that it would be desirable to exercise that power, but the Government has never exercised it, and the indications are that, perhaps, it will never be exercised.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk may read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 412 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, approved June 19, 1934, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Tolls on merchant vessels, Army and Navy transports, colliers, hospital ships, supply ships, and yachts shall be based on net vessel-tons of 100 cubic feet each of actual earning capacity determined in accordance with the Rules for the Measurement of Vessels for the Panama Canal prescribed by the President and as may be modified by him from time to time by proclamation, and tolls on other floating craft shall be based on displacement tonnage. The rate of tolls on laden vessels shall not exceed $1, nor be less than $0.75 per net vessel-ton as determined under the aforesaid rules, and on vessels in ballast without passengers or cargo the rate may be less than the rate of tolls for vessels with passengers or cargo. In addition to the tolls based on measurement or displacement tonnage, tolls may be levied on passengers at rates not to exceed $1.50 for each passenger. The levy of tolls is subject to the provisions of article XIX of the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, entered into November 18, 1903, and of article I of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Colombia proclaimed March 30, 1922."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect and be enforced on and after January 1, 1938.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: On page 2, in line 16, strike out the word "January" and insert the word "March."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. CANCER CONTROL

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a copy of a resolution that I am introducing, calling upon the President to set aside the month of April every year as cancer-control month, in order that the Governors of the States and doctors and everyone in the country may unite in spreading the gospel of cancer control and information thereon. I trust this resolution will be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation setting apart the month of April of each year as cancer-control month, and to invite annually the Governors of the several States and Territories and possessions of the United States to issue proclamations for like purposes. It is requested that such proclamations invite the medical profession, the press, and all agencies and individuals interested in a national program for the control of the disease of cancer, by education and other cooperative means, to unite during the month in a public dedication to such a program and in a concerted effort to impress upon the people of the Nation the necessity of such a program.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the Members of this House passed a bill providing for a cancer institute to be located in Washington, D. C. It was a very meritorious measure, and I was delighted that it was given the unanimous approval it deserved.

Today I am introducing a joint resolution calling upon the President to designate the month of April of each year as a period during which the American people and the medical profession should unite in a drive to control this disease through education and other cooperative means.

A few weeks ago I called the attention of the House to the wonderful work being done by the field army of the American Society for the Control of Cancer. At that time I tried to bring out clearly the vital importance of informing the public along the lines of cancer education. The medical authorities assure us that most cases of cancer, when taken in the early stage, are curable. The great problem—and it is a most difficult one, indeed—is to allay the fear, the great terror that most persons have of this dread disease. Through education fears can be calmed, people can be persuaded to submit to examinations and to treatment, and the very alarming increase in the number of cancer deaths can be stopped.

Few of us realize fully how prevalent the disease is and how fast it is increasing in this country. The medical authorities tell us that cancer is second in the list of deadly diseases. In 1910 it was sixth. In 1935 no less than 153,000 persons died of cancer in the United States. Those alarming figures show us the vital need for education and organized work against the scourge.

The American Society for the Control of Cancer, of which the eminent Dr. Clarence C. Little is the managing director, is the instrumentality through which such organized effort is being made. As a part of this organization, the Women's Field Army, headed by the able Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, is doing its part by reaching out into the women's clubs and organizations, obtaining their interest and cooperation in bringing into the open the thousands and thousands of cases which are hidden through fear and terror. It is a great work, an unselfish, charitable task. If this Congress can help in it, if by any act of Congress, can lend its hand in assistance, I know it will do so.

So little comparably is known of the treatment of the disease after it has gained a foothold upon the human system that the only hope is to take advantage of it in its early stages when it is curable. To find these early cases is the problem—to make America conscious of the fact that cancer is curable in its incipient stage. The estimate of the medical authorities that 300,000 women in this country have cancer is a challenge to each and every one of us, a challenge to take up arms against ignorance and fear.

This resolution I have presented is a suggestion made by one of the leaders in this fight against cancer. It is felt that if the President will add his voice to the appeal it will be helpful. It will make the task much easier to have the Chief Executive designate 1 month of the year as cancer month, when the efforts of all of the organizations can be concentrated in one great drive. It is no great thing to ask of Congress, but it will be a tremendous help to those who are so unselfishly giving of their time and their energies to the campaign. I hope so much that Congress will take favorable action upon my resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief letter from a constituent on the subject of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] is recognized for 30 minutes. Is the gentleman present? [After a pause.] The gentleman from Mississippi does not seem to be present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SAFETY AT SEA

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably several bills. Among them are two relating to safety at sea.

We were distressed yesterday by the news of the accident on Chesapeake Bay. One of the bills, Senate bill 2874, provides for the deposit in a safe place ashore of the names and addresses of passengers, requiring that they shall register as they would at a hotel on land, so that there may be knowledge of the persons who are aboard the vessels.

The second bill, Senate bill 2580, is one which for 2 years has received the attention of the Committee on Commerce. The details of it were worked out by a technical committee headed by Admiral Rock. It has to do with the construction of new ships and the repair of old ones in order that there may be safety at sea. Likewise, it provides that on every new ship built there shall be such quarters that the crew may live under decent conditions and surroundings.

I ask to have the bills placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bills will be received and placed on the calendar.

(The bills reported by Mr. COPELAND are listed under the heading "Reports of Committees.")

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] has the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I understand the parliamentary situation to be that the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is pending. If the Senator desires a vote on that amendment now, I will yield the floor, in order that a vote may be taken on the amendment, if I may have the floor after the vote on that amendment shall have been taken.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask if the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to press for a vote on his amendment at once?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

THE POSITION THE PRESIDENT AND ADMINISTRATION SHOULD ASSUME AS TO THE CONFLICT BETWEEN JAPAN AND CHINA UNDER NEUTRALITY ACT

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, with the understanding on the part of the Senators who would have had a right to recognition, who announce they yield to me, I take the liberty to express myself upon a matter that does not touch the pending amendment of the able Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from Nevada, both of whom so courteously yield to me at this time. Mr. President, certain reputable publications of a very high order and certain sources which we are called upon to respect by virtue of their high authority seem to assail the President and our Government because the President will not take an immediate active position in assertion of authority in the conflict between China and Japan.

It is asserted in these criticisms that it is our duty to enforce the provisions of the law termed our Neutrality Act. Particularly it is urged that the President should make an open declaration that war is pending between China and Japan. Then from such declaration certain other conduct on the part of the United States necessarily should follow under our law and in the protection of our rights.

The able chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. PITTMAN] lately issued a statement to the public, pointing out very clearly that the moment the President took any action of that kind he would be in a position that would almost imperil, certainly embarrass, his efforts now being made, wherever possible, to bring about peace between these contending forces. As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I endorse the expressions of its chairman.

But, Mr. President, I take the liberty at this moment to invite the attention of our country to a situation of which it seems certain of our people are wholly unconscious.

I assert that the moment the President declared there was war within the meaning of our Neutrality Act, the next step is clear. It is that when the declaration is made and there is a prohibition upon our merchants and businessmen, particularly our shippers, for any further supply of goods to the countries of the contending forces, from that time on every form of trade becomes "illegal" and we are subject at once to our ships being seized and those American citizens who are upon the ships being arrested and detained and repressed and impressed in a manner after the order and processes of war.

The hour such a condition should arise America would find herself in conflict both with China and with Japan. Our country, desiring peace, would not only have destroyed the peace so far as the prospect of it with those two countries is concerned but we would open ourselves to the possibility of personal conflict. America would be at war with the Orient.

Mr. President, I observe many of our good Christian friends representing the churches in sections of the Nation seem to hold that we have failed in our duty. We have ships upon the high seas on way to oriental lands, and merchants engaged in shipments legitimately made have much at stake. These products are to be delivered. In the meantime, perfectly innocent of any offense, they are delivered. The ships and their contents are at once charged to be, in their operations, munitions of war, as such subject to seizure, and the operatives of the vessel itself subject to arrest and impressment. One can readily see that the United States could not tolerate such a situation.

Here I beg to utter the belief that, while it may be true that we desire our land to remain neutral and we hope and exact of all our citizens that they shall not violate the neutrality law, yet if our citizens should enter the war zone, contending for their rights, however much they should differ in their views, and their ships should be seized, their property confiscated, themselves imprisoned, the United States would not stand very timidly or delicately upon the criticism, if you please, that her merchants and shippers had violated the neutrality law.

Under the arising of the status I describe, the spirit of America would rise to the defense of our people and at once, before we knew it, our whole country would become inflamed to defend America and protect its citizens, and we would again be in conflict. America in war, as it was under similar circumstances in the World War.

To avoid this baleful probability our Government is moving cautiously, as the able chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee pointed out, with the desire of maintaining peace rather than avoiding it. Therefore I beg to call attention to the fact that we are in a situation today of wholly obeying the law, for so long as the conflict appears to be between sections and factions instead of being between countries in whole as one against another, and since there has been no declaration of war or since there has been no movement of war by one complete country against another complete country, the President is only confronted with the fact that it is a factional conflict, and though it may be a regretful system that leads to multiple death, we are compelled to do that which enables us to stand upright before the law and perform our duty to all.

Therefore, for the protection of America and for the maintenance of the Neutrality Act as we have written it and to comply with its provisions, America still remains steadfast in her efforts to bring about mediation by her course of counsel. In her hopes we shall dream that we may yet come to the fulfillment of the holy scriptural appeal when these lands, both China and Japan and that of Spain, may yet travel the "ways of happiness" and take the "paths of peace."

Mr. President, I have expressed a view which I desired to bring forth to the Senate that the public may understand our relations. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], and I appreciate the courtesy of the Senate in allowing me at this time to present the subject.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] placed in the RECORD a statement of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, in connection with the subject he was then discussing. In reading the statement carefully I came quickly to the conclusion that it was a wise and statesmanlike utterance.

In this morning's Washington Post is a comment of some length entitled "Neutrality", by one Barnet Nover. It seems to me it would be worth while to place this article in the RECORD following the remarks submitted this morning by the Senator from Illinois. I ask that the article may be inserted at this point in the body of the RECORD, and I ask to have inserted immediately following that article an address which I made over the Mutual Broadcasting network, February 21, 1937, which I think is quite closely related to the subject matter which the Senator from Illinois just discussed.

There being no objection, the article and address were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of July 31, 1937]

NEUTRALITY

(By Barnet Nover)

SENATOR PITTMAN'S SECOND THOUGHTS

No better argument for a discretionary as opposed to a mandatory neutrality policy has ever been advanced than that put forth Thursday by Senator KEY PITTMAN, author of the more mandatory of the two neutrality bills which came up before Congress earlier in this session.

His statement was a plea in extenuation. The President has thus far refused to proclaim that a state of war exists in North China and has been criticized for ignoring what is an undoubted fact.

In defense of the President the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee argued that such a proclamation on Mr. Roosevelt's part, coming at this time, would do far more harm than good; that it would endanger American lives rather than help safeguard them; that it might result in a spreading of the present conflict rather than in limiting and localizing it; and, finally, that it might prevent the United States from employing its good offices to bring the present hostilities to a close.

The validity of these arguments is hardly open to question. And because this is so it is imperative that the President and the State Department, fully informed as they are regarding the situation in the Far East, enjoy complete freedom of action.

We have very real interests in that part of the world and the greatest of these is peace—peace not only for ourselves but for all nations. For a war on any scale is certain to create all manner of difficulties for us at present and in the future.

The essential question which our Government must ask is how these interests can best be safeguarded. With this no one quarrels. But what Congress in its blindness has done is to prevent any answers that may be given by the President and the State Department from being applied.

This year the original neutrality law of 1935 was reenacted with certain major changes. The law embodies a specific formula of action which the President must pursue once the existence of war is formally recognized, plus certain measures which, in his discretion, he may put into force.

War has now broken out in the Far East. The reality of that war is attested by the corpses of Chinese and Japanese soldiers at Peiping, Tientsin, and other places in North China; by the devastation produced by Japanese bombing planes; by the reinforcements now being hurried to the danger zone and by the statements of the leaders of both nations.

Certainly the war now raging in North China is every bit as real as was the war waged by Italy on Ethiopia in 1935–36, and that which for more than a year has made a cemetery of Spain.

In both of these instances the neutrality law was applied; in the case of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict it was applied with breathtaking promptness; in that of the Spanish civil war belatedly, and it may be ruinously, from the viewpoint of our ultimate interest as a democratic and peace-loving nation. But in any case, the precedent is there, ominous though it may be.

Senator PITTMAN points out that the Neutrality Act "grants to the President the exclusive jurisdiction in his sound judgment to determine when a state of war exists as between two or more countries."

That is true. But his implied contention that the President, by fiat, can decide that war is not war whenever it is embarrassing to the United States to recognize a reality, simply begs the question. For if it is wise for the President to have that power, then it is also the counsel of wisdom to give him the power to set aside the Neutrality Act altogether, no matter what the legal status of the conflict in North China may be.

This Senator PITTMAN is not yet prepared to admit. He only argues that it is in the present national interest to be casuistic regarding the war-proclaiming clause in the Neutrality Act, for if it is literally applied, harm may be done.

But that harm stems out of the circumstance that it is the Neutrality Act as a whole which is dangerous, since, once it is proclaimed, the President will no longer wholly possess that freedom of movement he needs properly and adequately to defend American interests.

Senator PITTMAN does, indeed, recognize that there is embodied in the law a definite series of limitations on the President's freedom. Should China or Japan declare war, he points out, then the Neutrality Act would have to be applied, so far as the sale of arms, munitions, and implements of war are concerned, and, at the President's discretion, with respect to the cash-and-carry provisions.

Now, it may no more be to this Nation's interest to impose such embargo on arms than it is to admit at this moment that a state of war exists. Yet the law becomes automatic as soon as a declaration of war has been issued.

It should be clear from this that we provide an incentive to whichever of the two contending powers is in a position to benefit by the American neutrality law, openly to declare war. That nation happens to be Japan. Hitherto Japan has rarely bothered with the formality of a war declaration before beginning hostilities. It hasn't bothered to go through the motions this time. But quite possibly it may, in order to make the United States its effective if unwilling ally.

Over such action on Japan's part we do not have the slightest measure of control. Which means that the determination of American policy at this critical moment lies not with Washington but with Tokyo.

Is there anything more absurb than such a situation? Overwhelmingly the American people are convinced that Japan today is the aggressor. Not the slightest interest would be served by Japan's victory; on the contrary very real American interests are certain to be damaged and possibly destroyed by Japan's imperialistic move in North China. And the impetus which another Japanese victory on the mainland of Asia would give to potential aggressors everywhere would only increase that international turmoil which threatens both peace and recovery. And yet our policy at the moment depends, in an important particular, not on what we may want to do but on what Japan does. Nothing better reveals the monstrous and dangerous nature of our miscalled neutrality law.

RADIO SPEECH OF HON. J. P. POPE, OF IDAHO, ON FEBRUARY 21, 1937

The so-called neutrality measure that is likely to be passed by Congress—the Pittman bill—contains both mandatory and discretionary provisions. It is mandatory in the sense of directing the President to proclaim an embargo on arms in the event of war between other nations, in prohibiting Americans from traveling on belligerent ships, in making unlawful the arming of our merchant ships, and in some other respects. It is discretionary in giving the President authority to define arms, ammunition, and implements of war; when and what war materials may be embargoed; when embargoes may apply to civil war; and the authority of the President to modify, in whole or in part, his proclamation as to war materials.

In these respects the score between mandatory and discretionary provisions in the measure is about even.

The Nye-Clark resolution, however, contains more mandatory provisions. It contains an express provision that all embargoes and other restraints must be applied to all belligerents alike. No distinction can be made as between the aggressor and the victim. The nations which violate a treaty—even a treaty with the United States—must be treated exactly the same as one which has observed every obligation. An invading nation, one which robs another of its territory and independence and slaughters its people in violation of its treaty obligations, must be treated with the same tender care as the victim. There is no discretion in the measure even to recognize these circumstances.

The moral question is not considered. Any idea of our national responsibility for world peace is ignored. The concept that war is a matter of universal concern finds no recognition in the measure. There is no condemnation of war as a means of settling disputes. There is merely the recognition that war exists. It is purely the conception of every nation for itself and the devil take the hindmost. There must be a good many people who are unwilling to embrace this conception of their country's position in world affairs.

Any legislation on this subject, it seems to me, should have two closely related objects—to keep our country out of war and to assist in preventing or stopping other wars. In modern times these objects are inherently related. They are as closely related as those of a house owner who wants to protect his own house from fire and to prevent or stop his neighbor's fires.

The Nye-Clark measure seeks to keep us out of war by insulating ourselves. It has no regard for the other object of helping to prevent or stop wars among our neighbors, and it fails to give the President any power to accomplish that object.

To use the analogy of the house owner again, it seeks to protect our own house by using fireproof materials but utterly ignores the danger in the burning of our neighbors' houses, and it refuses to recognize or support a fire department which seeks to prevent or stop the fire.

To use another analogy, it seeks to establish a quarantine against an epidemic of disease but refuses to recognize any obligation to support the health department which seeks to find the cause and to prevent the epidemic.

I am heartily in favor of using fireproof materials and establishing quarantines against diseases, but I think it entirely insufficient to rely upon these measures alone for safety. I believe it is the duty of every good citizen to support the fire department and the health department; at least he ought not to interfere with their work.

It is all very well for the citizen in the community to mind his own business and stay out of his neighbor's quarrels, but he should support the police and the courts in their efforts to settle these quarrels before they involve the whole neighborhood; and he ought not to throw stones at the policemen.

I find myself in hearty accord with the demands of the American Legion for legislation that will take the profits out of war and to conscript wealth and industry along with the conscription of our boys in time of war. This would be a long step toward the prevention of war. It tends to remove the incentive on the part of certain powerful groups to encourage war. But taking the profit out of war and conscripting wealth will not alone be a sufficient safeguard. Tribes and nations fought with their hands and with clubs before any profits were made from the manufacture of arms.

About 10 years ago the United States sponsored the Pact of Paris, which condemned war as an instrumentality of national policy and declared that all disputes should be settled by peaceful means. Practically all of the other nations of the world signed our pact. This was a step toward the building of a fire department, so to speak. It expressed our concern for peace everywhere in the world. It implied our condemnation of any nation that violated the pact and resorted to war. It further implied that some joint action would be taken in case of violation of the treaty. At least, it implied the obligation of nations to consult as to what peaceful joint action might be taken against the nation violating the pact.

When Japan violated this treaty and invaded Manchukuo, Secretary Stimson, much to his credit, recognized our responsibility under the treaty and reminded Japan of its violation of the pact, and, to an extent, we cooperated with other nations to make it effective. Even to this day the fruits of the Japanese aggression have not been recognized by the United States.

When Italy invaded Ethiopia in violation of the pact, Secretary Hull called attention to the obligations of the treaty; but, of course, Italy paid no attention to it. During the course of the invasion the Secretary tried to persuade exporters of oil to refrain from shipping to the belligerents, which, in fact, meant limiting exports to Italy, the aggressor nation. Under the law, as it then existed, he had no authority to place an embargo on oil or on any other war materials, and ever-increasing quantities of oil were sold to Italy by our exporters. Under the circumstances, no oil could be sold to Ethiopia. The effect was that the United States furnished large quantities of war materials to Italy, the aggressor, and none to Ethiopia, the victim. But this was not the worst of it. The other nations which tried to impose sanctions on Italy by placing embargoes upon necessary war materials were handicapped by our action in shipping such war materials without limit. Without the cooperation of the United States, sanctions could not be and were not made effective, and Italy destroyed the ancient and independent Ethiopian Nation.

The pact of Paris, therefore, proved utterly useless. There were no means provided for its use. There was no machinery to make it effective. No legislation had ever been passed to implement it.

Recently, at Buenos Aires, a splendid effort, in harmony with the Kellogg Pact, was made by the American States. A treaty was entered into providing for consultation in the event of a threat of war on this hemisphere, implying joint action toward the prevention of war. This was a definite step toward making the principle laid down in the pact of Paris effective. To use our analogies once more, the nations were beginning to build a fire department or a public-health service and were not relying entirely upon fireproof materials and quarantines.

The Nye-Clark resolution does not recognize the spirit of the Buenos Aires Convention. It ignores the idea of consultation. It completely disregards the pact of Paris.

Legislation on the subject of neutrality should recognize the progress that has been made toward cooperative efforts to prevent wars and to stop them after they have begun. This could be done by permitting an embargo to be proclaimed by the President against all belligerents in the event of war until a consultation could be held by the signatories of the pact of Paris, and in the event these nations agreed upon the aggressor, the President could remove the embargo from the victim of the aggression.

This would be an act of justice, would help to shorten the war in most cases, and would serve notice upon all would-be aggressors that they need not expect help from the United States in their aggressions. It would have a tendency to discourage international banditry. It would recognize some responsibility of the United States, the most powerful nation on the earth, toward peace in the world, and would be the most effective means of keeping our country out of war.

I am heartily in accord with the resolution of the Conference for the Cause and Cure of War recently held in Chicago. There more than 600 representatives of hundreds of thousands of good citizens used this language:

"This country shall consult with the other nations signatory to the pact of Paris whenever there is a threat of war. An immediate impartial embargo shall be declared against the nations directly involved in the threat to peace. The embargo shall include munitions, credits, and essential war materials. The embargo may be removed by the President from a nation which, as a result of the consultation, is agreed to be the victim of aggression."

The course pointed out by the American Legion and by the Cause and Cure of War Convention presents to us a constructive program for keeping out of war. That, in my opinion, is far better than a purely negative program of mandatory neutrality.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair-labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment on page 51, line 3, after the word "agriculture", to insert a semicolon and the following:

Or any person whose compensation is paid upon a commission basis exclusively.

My amendment would exempt commission men or commission salesmen who are not working for any kind of wage or salary. We know that the time of such a salesman is his own. He can work as he pleases. He can work an hour or two in the morning and then quit for the day. He might make enough in 1 or 2 days to keep him for months. If such salesmen come within the terms of the bill, my amendment would provide an exemption in their case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I am opposed to it lest it might provide a device whereby employers could, through a commission arrangement, take themselves out from under the terms of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In just a moment.

So far as persons who are ordinarily hired upon a commission basis are concerned, I would have no objection to their being exempted from the provisions of the bill. What I fear, however, is that through arrangements which may be made by employers persons who are not ordinarily working upon a commission basis may be employed under such arrangements when obviously they should be under the terms of the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Would it not be possible under the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to bring about collusion between employers and employees and thus completely destroy the desired effect of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is what I fear. In that connection I invite attention to the fact that the board is given power under the terms of the bill as it now stands to grant exemptions from its provisions. That is found on page 64 in the following language:

Suitable treatment of other cases or classes of cases which, because of the nature and character of the employment, justify special treatment.

I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Pennsylvania does not desire to have the board pass upon it. He wants the Congress of the United States to pass upon it. I do not believe in the delegation of our powers to a board to pass on something that we ourselves can act upon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We are dealing here, however, with a situation affecting certain classes or kinds of employment which obviously should not come within the terms of the bill. However, as I stated yesterday in connection with an amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], in adopting broad, sweeping exemptions there is grave danger that means may be provided whereby employers who desire to defeat the purposes of the bill may avail themselves of devices of that kind under general exemption amendments. I contend that the board has full power to grant exemptions in cases of this nature, and therefore that in passing on the bill we should be very careful and should reject amendments so sweeping in their nature that they may become a device which will defeat the purposes of the proposed legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] to the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I inquire if the Senator from Pennsylvania desires a vote on his other amendment?

Mr. DAVIS. I have several small amendments, which it will take just a very few minutes to dispose of.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I had the floor last evening at the time of taking the recess. I yielded the floor to the Senator from Pennsylvania so that a vote might be taken on his amendment. Now I desire the floor for the purpose of having a vote taken on an amendment I am offering. If I may have it now, I shall be through in just a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 65, beginning in line 3, it is proposed to strike out all of section 8, in the following words:

SEC. 8. (a) Whenever the Board shall determine that any substandard labor condition exists in the production of goods in one State and that such goods compete to a substantial extent in that State with other goods produced in another State and sold or transported in interstate commerce, in the production of which such substandard labor condition does not exist, the Board shall make an order requiring the elimination of such substandard labor condition and the maintenance of the appropriate fair labor standard in the production of goods which so compete.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to employ any employee in violation of any term or provision of an order of the Board made under this section.

(c) The United States Tariff Commission (1) upon request of the President, or (2) upon resolution of either or both Houses of Congress, or (3) upon request of the Board, or (4) upon its own motion, or (5) when in the judgment of the Commission there is good and sufficient reason therefor, upon application of any interested party, shall investigate the differences resulting from the operation of this act in the costs of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article, with a view to determining whether or not an increase should be made in the duty upon such foreign article for the purpose of equalizing such differences.

(d) All provisions of law applicable with respect to investigations under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, including the provisions applicable to reports of the Commission and proclamations by the President, shall, insofar as they are not inconsistent with this section, be applicable in like manner with respect to investigations under this section.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 8. The Labor Standards Board shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of those substandard labor conditions which have been defined as oppressive, and the Secretary of the Treasury is thereafter directed to refuse or deny entry to goods, wares, or merchandise produced under such substandard labor conditions, which goods, wares, or merchandise are comparable to or competitive with similar goods, wares, or merchandise produced in the United States under fair labor conditions as herein defined. In the event of any complaint or dispute arising as to whether such goods, wares, or merchandise seeking entry were produced under substandard labor conditions, as herein defined, the Labor Standards Board shall make a thorough investigation, and the decision of said Board shall be conclusive, shall be in writing, and shall be a matter of public record and open to public inspection.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, it has been stated that if this amendment should be adopted, it might create an embargo; but, as I view the situation, the bill we are considering virtually creates an embargo as between respective States. There is nothing in the bill we are considering which affects the manufacture or sale of goods within the confines of a State. We cannot touch that subject. It is only when goods become the subject of interstate commerce that Congress has a right to act.

We now seek to protect labor, to raise labor standards, to raise labor's earning power, and to reduce the hours during which labor shall serve. The amendment proposes that manufactured or processed goods coming to this country, in competition with American goods from countries where the standards of labor and living and wage hours are below our standards, shall not be permitted entry. In other words, the amendment would protect American labor and American industry from products and commodities offered at our door that would destroy and have been destroying American labor and American industry.

Today imports of dairy products are virtually tearing down the dairy industry of this country. Other products offered to us from abroad, which we are accepting, are manufactured and processed and produced under conditions and standards so low that they can even go through the tariff wall we have created, and come into the United States in competition with the products of American labor and American industry.

If we are serious about this matter, if this measure is for the purpose of protecting American labor and at the same time holding the standard of American living where we think it should be, why should we allow American labor to come in competition with the labor of foreign countries in which the standard of living is so much under our standard of living? Why should we throw American labor in continual competition with an influx of commodities manufactured in countries whose workers perhaps live on a handful of rice a day, and sleep on a mat?

Today our markets are flooded with commodities and produce that come in competition with American industry every day of the year, and every one of them is offered in our markets at a price less than for which we can produce it, because our standards of living, our wages, and our hours are different; and the countries offering them are the greatest competitors with American labor that we have today.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest to the Senator that the text of the bill confesses the precise matters the Senator has defined, but it totally fails to provide a remedy for them, because by referring the operation back to the elastic tariff it leaves the entire free list, which includes two-thirds of our imports, entirely out of reach; it leaves all the Hull treaties out of reach, and does not touch 5 percent of the problem to which the Senator is addressing himself.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am entirely in accord with the expressions of the Senator from Michigan. I am serious about this amendment, because I want to protect American labor by every means and every method we have at our disposal. If we are serious in wanting to do that how can we, while we embargo our own products within given State lines, thereby depriving such products of an opportunity to go into interstate commerce because they are made and manufactured and processed and produced under conditions which we think are not right or proper or progressive, yet at the same time say to foreign countries, "Bring on your goods. We will accept them, although they will tear down every standard of living we are trying to establish by legislation"?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the Senator comment on the effect his amendment would have, if adopted, on the reciprocal-trade agreements which have been negotiated?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to answer the Senator's question in this wise: My view of the reciprocal-trade agreements has been that they have continuously impaired and torn down the use of American products. I refer to dairy products; I refer to agricultural products. Only a few days ago I was informed—and I take my information to be fairly correct—that Argentine corn, imported from the Argentine, is today being sold and used in Indiana, one of the great corn-producing States of the Union; and I know that dairy products are coming in and destroying the domestic dairy industry. Yet we say that we are going to raise the standard of living; we are going to increase wages. Every time we raise wages—and we should raise wages and hold them up—and every time we reduce the hours of toil, we give a further avenue, a greater avenue, if you please, to competition from foreign-made products that come in from countries where there are no standards of wages, and where there is no limitation of hours, and where the one aim and object of those who manufacture the products is that printed somewhere on them shall be the words "made in"—somewhere. That is the aim and object. Men in those countries work because they love their countries, and they live for their countries, and they are willing to live on a handful of rice a day, because those are their countries. They do not care about the hours of labor or the standards of living of this country, and they send their commodities into our markets to destroy the possibility of our toilers earning an honest living under American standards.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. I am wondering if the Senator from Nevada caught the full effect of the question just propounded to him.

Under the tariff treaties our Government has bound our tariffs to certain agreed standards or levels. In view of those contractual obligations in the tariff treaties, how would it be possible to obtain any protection for American labor either under the plan that is proposed in the bill itself or under the Senator's plan?

It seems to me that America is irrevocably on record with respect to the duties upon certain commodities, and that, regardless of the effect upon our own domestic economy or upon our own people, so long as those treaties are the law of the land, neither the proposal of the bill nor the proposal in the Senator's amendment will be of any avail to America.

Mr. McCARRAN. Excepting that I hope by this amendment, if it should be adopted as a part of the bill, so to change the character of the reciprocal-trade agreements that they may protect American industries.

Mr. STEIWER. Let me say to the Senator that I am not opposing his amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand.

Mr. STEIWER. I think I shall vote for it. As between the two proposals—namely, the one suggested by the Senator from Nevada and the one which is included in the bill—I believe I prefer the Senator's proposal; and yet, as I stand here, I have a feeling of utter futility. It seems to me that by an improvident system of reciprocal-trade agreements we have so bound ourselves that if foreign competition works havoc to American industry by reason of the higher standards of wages and better standards of hours fixed in this bill, we are utterly helpless. I hope I am wrong in that respect.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error. I do not think the reciprocal-trade agreements bind Congress against making any law that it desires to make with reference to tariffs. Neither trade agreements nor even treaties are beyond the reach of legislation subsequently enacted. Even a treaty cannot bind Congress. Congress can pass an act, and the act being passed subsequent to the treaty, is binding against the treaty.

Mr. STEIWER. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me to make one observation in respect to that?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the Senator from Idaho is entirely correct. Technically Congress has a right to enact such legislation; but there still remains the matter of our moral obligation under the treaty, and there still remains the possibility that a foreign nation might proceed against us for our violation of the treaty. I think there is one case in history where the American Government paid damages to a foreign nation by reason of its violation of a treaty which had been made prior to that time.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt of the ability to pass a statute which would modify these agreements, but I know perfectly well they will not be modified.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, at least we can make the best effort Congress has within its power at least to show the intention of Congress to protect American industries and American labor.

I shall not hold the Senate any longer on this exceedingly important matter, as it is so well known and understood. I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is my purpose, in taking the floor, to occupy but a moment or two, as I am compelled to attend a committee meeting which is considering important measures relating to the District of Columbia.

The bill before the Senate contains provisions with which I do not agree. If enacted into law, it will profoundly affect political and economic conditions. It is believed by many to be an encroachment upon the rights of sovereign States as well as upon the rights of individuals. That it will interfere with purely intrastate activities I think is conceded, and to that extent, it seems to me, must be regarded as invalid.

I know the futility of attempting to resist the tide of centralization that is sweeping over our country. The Federal Government is extending its authority into fields which are exclusively, under our form of government, to be appropriated by the States, local communities, and individuals. But demands are being made, that seem to be irresistible, that the Federal Government take control over the economic, industrial, and political life of the American people. It is to control all domestic relations and to point the paths in which individuals shall walk and the political, industrial, and economic policies which are to be followed in every part of our land.

The view is entertained by some that it is more important to have a powerful national government, with almost uncontrolled authority over States and individuals, than to preserve the democratic form of government established by the founders of the Republic, with sovereign and independent States, within which its citizens may enjoy the fullest measure of liberty and the fruits of their own efforts. I fear efforts are being made to impose upon the American people views and policies, political and economic, alien to our institutions and hostile to genuine democratic institutions.

In this period when world-wide movements are centralizing political and economic authority and power, it is to be hoped that the people in this Republic will successfully resist all efforts to bring them and this Republic within the circle of such malign influences.

Mr. President, I am not convinced that the measure before us will prove advantageous to labor or beneficial to the American people. It will produce a powerful bureaucracy which, in my opinion, will be not only distasteful but in the end highly repugnant to the American people. Some of its unwise, if not dangerous, features have been adverted to by Senators who have spoken, and I have no desire to traverse the fields which they have covered.

I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a telegram which I received this morning from James Truslow Adams, an American historian of note. I do not know the political affiliations of Professor Adams, but it seems to me that the telegram challenges attention to some features of the bill which are worthy of consideration. I send the telegram to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 30, 1937.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

At the request of Members of the Congress deeply concerned about the constitutional aspects of recently suggested legislation, I have made a careful study of the Black-Connery bill.

In my opinion, it will give the President, through a board appointed by him, almost complete power of economic life and death over every individual concern and employer in the country, and also over economic life of every section of the country, as well as control over the freedom of the press and the radio. One employer could be ruined for the benefit of another, one industry for another, one section for another.

The powers granted are unbelievably great. Under the clause 23, an employer of 2,000 men could be fined a million dollars and sent to jail for a thousand years for violating this act.

Labor in this country has achieved its rightful place of participation in the economic sphere by collective action under self-guidance. It would be a bitter day for American labor if this self-determination were to be transferred to a governmental bureau which has the power to oppress and suppress labor activities just as much as it has the power to advance or hinder the cause of management.

The power of life and death created by this bill operates two ways—it is as applicable to labor as it is to industry, and there is no bureau, board, or agency, no matter how well intentioned, that should be given such opportunity or such a responsibility.

There should be time for the public opinion to crystallize and make itself heard, and for Congress to consider and hold hearings on the amended bill. In its present form this bill practically places the future of every American employer and ordinary citizen under the control of the President and of a board of his appointees who will hold vast and unusual powers.

I urge that consideration of this bill be put over to the next session, when issues can be carried to the country. Otherwise that it be returned to committee and Congress remain in session long enough for full public discussion of this epoch-making bill.

JAMES TRUSLOW ADAMS.

Mr. KING. I also ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a communication which appeared in this morning's New York Times, written by William S. Bennet, who, as I recall, was formerly a Congressman from the State of New York.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed, as follows:

FAULTS FOUND IN BLACK-CONNERY BILL—MEASURE, IT IS HELD, WOULD INCREASE COSTS AND IMPOSE UNWORKABLE CONTROL ON INDUSTRY

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Having read several times, and carefully, Senator BLACK's letter appearing on your editorial page July 25, the impression it leaves on me is that the Senator has demonstrated that his bill should be very thoroughly studied before action is asked.

It is proposed as "a modest beginning of a much-needed effort to increase America's capacity to consume", and as "intended to * * * benefit not only the industrial worker but the whole of American industry and agriculture." Anything like that necessarily affects the whole 127,000,000 of us. Plans, no matter how well intentioned, affecting 127,000,000 people ought to be studied not only carefully but dispassionately.

It is easy for the best-intentioned men to be wrong. Everyone, including Senator BLACK in his letter, now points out the defects in N. R. A. Still, if my recollection serves me correctly, the Senator not only voted for it in 1933 but spoke for it. But he was not alone. A large and important portion of employers were for N. R. A. They assisted in drafting the bill. The then president of the United States Chamber of Commerce was the chief witness for the bill before the Ways and Means Committee. It became a law June 16, 1933, with public sentiment largely supporting it, but by April 19, 1935, its failure had become so evident that the Senate, I think, unanimously, in passing a resolution continuing it for a few months, took away practically all its power.

CAREFUL SCANNING INDICATED

What happened under that recent, well-intentioned legislation rather leads us to look carefully at all proposed industrial legislation, particularly when it contains provisions which we all have seen fail when contained in other well-intentioned legislation. Besides, our present industrial system is producing results which cannot be ignored. The Senator himself says: "We have been gradually—but all too slowly—reducing hours and raising the real standard of living of our lowest-paid workers for years." Omitting the rhetorical "but all too slowly", which is unprovable as a fact, the Senator's statement is correct.

President Roosevelt, on July 4, 1937, said to his Dutchess County neighbors: "This has been a good Fourth of July for the country. We are so much better off in the United States than in a whole lot of other nations of the world that I wish we could pass some of our poise on to them." That's true, too.

It has taken us over 250 years to build up, side by side, our governmental, industrial, and agricultural systems. Our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution are a part of the structure, and the whole is the work of a vigorous, thinking people enjoying the largest measure of ordered liberty of any people on the earth. Statisticians and economists state the following to be facts:

1. Employment in United States manufacturing today is at the highest point in history, with 500,000 more persons on the pay rolls than in 1929 and 5,000,000 more employed than at the low point of 1932.

2. The worker's share of the national income has steadily increased from 35 percent in 1850 to over 66 percent today.

3. Fourteen million American families own the homes in which they live; and there are more than 44,000,000 savings accounts and more than 118,000,000 insurance policies in effect.

4. Jobs in America have increased faster than a swiftly growing population. Since 1879, 18 new manufacturing industries alone have created, directly and indirectly, an estimated 10,000,000 new jobs.

SHORTER WORKWEEK

5. The average workweek in manufacturing industry has declined from 60 hours a week in 1890 to slightly more than 40 hours a week today.

6. American industry spends $750,000 each working day in research, employs 35,000 men and women seeking new and better products which make for new and better jobs.

7. Child labor has shown a striking decline since 1900, the number of children employed in manufacturing industry today amounting to but one-half of 1 percent of total manufacturing employment. All the time there are fewer and fewer children at work and more and more at school.

8. The indirect employment provided by manufacturing industry is equally as important as direct employment. Fifty thousand food manufacturing establishments, for example, buy raw materials from some 6,000,000 farmers and 75,000 fishermen; provide business for 45,000 wholesale establishments and approximately 500,000 retailers of food products.

9. Profits in American industry for the 11-year period 1923–33, including both boom and depression years, averaged but 4 percent of capital invested.

10. For every worker in manufacturing industry there is a capital investment of approximately $7,600 in tools, land, buildings, machinery, and the like.

Our present system of free men at liberty to plan and think resulted, between 1879 and 1929, in the following new industries, each based on invention: Electrical machinery, apparatus, and supplies; motor vehicles, not including motorcycles; motor vehicle bodies and parts; rubber tires and inner tubes; manufacture of gasoline; rayon and allied products; manufactured ice; aluminum manufactures; typewriters and parts; mechanical refrigerators; cash registers and adding and computing machines; oil, cake, and meal, cottonseed; aircrafts and parts; phonographs; photographic apparatus and materials; motion-picture apparatus; asbestos products, and fountain pens.

In 1929 these 18 new industries employed, directly, 1,123,314 wage earners—almost one-seventh of all the labor employed in manufacturing in 1929. All of the other countries of the world put together cannot match that record of new inventions in those 50 years.

Over against this record of achievement the Senator offers a 40-hour week in a limited number of industries. But the National Industrial Conference Board says that in May this year, in manufacturing industries, the average workweek was 40.6 hours. There is nothing much to fuss over in 36 minutes a week.

WAGES GOING UP

But, says Senator BLACK, the evidence indicates that something over 3,000,000 people are getting less than 40 cents an hour. There are no available statistics to support this. How much less? The Senator does not say. Are these 3,000,000 in factories? The Senator does not say. Besides wages are going up anyway. In 25 representative manufacturing industries the average hourly earnings in May 1937 were nearly 16 percent higher than in 1929. We are headed in the right direction as to wages.

Labor unions, too, have been vigilant. They have always got labor more wage increases than legislation has. That is their job. I have not been able to find any statistical basis for the Senator's statement, "It is estimated that individual productivity—an individual's ability to produce if given the chance—has increased more than 70 percent in the last 25 years. Yet there has been no comparable increase in the standard of living of the average man."

National Industrial Conference Board chart no. 72, dated May 14, gives the figures from 1914–37—23 years—and shows that production per wage earner in manufacturing industries rose during that period 46 percent, and the purchasing power of weekly earnings 48 percent. These figures do not bear out the Senator's statement.

The big trouble is the board to run the whole country. Thomas Jefferson said that our country was too big to be run from any one place. It was true when he said it, and it is true now. The late Gen. George W. Goethals said that the trouble with most boards is that they are long, narrow, and wooden.

You couldn't get action, during the World War, from the Railroad Administration. I left New York one night on the 5-hour sleeper trip to Washington and got there at 1 o'clock the next afternoon—7 hours late on a 5-hour trip. During the N. R. A., I was code counsel for the Chicago Retail Lumber Dealers Association. It took me from October 1933, to September 1934—11 months—to get approval for three unobjected rules.

GOVERNMENT BOARDS DISAPPROVED

During the World War our country spent a billion dollars in airplane production without getting one single plane to any European battle front. This was handled by a governmental board, too.

Government boards in industry simply don't work. Before he goes on with his bill the Senator ought to give us at least one instance where, in normal peacetimes, such as these, a Government board has worked better than private industry would have. He is proposing a revolution in industry and the burden of proof is on him.

Doubtless the Senator's bill is well intentioned. So was the Wagner labor-relations bill. That bill was to stop strikes. It hasn't. The N. R. A. was to revolutionize industry to the benefit of both employers and employees. It emphatically didn't.

The most certain thing that the Black-Connery bill would do in its present form would be to raise costs so that more foreign goods, produced by lower wages and longer hours, would come in. The House committee sees this and its text is claimed to contain provisions preventing it. They throw the reciprocal-treaty policy out of the window, but this is necessary, as the home market cannot be kept for American high-wage labor and given to foreign low-wage labor at one and the same time.

WILLIAM S. BENNET.

NEW YORK, July 29, 1937.

Mr. ELLENDER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah whether this is the same James Truslow Adams who, notwithstanding the fact that Thomas Jefferson was recognized as the most liberal, farsighted, and progressive statesman of his day, has written a book in which he has attempted to prove that Jefferson was a reactionary?

Mr. KING. The Senator, of course, may draw such conclusions from Professor Adams' writing as to him may seem proper. I have read his Epic of America and some of his historical writings. That does not mean that I agree with all of the views of Professor Adams any more than I endorse all of the views of our distinguished leader. I approve of some of the positions taken by him, but have disapproved of some of his views and policies.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator who now has the floor will recall that the Senate committee gave opportunity to any witness in the United States who requested to be heard on the pending bill, in spite of the statement of this gentleman. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether this is not the same James Truslow Adams who, during the campaign of 1936, attempted to persuade the people of this country that they should elect Governor Landon instead of President Roosevelt, on the basis of arguments similar to those which he has sent in this telegram?

Mr. KING. I do not know Professor Adams' political affiliations. I assume that the Senator is disposed to condemn those who do not agree with him and condemns everyone who supported Mr. Landon. Personally, I opposed Mr. Landon, but I know that many patriotic people voted for him.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the Senator has not answered the question, so I assume he does not care to admit in this body that he did present a telegram sent by a gentleman who actively and urgently insisted to the people of this country that President Roosevelt should be defeated and that Governor Landon should be elected, and that his arguments then were along the same line that has been presented in this telegram.

Mr. KING. I make no admission whatever. I do not know what the attitude of Professor Adams was during the last campaign or whom he supported. If the Senator says with full knowledge—and apparently he has been investigating Professor Adams—that he supported Mr. Landon, the Senator is entitled to all the pleasure and joy he can derive from that investigation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield just once more?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I did not come into personal contact with Mr. Adams, but I recall reading some of the statements he made at that time. I also recall that he wrote——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am not particularly interested in the discussion going on, but does the making of these speeches in the time of another Senator constitute, under the rule, the making of speeches upon the bill or the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In strict compliance with the rule, the Senator from Louisiana, who has the floor, would have no right to yield for these speeches, and he would jeopardize his chance of making a speech.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will state that I asked the question because, by unanimous consent of all present, a telegram was read into the RECORD, and in view of that I believed that the question I asked would be pertinent.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The question degenerated into a speech. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was out of order.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from California may be correct——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is out of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if there is further yielding, I shall ask that the Senator lose the floor under the rule.

Mr. BLACK. I shall not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate very long with a discussion of the pending amendment, for the reason that the same subject matter now at issue was debated on this floor a few days ago and overwhelmingly rejected by this body. It will be recalled that on last Wednesday the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] offered an amendment prohibiting the importation of any goods of any class into the United States from any foreign country, during any calendar year, in excess of the 5-year average annual volume of that class of goods imported into our country, by any country, unless such excess was manufactured under like or better standards than those provided for in the bill we are now considering.

The amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] which is now at issue, is more drastic than the Lodge amendment, for the reason that it virtually closes our doors to the importation of any foreign goods that are not manufactured under the same labor standards that would prevail in this country should the bill under discussion become law. The McCarran amendment provides that—

> The Labor Standards Board shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of those substandard labor conditions which have been defined as oppressive, and the Secretary of the Treasury is thereafter directed to refuse or deny entry to goods, wares, or merchandise produced under such substandard labor conditions, which goods, wares, or merchandise are comparable to or competitive with similar goods, wares, or merchandise produced in the United States under fair labor conditions as herein defined. In the event of any complaint or dispute arising as to whether such goods, wares, or merchandise seeking entry were produced under substandard labor conditions, as herein defined, the Labor Standards Board shall make a thorough investigation, and the decision of said Board shall be conclusive, shall be in writing, and shall be a matter of public record and open to public inspection.

It is obvious that the amendment would prevent the importation of goods from any foreign country. It amounts to an embargo on foreign goods. It says in effect to foreign producers: "It makes no difference what your handicaps are, you must raise the standards of living of your workers at once to the level of this country and unless you do so, do not ship any of your goods to us."

That, of course, sounds good. I would like for us to be in a position to enact a law with such provisions and make it effective. Remember this: It is not very practical for us to be able to sell our goods to foreign countries unless we in turn buy from them. We have a very healthy foreign trade at this time, and without it I am positive that we would have a good deal more unemployment than we now have. The workingman would suffer, and I feel confident that it is better to attempt to protect him, as far as we can, through our present tariff laws rather than by the method suggested by the Senator from Nevada. It would please me very much if our country were self-sustaining and if it could consume all it produces. It would doubtless be to the advantage of labor if we would keep out foreign competition, but, as I see it, such a condition cannot exist. We must buy foreign goods in order to be able to sell our own surplus merchandise. We must maintain the good will of our foreign neighbors in order to have them buy our products. I feel confident that if we should close our doors to their trade it would mean immediate isolation, and I cannot but see disaster to our industries and in turn to the American workingman. Let us improve our standards for labor by using the same method as in the past, through the medium of the tariff, as I have heretofore stated.

There is a provision in the pending amendment for investigations by the board of labor standards abroad. Such a proposal would not be feasible, were it desirable. We have had considerable experience in foreign tariff investigations. The task imposed in this amendment would require thousands of employees to go abroad for this purpose, and I am certain that it would lead to much ill feeling.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Regardless of the constitutional power of Congress to legislate right in the face of the treaties entered into between the President and foreign countries lowering the tariff rates on goods, I ask the Senator from Louisiana if he thinks that the United States of America could afford as a matter of good faith and honor and respectability in the world to legislate in any manner that would abrogate or derogate those agreements entered into between the President of the United States and foreign countries, for the purpose of protecting labor, after we have imposed these additional costs upon labor that this bill carries?

Mr. ELLENDER. It morally could not and should not. An abrogation of such agreements on our part would show bad faith and would promote ill will between our country and foreign nations.

Mr. President, the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I am privileged to be a member, was ever mindful to protect the rights of American labor from foreign competition. During our hearings the question was discussed many times, and the committee concluded that the most feasible way to afford protection was by the tariff method. The committee thought it more desirable to incorporate in the pending bill the prevailing method of raising tariffs. Any interested party may cause the Tariff Commission to investigate the difference resulting from the operation of this act in the cost of the production of any domestic article and any like or similar foreign article, with a view to determining whether or not an increase should be made in the duty upon such foreign article, for the purpose of equalizing such differences. Should the Commission conclude that an increase in the present rates should be made, the President by proclamation could increase them, as is now provided under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended. Such a method could be carried out without any interference on our part in the affairs of our foreign neighbors and one that has been invoked in the past in order to afford protection for our workers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the provision in this bill relating to this subject exactly the same provision that was incorporated for the same purpose in the National Labor Relations Act?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; the identical provision.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet, let me plead with the Members of the Senate not to vote to recommit this bill. It is a cowardly way to kill a bill. It would be more honorable to vote against it on its merits than to vote for recommitment. Our committee has worked diligently for many weeks, and I do not believe it possible to improve the bill if only we keep in mind the purpose of this legislation.

As has been often said during the present debate, it is our desire to help that class of labor that cannot, by collective bargaining, achieve a living wage. We are merely providing a bargaining agency for these unfortunates so that they may have the chance to improve their condition.

The pending bill recognizes the right of labor to collective bargaining, and it in no manner interferes with that right. I desire no interference by a Government agency where employer and employee are accorded the legal right to establish wages and hours as provided under the Wagner Act.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senate votes on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, I desire to say a word in explanation of my vote.

I voted against the amendment offered by the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], not because I was in opposition to the principle of it but because I felt that upon this measure and in view of the present program it was impracticable and unworkable. I thoroughly favor maintaining our markets in this country and maintaining our standards of labor by protecting our markets against the importation of cheap labor-made goods, but I do not think we can do so by imposing a practical embargo in a bill like this. Besides, I am unwilling to let this board pass upon substandard labor levels in other countries. If we are going to deal with the subject, certainly we should deal with it with a great deal of care and after a great deal of investigation and consideration.

I am placed in the position of seeming to vote against a measure in which I believe in principle but which I do not think has a place in this measure.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may we have the amendment read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 65, line 3, it is proposed to strike out all of section 8 and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 8. The Labor Standards Board shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of those substandard labor conditions which have been defined as oppressive and the Secretary of the Treasury is thereafter directed to refuse or deny entry to goods, wares, or merchandise produced under such substandard labor conditions, which goods, wares, or merchandise are comparable to or competitive with similar goods, wares, or merchandise produced in the United States under fair labor conditions as herein defined. In the event of any complaint or dispute arising as to whether such goods, wares, or merchandise seeking entry were produced under substandard labor conditions, as herein defined, the Labor Standards Board shall make a thorough investigation, and the decision of said Board shall be conclusive, shall be in writing, and shall be a matter of public record and open to public inspection.

Mr. McCARRAN. On my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent in the performance of duty as members of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are unavoidably detained.

I also announce that on this question the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS].

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] is absent as a member of the Battle Monuments Committee in France. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 53, as follows:

So Mr. McCARRAN'S amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I have received from a very prominent constituent of mine an interesting letter on the subject of the pending bill, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. I withhold his name, as I do not have authority to use it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the letter, as follows:

JULY 29, 1937.

Hon. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: You are now engrossed, under most trying conditions, in considering whether Congress shall take upon itself the stupendous task of determining what the minimum wages and maximum hours shall be, not only for Connecticut but every State in the Union.

Because the problem has been superficially simplified in the Senate bill by limiting its immediate application to wages not exceeding 40 cents per hour and to hours not exceeding 40 per week, and because these limits do not generally affect the conditions of labor governing in the larger shops in Connecticut, you have been led to believe that this amended proposal is a comparatively harmless one. The original bill and the probable House bill contained much higher limits. But let us see what these proposals really entail as a matter of continuing legislative policy.

When Congress has once started to regulate wages for the United States, political expediency will never allow it to stop at a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour, as is shown by the fact that the original bill contemplated power to fix minima all the way up to 80 cents, and affecting not only the least skilled jobs but all classifications and occupations, and establishing a maximum workweek determined by whatever the discretion of the commission found to be properly within the criteria set up. The House Committee on Labor is already talking of a 35-hour 70-cents basis.

Whatever your own unquestioned honesty of intention may be, you will be faced, if this law passes, with the unscrupulous politician who will attempt to purchase his election by promising to secure from Congress more favorable wages and hours. Since Congress will then have taken away from the States this function, it would be forcibly urged that it is the obvious duty of every Congressman continuously to exploit this field.

The public, whenever it thinks of industrial employment in Connecticut, is apt to think of a few large companies which employ over 1,000 employees. You, of course, know that there are less than 50 such concerns in Connecticut today out of a total of about 3,300 and that these 50 employ less than one-third of the total working force. You know that Connecticut has for many years been the home of small industries and small shops, where a small number of employees must work under flexible conditions if these concerns are to survive at all. They live on the brains of the management and the skill of the laborers. If wages are fixed at more than their skill can produce, it simply means that these unremunerative grades of labor will be forced out of these small shops and either thrown upon relief or thrown upon the already overcrowded, unskilled industries of a purely local character, which do not come under the terms of the Federal act or which have been exempted from it.

It intimately concerns you that you will be urged and importuned from all sides to secure exemptions, so that the Congressman's job will become a double one of seeing how many he can get out from under that law for which he was tempted to win his election by promising extensions. If any have doubts about this, the opening debates in Congress, and the contests in the committees of the House and the Senate, make it perfectly plain. Already and inevitably the farmer has been exempted as always; but the question remains: Shall this include the processor of farm products, the canner, the dairyman, the packer, and the trucker? Shall it include the distributors, and how about it when they distribute in another State than their own? Shall we exempt the learner and the apprentice, and if so, for how long? Shall the old man who can still be employed in earning less than the minimum? Shall the man with one eye, arm, or leg also be exempted, or must they all be condemned to charitable relief? Shall we exempt the service trades, especially when they are services to interstate commerce? Shall we exempt those employing less than five; and if so, those employing less than 10? Where shall we stop? Shall the merchants come under the act, and when does a merchant become an agent? When is a merchant not a merchant and simply a family store?

All of these instances, and there are literally hundreds of such examples which the N. R. A. had to face and which broke its back, will give an idea of what Congress is undertaking. The N. R. A., during the term of its existence, issued some 4,000 executive orders, all of which had the effect of law and which the Supreme Court happily found constituted the exercise of an undue delegation of power by Congress to the N. R. A. Is Congress now prepared to take upon its shoulders the responsibility of legislating as to these exceptions?

Many of the small establishments are making goods constantly subject to fluctuating demands. When the peaks come, must they let the business go by, or can their Congressmen in Washington gain an exemption for them and do it in a hurry—today? This is another job the N. R. A. failed on. Shall these small establishments break the law or try to employ more help, and let it go as soon as the peak is over, and thereby multiply dissatisfactions and recurring unemployment? Can Congress, after the progress of the seasons, change the minds of women as to when they will purchase new clothes, and foresee the constantly shifting demands for changing goods?

Can Congress foresee in its wisdom how far it can go in leaving these questions to the discretion of the Commission without a delegation of authority which will make the act unconstitutional? Is it going to experiment again in the passing of a law which makes confusion worse confounded by setting up an act that is unenforceable?

Can a bewildered people know when they are crossing the line which separates a purely local industry from one that is engaged in interstate commerce? Will they thank their Congressmen for landing them in jail or subjecting them to heavy penalties and costs when they innocently disregard the traditions of the past and overstep that shadowy, undetermined line?

We are merely suggesting some of the problems which are doubtless harassing you and to which you are asked to give answers in the heat of the summer, without knowing all that this entails upon your own future service to the State and your constituents. Why not come home and talk it over with us before acting?

You are being urged to vote for this measure under the fallacious argument that the application of a minimum wage will increase earning power. There is no way to increase earning power except to produce more goods. We cannot "lift ourselves by our bootstraps." More wages can be earned only out of an increased production. Increased costs are always a deterrent and not a help; while lower costs insure more wages and often make higher wages possible.

Yours respectfully,

———— ————.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration at this time of the amendment I offer to the committee amendment and which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 51, it is proposed to strike out lines 13 and 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Any practices ordinarily performed by or for a farmer as an incident to such farming, including harvesting, packing, storing, or preparing for market, in the raw or natural state, any products derived from any of the above agricultural pursuits.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, under the pending bill agriculture is excluded, but the definition of agriculture in the bill is not sufficiently broad to include work so closely connected with farming as to be substantially a part of it, such as packing, storing, and preparing for market.

Further, it does not cover services which, in my State—California—where producer cooperatives flourish, are largely performed for the farmers by the cooperative associations of which the farmers are members. Among such groups in California may be mentioned the fruit growers' exchange, the raisin growers, the prune growers, and others of a similar character. The practice in these cases is for the laborers to work for the association—that is, the cooperative—rather than for the individual farmer, and the association does the packing and preparing for market, which elsewhere is generally done by the farmer himself.

These agricultural commodities are highly perishable, and the work which must be done by the packing houses and on the farms varies greatly with temperature variations. Twenty-four hours in advance one cannot know whether the crop must be moved. So, to fix rigid hours of labor in such cases would be to ruin the producers, as the crop must be handled quickly with the workers available. The broadening of the definition as I have suggested is not only directly in line with the object of the bill but will also protect the farmers who, in my State at least, are engaged in a method of marketing, packing, and handling their crops which may differ from the methods employed in other States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of the merits of the first part of the Senator's amendment, on which I do not wish to comment, the last part seems to me to make possible the interpretation that the exemption would apply to any product derived from agricultural products all through the process of manufacture, no matter to what extent or degree.

I appreciate what the Senator is trying to do; he wishes this proposed law to be inapplicable to the operations referred to by him. He seeks to strike out the language in lines 13 and 14, and proposes to substitute therefor the words—

Any practices ordinarily performed by or for a farmer as an incident to such farming, including harvesting, packing, storing, or preparing for market, in the raw or natural state, any products derived from any of the above agricultural pursuits.

"Any products derived from any of the above agricultural pursuits" might mean the manufacture of shoes, which come, of course, from leather, which comes from hides, which come from cows. It might be regarded to follow up the manufacture of horse collars, which are made of leather and straw, which are agricultural products. I am wondering whether the Senator wishes his amendment to go that far?

Mr. McADOO. I had not intended it to cover horse collars or shoes, I will admit.

Mr. BARKLEY. Horse collars are manufactured from products derived from agriculture, as the Senator knows, both as to the leather and the straw.

Mr. McADOO. Almost everything in the form of food and clothing is manufactured from products of the farm.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but I do not think the Senator wants his amendment to follow these things from the farm through all the factories so as to exclude them from the operation of the bill because they are "derived from agricultural pursuits."

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McGILL. On yesterday lines 13 and 14, page 51, were amended. In view of the fact that those two lines have been amended by the Senate, is the amendment now offered by the Senator from California in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would appear to the Chair the amendment is in order.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield for a question?

Mr. McADOO. I yield, if the question is not too long.

Mr. McGILL. Yesterday afternoon the Senate amended the lines to which the Senator's amendment applies by inserting in line 13, after the word "farmer", the words "or on a farm", and also by inserting in line 14, after the word "operations", the words "including delivery to market", it being the purpose of those amendments to exclude from the bill all labor performed on a farm, whether by contract with the farmer or otherwise, and to exclude all labor connected with the delivery to market of commodities produced on a farm. Does not that cover what the Senator has in mind by his amendment?

Mr. McADOO. I do not think it is sufficiently broad. I may say to the Senator from Kansas so much of the preparation of our crops in California is through farm cooperatives that the alterations which have been made in the amendment I think do not widen it as much as is needed. I think, perhaps, I can meet the objection raised by our distinguished leader by omitting in lines 5 and 6 of my proposed amendment the concluding part, namely, the words "products derived from any of the above agricultural pursuits."

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the language I was afraid of, and I think that the Senator's amendment would be improved by eliminating those words.

Mr. McADOO. I am willing to strike out that part of the amendment and to submit the amendment in that form.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Would the Senator be willing to add, in lieu of the words which he now says he is willing to strike out, the language proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] relating to delivery to market, say, the words "including delivery to market"?

Mr. McADOO. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HATCH. I believe, then, the Senator's amendment would cover everything included by the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. In response to what the Senator from New Mexico has just said I will state that I feel the amendment adopted yesterday is broader than the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, by virtue of the fact that no limitation was placed in the amendment adopted yesterday, such as mentioning harvesting, packing, and operations of that character. The amendment adopted yesterday was intended to include, and, I think, it does include, all kinds of labor performed on a farm and all kinds of labor in connection with delivering agricultural products to market. In my judgment it includes more than does the amendment proposed by the Senator from California and is broader in its terms. I hope that the amendment adopted yesterday will remain in the bill and that the amendment of the Senator from California, by virtue of the narrower terms carried in it, will be rejected.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, the amendment suggested by me is not intended to eliminate the amendment to which the Senator from Kansas referred.

Mr. McGILL. But it strikes out the amendment to which I refer.

Mr. McADOO. Has the Senator the amendment before him?

Mr. McGILL. It was adopted yesterday and is in the RECORD. The Senator's amendment, if agreed to, would strike out entirely the lines covering the amendment to which I refer.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am unable to hear what is going on on the other side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho makes the point of order that he cannot hear the discussion which is taking place on the other side.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not able to hear what is taking place on the floor. I inquire who has the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California [Mr. McADOO].

Mr. McNARY. Has the time of the Senator from California expired?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not quite.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that I raise the point of order whether the Senate is in session? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is in session and the Senator from California still has the floor.

Mr. McADOO. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I am not asking the Senator to yield. The Senator's time has about expired; and if he is going forward with an explanation of his amendment, he should proceed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the Senator from California if it would not meet his objection, and at the same time preserve the liberal amendment inserted yesterday, which was offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL], to let the amendment of the Senator from California come after the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, so that the bill would provide:

> And including any practices ordinarily performed by or for a farmer as an incident to such farming, including harvesting, packing, storing, or preparing for market, in the raw or natural state.

Mr. McADOO. I consider that of the utmost importance where a large part of the services are rendered through farm cooperatives, and for that reason, while I do not want to affect the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, nevertheless I think the suggestion of my friend from Florida is worthy of consideration.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. I appreciate the purpose of the Senator from California, but my judgment is that his amendment will operate simply as a limitation to the amendment I offered and will not broaden its scope.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. McADOO. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from California has stricken from his amendment the clause "any products derived from any of the above agricultural pursuits", so that it merely applies to processing without saying whether it is an agricultural product or not. He has stricken out the definition of agricultural products.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from California has not stricken out anything, according to his later suggestion. He merely suggests that he will let the provision be added at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, so that it will take care of what he has in mind without interfering with the exemptions which other Senators desire to have incorporated in the bill.

Mr. McADOO. From a hasty examination of the amendment which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] has brought to my attention, I cannot see how my amendment, if inserted in the bill, would have the effect which has been suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from California on the amendment has expired.

Mr. McADOO. But, on the other hand, my amendment takes care of a situation involving the use of cooperatives.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest to the Senator from California that, in my opinion, the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] yesterday is broader than his amendment, because it takes care of all operations, whether performed by cooperatives or by persons under contract or by persons who have merely been employed for a particular job. To enumerate even them in a succeeding clause, or to recite the things that are included, would thus, of course, under the well-known rule of construction, form a limitation upon what is first stated as a broad general proposition. I think the Senator's purpose is absolutely accomplished by the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Kansas.

I may say to the Senator from California that I had in mind precisely what he has in mind, but with reference to different products. After examining the amendment of the Senator from Kansas I concluded that it covered all those cases as well as the cases which I think the Senator himself has in mind.

Mr. McADOO. Then I shall ask that further consideration of my amendment be deferred for the moment. I should like now to offer a second amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senator from California withdrawn his amendment?

Mr. McADOO. No; I am deferring further consideration of it for the moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then what is the pending amendment?

Mr. McADOO. It is the one I am now asking to have considered. I ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from California to the amendment of the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, it is proposed, on page 53, line 19, before the period, to insert a comma and the following:

And any goods produced wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation).

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is obvious from its reading. The object is to prevent prison-made goods being brought in competition with goods made by free labor in the different States when we are regulating, by the provisions of the bill under consideration, not only wages of labor but the hours of labor. Many States have laws forbidding the sale of convict-made goods. The Ashurst-Sumners Act prohibits the transportation in interstate commerce of prison-made goods into States where the sale of such goods is prohibited. If we are to pass this bill fixing minimum wages and maximum working hours throughout the Nation, it is, in my opinion, necessary, for the protection of goods made by free labor, that the transportation of prison-made goods in interstate commerce be excluded. I therefore have offered the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, apparently the matter presented by the Senator from California is of considerable interest to my State. I have had a number of telegrams asking that the amendment of the Senator from California be adopted. I ask that the names of the signers of the telegrams urging adoption of the McAdoo amendment may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the names were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whitlock Cordage Co., B. Sack & Son, Federal Hardware Co., American Manufacturing Co., City Cordage & Charnas Paper Co., Coston Supply Co.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, while I am on my feet may I ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. BLACK], who is always very patient?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Yesterday I had a telegram from one of my constituents asking that the term "employer", on page 50, line 16, be further defined. I crave the aid of the Senator from Alabama in setting me clear as to why this is desired. My constituent requests that the following language be added:

Provided, however, That the term "employer" shall not include any employer who demonstrably uses minimum-wage and maximum-week standards equal to or better than those established by the act.

It would seem to me it would naturally be the case, if the employer were paying the minimum wage and not exceeding the maximum hours of labor prescribed by the bill, that that question and that employer would not be involved in the operations of the bill. Was this matter presented to the committee?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, no such matter was presented to the committee, but it would be impossible for the bill to apply to a person who was paying a larger wage than the minimum provided and who was working his employees shorter hours than provided by the bill. It would be the same as though no order had been issued so far as he was concerned. It would be mere surplusage to add such a provision and accomplish nothing except to add three or four lines to the bill, which would be wholly futile.

Mr. COPELAND. In other words, it would be a work of supererogation?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; something of that kind.

Mr. COPELAND. It would seem so to me, but the gentleman who suggested the addition to me is in such a position of knowledge that I thought he must have something well worth while in mind. However, what the Senator has said is satisfactory to me.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending committee amendment, being a new part V, and ask that it lie on the table; also an amendment to the so-called Maloney substitute for title II, which I ask to have lie on the table.

The amendments are identical. They cover the antilynching bill as it came to the Senate from the House. I am not offering the bill which was introduced here by my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], thinking that the bill which came from the House perhaps was common property. It is offered in the form of an amendment, first, to the committee amendment, and, second, to the Maloney substitute. I ask that both amendments may lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie on the table.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is the Senator going to offer the antilynching bill as an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I have sent the amendments forward and asked that they lie on the table, so that at the appropriate time I may call them up if it seems desirable.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is going to endeavor to attach the antilynching bill to the hour and wage bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What is the status of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is pending.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood that the amendment of the Senator from California had been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask for action on the pending amendment.

Mr. McNARY. May the amendment be stated by the clerk?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will again state the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 53, line 19, before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

And any goods produced wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation).

Mr. BLACK obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the chairman of the committee that I think I have some knowledge about the provisions of this bill, but I have not any knowledge about the amendments which are being offered; and for 15 minutes I have not been able to hear what was said pro and con about these matters. I think that is true of a number of Senators on the floor. Let us have order; and I suggest that Senators raise their voices so that we may hear them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped for order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the pending amendment would make it illegal to transport in interstate commerce any goods which have been produced in whole or in part by convict labor. It would add an entirely new phase to the bill. The bill has been prepared in such a way as to limit its effect to minimum wages, maximum hours, and child labor. Any other subjects which might be added would, of course, be added without committee consideration in connection with the form in which they should be added to the bill, and without investigation as to the conditions which may or may not require their addition.

I sincerely hope the Senate will not adopt an amendment to this measure which would add a fourth phase making it illegal to transport prison-made goods in interstate commerce. At the present time there is in effect a law relating to that subject. Under that law, no prison-made goods may be shipped into any State if the use of prison-made goods is prohibited by the laws of the State. This measure would go still further, and would prevent such goods being shipped into States even though the States themselves had enacted no legislation on the subject.

The Government having embarked upon the other method of treating the subject of prison-made goods, it seems to me it would be unwise and improper to depart from it at this time; and certainly I believe it would not be wise or proper to add that controversial subject to this measure when it is already limited to the three subjects discussed.

I sincerely hope, therefore, that the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, what the Senator from Alabama has said with reference to prison-made goods might be said with equal force with reference to the addition to the wage and hour bill of the child-labor provision.

The other day, as I understand, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] made a motion, or he is about to make a motion, to strike from the bill its provisions with reference to child labor and substitute the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some of the provisions with reference to child labor as they appear in the pending bill:

> The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall provide by regulation or by order that the employment of employees under the age of 16 years in any occupation shall not be deemed to constitute oppressive child labor if and to the extent that the Chief of the Children's Bureau determines that such employment is confined to periods which will not interfere with their schooling and to conditions which will not interfere with their health and well-being.

In other words, the Chief of the Children's Bureau may absolutely say whether child labor shall or shall not be employed in a particular industry. I say it is not right that the Chief of the Children's Bureau should be permitted to say that children shall be permitted to work in a particular industry and shall not be permitted to work in some other industry.

In addition to that the pending bill gives to the Chief of the Children's Bureau the right to say that children under 16 years of age shall be permitted to work in a particular industry, but that children under 18 shall not be permitted to work in another particular industry, because the Chief of the Children's Bureau is authorized to say that one industry is hazardous and another one is not hazardous. So, with reference to mining or anything else, the Chief of the Children's Bureau, under the provisions of the bill, is authorized to say, "Children may work in this particular field, and that is all right, but they may not work in some other field."

The Senator from Alabama called attention to the provision which has just been offered as an amendment with reference to convict-made goods.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not what the Senator is now pointing out, about the delegation of authority to the Chief of the Children's Bureau, apply to the whole bill, in that we are delegating this power to a board? I would just as soon trust the Chief of the Children's Bureau as trust the board. Does not the same vice go all through the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. I may say that I think a good deal of the same vice does go all through the bill; but if the Senator will observe and study the bill, he will see that the vice applies particularly with reference to child labor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I merely wish to clear up a misunderstanding in my own mind. I understood the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] the other day to indicate that he merely intended to move to strike from the bill the provisions with reference to child labor. The Senator from Montana a few minutes ago indicated that it was the intention of the Senator from Colorado also to move to substitute another measure on the subject of child labor.

Mr. WHEELER. That is my understanding.

Let me make a brief statement with reference to the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Colorado and give the Senate just a little background with reference to it.

After talking with a gentleman whom I consider one of the outstanding liberals of the country and who has given a great deal of thought and study to the child-labor movement, I introduced a bill along the same lines as the Prison-Made Goods Act, which is now in operation and which is working rather effectively. I did so because I have been interested in preventing child labor ever since I was a boy in Massachusetts, and because this bill absolutely flies in the face of the Supreme Court of the United States of America in one case, in that the Court has held that this kind of legislation may not be constitutionally enacted. In addition to that, it absolutely flies in the face of the Supreme Court, because in that respect the bill is an unwarranted delegation of power to the Children's Bureau with reference to child labor.

Does the Senate desire definitely to say to the Supreme Court, "We intend to pass this bill, notwithstanding you have held this kind of legislation unconstitutional, notwithstanding the fact that you have said to the Congress of the United States that it may not delegate its power as it is delegated with reference to the Children's Bureau, because no proper standard is set up there"? No proper standard is set up with reference to child labor in this bill, and yet we are asked to pass it.

I must confess that it looks to me as if the Children's Bureau and the Department of Labor were urging the inclusion of the provision advisedly and deliberately because they want to see the Supreme Court again strike down the provision in order that they may come back to the Congress of the United States and say, "Well, we told you so", and go to the people of the country on that issue.

In the first place, the subject of child labor has no business in this particular bill. It was put in the bill, not by the chairman of the committee—what I say has no reference to him—in my judgment, because it was desired to say to Senators, "When you vote against this bill you are also voting against the prohibition of child labor." The provision has not any business in the bill. It should be a separate measure. It is one of the very most important questions before Congress, and it should be dealt with separately and distinctly by itself.

As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] said the other day, where do we find the provision with reference to child labor? In the penalty clause. I mean, finally we find in the penalty clause a provision with reference to child labor, prohibiting the shipment in interstate commerce of goods by child labor. That is not the way we ought to legislate in the Senate. It is not the honest way to legislate. It is not the right way to legislate with reference to a great subject, such as child labor, in which people from one end of the country to the other are interested.

When I introduced my bill I found that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] had introduced a bill identical with mine, or practically identical with it. I found that several other Senators had introduced similar bills; that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] himself had introduced a bill on the subject; that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] had introduced a bill on the subject; that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] had introduced bills on the subject. I turned them over to a subcommittee. We held hearings with reference to the subject for a considerable length of time. We heard representatives of the different churches, representatives of the Episcopal Church, I think of the Methodist Church, of the Jewish race, and of the Catholic denomination. We heard representatives of the brotherhoods and representatives of the employers. We finally worked out a bill which was satisfactory to practically everybody except the Children's Bureau. They were practically the only ones who were not satisfied. Some of those who came and testified against the bill, inspired, I may say, by the Children's Bureau, stated that the reason they did not want any legislation was that they were afraid it might prevent the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution with reference to child labor. In other words, they were afraid they would lose the cause for which they had been fighting, and were afraid some of them could not go out and collect fees from the general public for fighting for the prevention of child labor. Even when it was presented to them that in practical effect the legislation would prevent child labor, they did not want to accept it.

Mr. Keating, the editor of Labor, came and testified in favor of the legislation. He was the author of the original child labor amendment. Likewise a number of representatives of the railroad brotherhoods came and testified with reference to it.

We thought we had worked out in the committee a bill which would do the job, and we took, in substance, the original Keating bill, which passed Congress, and amended it in some details so that we thought it would be more acceptable to the Supreme Court of the United States. Secondly, we added another provision dealing with child labor in identically the same way that we deal with prison-made goods, so that if the Supreme Court of the United States should hold one provision of the law unconstitutional, we knew they would have to hold the other provisions constitutional.

Men came from New York to testify. New York State is one of the large consumers of goods. We provided that no goods could be shipped into a State whose laws prohibited the shipment of such goods into it. Then we provided in detail with reference to the necessity of branding goods made by child labor.

Senators know that, from a practical standpoint, if goods had to be branded so as to show they had been made by child labor, very few people would buy them. Certainly they would not be bought in many of the States. The stores would not sell them. So we provided that it would be necessary to brand goods as having been made by child labor if they were produced in a factory which employed child labor.

We also provided against the shipment of goods into a State whose laws prevented the sale of that kind of goods. So there were three different ways in which we undertook to prevent child labor. We did not leave it to the Children's Bureau to say, "You can employ child labor in this particular factory, but you cannot employ it over here." What the Children's Bureau wants and what the Department of Labor wants, it seems to me, is not the prevention of child labor, but they want to have the power in their hands.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Montana that when the pending child-labor amendment to the Constitution was offered in this body in 1924 it was the same unreasonable, unyielding, and stubborn attitude which prevented the writing of an amendment which would have been adopted long ago by the American people.

Mr. WHEELER. I know that perfectly well, because my colleague, the late Senator Walsh, worked on the amendment, and I know the opposition and the unyielding attitude he met from the Department. But he was so interested in the effort to prevent child labor that he went along with the Department in spite of their unyielding attitude, and as a result the child-labor amendment has not been ratified.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think that in fairness to the present Chief of the Children's Bureau, the RECORD ought to show that she is opposed to this very language, on page 52, beginning after the period in line 14 and extending down to line 22.

Mr. WHEELER. The Children's Bureau has not consulted me about it, and the first thing I heard of it was the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The time of the Senator from Montana on the amendment has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. I will occupy some of my time on the bill.

I am glad to hear the Senator from Wisconsin say that the Chief of the Children's Bureau is opposed to that provision, because certainly it is a provision which grants her the power to say whether or not a child's health is going to be injured from working in a factory. It certainly gives the Bureau a chance to say, "You can work this child from this home, but you cannot work this child from this other home, because its health would be affected."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. This provision, which was written in by the committee, as stated by the Senator, and not at the request of the Children's Bureau, was inserted merely to apply to the period when children are out of school, during school vacation. It does not provide for the entire year. It is limited wholly and completely—and I am sure the Senator wants the Senate to understand the facts—to the vacation period.

There was a conflict in the committee on that particular matter. There may be a motion to strike the provision from the bill. But I should like to have it appear that the provision does not grant full power to the Children's Bureau to do what the Senator is saying.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me read the language.

Mr. BLACK. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. It provides:

> The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall provide by regulation or by order that the employment of employees under the age of 16 years in any occupation shall not be deemed to constitute oppressive child labor if and to the extent that the Chief of the Children's Bureau determines that such employment is confined to periods which will not interfere with their schooling and to conditions which will not interfere with their health and well-being.

If that does not mean what I said it did; if that does not mean that the Children's Bureau can say that a period of vacation is 6 months, or 9 months, or 3 months, or 2 months, then I do not understand the English language. If that language does not mean that the Children's Bureau can say to this particular child, "Your health will permit you to work", and to another, "Your health will not permit you to work", I do not understand the English language.

Mr. President, I have raised six children, and I think I know something about children and how they ought to be regulated. I get weary of hearing women who have never had any children and never have known what it is to raise children tell me and my wife how we should raise our children. I object to women who have made miserable failures of raising their own children telling the mothers of the country who have raised their children in a decent manner how they should raise them.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield for a question, but my time is limited.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator understands, does he not, that the provision to which he refers is a part of the bill which can be isolated, and which can be stricken out by amendment if the Senate desires to do that?

Mr. WHEELER. I thoroughly understand that, but I am pointing out what is in the bill now, not what can be done with the bill in the future.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will yield just for me to make one statement, I wish to corroborate what the Senator from Wisconsin has said to the effect that the Chief of the Children's Bureau is very anxious to have this provision stricken from the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. It should be stricken out. In addition to what I have said, I call attention to the fact that it is provided in the bill that the Department may hire a sheriff, or a constable, or any State officer, or, if they do not hire him, they can pay him, without any question as to the amount they may pay him. There can be constables and sheriffs and other public officers, State employees, all over the country, being paid out of the Treasury of the United States for assisting the Department of Labor. It does not provide how much they shall be paid, whether $50, or $10, or $5. Under the provisions of the bill the Department can go out and subsidize and buy up all the sheriffs and constables and other peace officers of the United States and pay them while they are drawing their regular salaries.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why does the bill provide that the investigation shall be made by the Department of Labor instead of by the board? Why should the board turn over the investigatory power to the Department of Labor?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the board is to be an impartial board to pass on matters, why should it turn over all the work of investigation and report to the Department?

Mr. WHEELER. I had desired to have an opportunity to support a bill providing for regulation of the hours of labor, but it seems to me that the pending bill has been very poorly drafted; and while I intend to vote for it, I shall do so with the greatest of hesitation, particularly in view of the provisions contained in the bill with reference to the Children's Bureau. I think they are outrageous provisions and should never have been included.

Some have asked why Congress does not draft its own bills. It is because whenever a committee drafts a bill some official in one of the departments sends in a bill and says, "We want this, and we do not want the bill drafted by the committee, because we do not like the way that 't' is crossed or that 'i' is dotted." As a result of this situation which has existed Congress is being blamed and the Senate is being blamed because they have allowed themselves to be led around by the nose by some officers in the departments whom we commonly call the "brain trusters."

Mr. President, I desire to close my remarks by saying that I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] as a substitute for part of the committee amendment. I said the other day that I had intended to vote for the bill anyway, and I desire to vote for it, but I reserve the right to vote against it in the event that the iniquitous provisions with reference to the Children's Bureau remain in the bill. The bill should not contain a provision that representatives of the Children's Bureau can go out to Montana and say to the people of Montana what shall be done with reference to particular children. The provision now in the bill would permit the representatives of the Children's Bureau to go into every home in America, if they wanted to, and make an order with reference to a particular child, and say that it may work because it is strong and healthy, but that another child in the same household may not work because that child is not so well or healthy as the other child.

Is that what the Senate of the United States wants to do? Is that the kind of power it wants to give to the Children's Bureau—to permit it to send its representatives into every little home in the country that it chooses to go into? Do Senators want the sheriffs of their counties and the prosecuting attorneys of their counties to act as snoopers in the homes of America, and while they are snooping there putting in bills for $10, $25, or $50 to the Labor Department?

I cannot conceive that the Senate wants to do that, and I do not believe the Senate wants to pass the bill with that sort of a provision in it, or the provisions with reference to children that are now contained in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] wishes to offer an amendment. He had previously endeavored to offer it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to make a privileged motion under the rule. I send the motion to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas makes a motion, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion takes precedence over pending amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY. And does the Senator from Texas have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, from the very beginning I had intended to vote for a bill to regulate hours and wages, and I had intended to vote for this bill until I read it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me for the purpose of asking that two brief amendments which I shall offer may be considered as pending, so that I may have an opportunity to have a vote on them?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that two amendments, which I send to the desk, may be considered as pending, having now been formally offered, so that I may have a vote upon them if the motion now made by the Senator from Texas shall not prevail.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. For what purpose does the Senator from Washington wish to have the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. BONE. For the purpose of asking a parliamentary question of the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] offered an amendment which is now pending. I have an amendment of similar nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment presented by the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is now pending.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BONE. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from Texas has made a motion to recommit the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has made such a motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have.

Mr. BONE. I have prepared an amendment, but was not advised until this morning that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] had prepared a similar amendment. My amendment would bring convict-made goods within the scope of the bill; and I am not certain just exactly what the parliamentary status would be if a vote were taken on the motion which has just been made by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Washington for the purpose of offering an amendment, if he desires.

Mr. BONE. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No other question will come up until the motion made by the Senator from Texas shall have been disposed of. Amendments may be sent to the desk and lie on the table.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I said a moment ago, Mr. President, I am anxious to vote for a bill to regulate hours and wages, but that does not mean that I am willing to vote for any bill that has that label on it. I want to vote for a bill that contains provisions which appeal to my judgment and my sense of the proper exercise of our constitutional power.

Senator after Senator on the floor of the Senate has said that the pending bill does not suit him, and yet some of them say they are going to vote for it anyway. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], an outstanding friend of labor, said a moment ago that he does not like the bill, that it does not suit him, that he may vote for it, but that he may not do so unless it is amended in certain particulars.

Mr. President, I feel that the bill ought to go back to the Committee on Education and Labor, so that the committee, if necessary, may hold additional hearings upon the bill, may reconsider the questions that have been brought forth in the debate, and may be able to report back to the Senate at its next session a bill which may meet with our ideas of the proprieties of the subject matter.

This is a bill supposedly in behalf of labor, Mr. President. Some Senators seem to have been influenced somewhat by the letter of Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, under date of yesterday. I want to analyze Mr. Green's statement:

The wage and hour bill in the form in which it is now before the Senate does not meet the expectations of labor.

Well, if it does not, why should Senators support it on the theory that it does meet the expectations of labor? If Senators want to help labor, why vote for a bill which labor says does not meet the situation?—

However—

This is Mr. Green speaking—

However, we recognize the need for the enactment of wage and hour legislation.

So do I, Mr. President. That is why I want to send the bill back to the committee, so that the committee may bring out a bill on the subject.

For that reason, rather than recommit the Senate bill for further committee consideration, it would seem advisable to pass the best wage and hour bill possible in the Senate—

For what purpose? To get a bill? To enact legislation? No. Not that this bill suits him, not that it suits us, but merely to have something with the name on it which says "hours and wages" we shall pass something with the hope of doing what—with the hope that it can be revised and amended in the House in such a way as to make it more nearly satisfactory and acceptable to labor.

I submit that Mr. Green's letter, instead of being in favor of not recommitting the bill is an argument in behalf of recommitting it.

Mr. Green says this bill does not suit him. He does not want this bill. If the House does not change it, he is against it. What does he ask us to do? By inference he suggests that the Senate abdicate its authority and let the House of Representatives write the bill. "No; this bill does not suit us. We do not want it; and if this were the final word on the subject, we should be against it. But, Senators, give up your authority, pass it over to the House, and let the House write a bill." Who knows what the House will write? Mr. Green does not know; Senators do not know; and the House does not know.

Mr. President, there is nothing in the Democratic platform demanding this particular bill. There is nothing in the Democratic platform making any pledge as to this particular measure or anything like this measure. So Senators on this side of the aisle need not fear the lash of the platform in sending this bill back to the committee.

But what are the views of other labor men? I hold in my hand, and there has been printed in the RECORD, statements of John P. Frey, president, metal-trades department, American Federation of Labor, and J. W. Williams, president, building-trades department, American Federation of Labor. Two great departments of the American Federation of Labor are urging the Senate to send the bill back to the committee, so that the committee may work out an acceptable bill and bring it back here in January.

Mr. President, why should we be so hasty? What is there that is compelling us to enact this legislation today? Congress will be here again in January. Will we not know more about this question then than we now do? Will not the Committee on Education and Labor know more about it then than it now knows? The bill which is before us is not the bill that was introduced originally. It is not the bill with respect to which Mr. Green appeared before the committee earlier in the hearings and which he approved.

Are we now in the proper frame of mind for deliberate action on important legislation? Everyone within the sound of my voice knows that our nerves are frayed; that we are tired and that the country is also tired; that we ought to go home; and that we ought not to enact this proposed legislation simply for the sake of passing something in order that the House of Representatives may write the bill, or perhaps that it may be written in conference.

Mr. President, as one Senator, I do not favor turning over to conference committees the power to legislate and to bring back to this body measures that have not received the deliberate consideration and approval of the Senate of the United States.

What does this bill propose to do? Mr. President, it confers on a board of five men greater powers over the economic life of this Nation than the power exercised today by five European monarchs over the affairs of their peoples. Whose power is it? The power to legislate is vested in this body and in the House of Representatives by the people through the Constitution. Have we any right to turn over that power to a board? Why not enact a piece of legislation fixing by statute what the minimum wage shall be, entrusting its administration, of course, to a board? I am not willing, without further consideration of the committee, to delegate to five men the power of life and death over the industry of America.

Let me say to those who contend that this bill is in behalf of labor that the power which it is proposed to confer upon this board may be exercised against labor, just as it may be exercised in favor of labor. Let me say to those from the Northwest and the Middle West that the power of this board may be exercised against their regions, just as it may be exercised against any region in the United States.

Mr. President, the labor representatives of two great departments of the American Federation of Labor have expressed their views on this measure. What do they say? They say that this bill ought to be recommitted; they are bitterly against it.

The international unions of the building trades and the metal trades, speaking through the building trades department and the metal trades department, American Federation of Labor—

Speaking in their official capacity, they have made their views known. Do you suppose, Mr. President, if Mr. Green was very insistent about the letter which he wrote and which was read here that he would permit two members of his cabinet, so to speak, two of his board of directors, openly to advocate the recommitment of this bill?

Mr. Green, of course, is in a difficult position. We have to understand the attitude of men before we can always understand their sentiments or their views. But what do these men say? They are not under any pressure. What do they say? They speak for labor; they speak for men who belong to their unions.

The international unions of the building trades and the metal trades, speaking through the building trades department and the metal trades department, American Federation of Labor, believe that the Black-Connery bill—the wages-and-hours bill—now before the Senate should be recommitted.

Is there any doubt there? Is there any hesitation there?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the Senator's remark that the two gentlemen who signed the letter are free and independent of Mr. Green, and that, therefore, they ought to be respected because they have broken away from him in this matter, it ought to be recalled that, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Green in the campaign last year supported President Roosevelt, the two gentlemen to whom the Senator has reference broke away from him and did their best actively to elect Mr. Landon as President of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know about whom they supported for President, and I do not see that that is important when we are considering a matter such as this.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator was talking about them breaking away from Mr. Green; and I was reminding him that that is not the first time they did it.

Mr. CONNALLY. What I meant to imply was that there could not be any very great bitterness between Mr. Green and two of his chiefs of staff because of their writing the letter, for, if Mr. Green had wanted to, I should think he could have stopped it. But I do not see that for whom they voted for President has anything to do with this bill, because I suppose this bill will provide wages and hours for the thinning ranks of the Republicans, if any of them ever work [laughter], as well as for Democrats.

Let us see what these men say. They are talking for labor; they are not running for office; they are speaking in behalf of the interest of men who do work:

This measure, which so vitally affects labor, seeks to establish minimum wage rates and maximum hours of labor. With this purpose the two departments are in hearty and active approval.

They are for wage and hour legislation, but are not for this particular wage and hour legislation. Is this bill all that can be said on the subject? Is this bill the last word? Is this the sublimated essence of all that can be done about wages and hours? The committee changed the entire original bill. In the light of the facts, it can change this bill if the bill goes back to them.

But the measure in its present form, and with the amendments which have been proposed, would go much further.

Those are the words of these labor leaders and not the words of the Senator from Texas.

In its present form—

Listen to this, Senators. You had better hear them now instead of after the vote; you had better hear them now before the election, and not afterward—

In its present form there is grave danger that it would materially interfere with and modify the Walsh-Healey bill.

I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] note that statement. These two labor men say that this bill—

Would materially interfere with and modify the Walsh-Healey bill, which has been of such great protection to labor standards.

There is as yet no clearly defined authority to be given the commission provided for in the measure.

These men see the broad sweep of power which this bill will give to five men. They fear it. They know that power can be exercised against them as well as for them. They recognize that there is no standard set up, but it is all turned over to a board. Let the board do it. Here is the Senate of the United States, entrusted by the people and the Constitution with the legislative power, and we are asked to turn over that power not to 96 Senators, not to 435 Representatives, elected by the people, chosen by the people, but to a board of five not chosen by the people, not selected by the people. Give the board this power; give it up, Mr. Senate; give it up, Mr. Congress; turn it over to a board.

What are Senators going to say to their constituents when they challenge them because of the manner in which they have performed their duty and say, "We meant for the Senate to legislate; we meant for the House to legislate; we did not expect you from fear to fail to do you duty and turn it over to a board."

Who is this board? We do not know—

There has been—

These labor representatives are still speaking—

There has been no adequate opportunity for consideration of the measure by labor or by the Senate.

Labor says that this new bill has not been considered by labor because it has not had any adequate opportunity to consider it. Let us send this bill back to the Committee on Education and Labor. Let them have additional hearings; let labor come before them; let those who may oppose it come before them; let the committee thresh out these questions and bring us back a bill that shall set up some standard by which this board is to be governed, but not a bill which will convey the sovereignty of the United States to a board of five.

It is the conviction——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas on the motion has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall take a few minutes on the bill, if the Chair please.

It is the conviction of the building-trades department—

"The conviction", not the hasty thought, not a passing fancy, but it is "the conviction", the deliberate, settled, fixed conviction—of the building-trades department and the metal-trades department, American Federation of Labor, that a measure of such far-reaching effect on labor—

"Far reaching", reaching out into every nook and cranny of this Republic, reaching out not simply into the great steel industry and similar industries but reaching out to every little precinct and voting box in all the sweep of this majestic Republic, affecting every man, woman, and child, either directly or indirectly. If it does not affect them directly, it affects what they eat and what they wear and everything else they may buy.

It is the conviction of the building-trades department and of the metal-trades department, American Federation of Labor, that a measure of such far-reaching effect—

On what? On industry? On the big fellows? No, that is not what these gentlemen say. Labor is not complaining because this bill is going to pinch the capitalists and the industrialists; but what do the writers of the letter say?

That a measure of such far-reaching effect on labor—should not be enacted until there has been an adequate opportunity for examination, consultation, and conference.

They only want "adequate opportunity." They have said that they have not had "adequate opportunity" to study this new bill or to present this new bill, and they are asking the Congress to give them another chance.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. This does not mean that the legislation should be killed. I am in favor of wage-and-hour legislation, but I am not in favor of just anything that bears the label of wage and hour legislation. I now yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether the unions to which he refers and which have sent the letter he holds in his hand did not have the opportunity to go before the committee in the long hearings which the committee conducted on this bill? Were they denied the opportunity to go before the committee and present their views?

Mr. CONNALLY. I suppose they had opportunity to go before the committee and be heard on the original bill, but this is a new bill; this is a substitute bill; it is not the original bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Do the changes that have been made affect their interests?

Mr. CONNALLY. They seem to think so; and I think they know as to that better than I do.

Mr. HUGHES. Did not the representatives of labor, many of them, come and testify before the committee at the hearing?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think they did.

Mr. HUGHES. If that be true, I wish to ask the Senator if the bill should be recommitted to the committee which made a report on it, in connection with which, as I understand, no minority views were filed, what new light would be afforded the Senate that must act on the matter? After all, is the bill not committed ultimately to the Senate, and is it not the Senate by the votes of the Senators that will act on this matter? The committee having reported to the Senate, why may we not assume our responsibility and act as we should act without recommitting it to the committee that has already held long hearings and submitted a report?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his interruption. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does not the Senator know more about the bill today than he did yesterday or the day before?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; I think I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not in favor of closing the doors to further information.

Mr. HUGHES. I individually would know more since the Senator has spoken, because I always learn much when the Senator speaks.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. If he will just follow the Senator from Texas today, as his compliment implies he is going to do, I shall be very happy.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not sure I can follow the Senator, but I am following his argument.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator in a position to state some of the principal objections of labor?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am stating them now. One is that too much power is given the board.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator know that certain of the nationally prominent labor leaders came to certain members of the committee asking that the ceiling be made 60 cents an hour instead of 40 cents an hour, and that the objection they have to the bill is because the ceiling is not high enough and because there is not sufficient power given to the board?

Mr. CONNALLY. That may be, but that is entirely consistent with what is about to be done here. The proposal is now that the bill does not satisfy us, so we will let the House draw the bill. The House bill provides 70 cents an hour and a 35-hour week. Do Senators want such a bill? That is probably what the House would insist upon having in the bill. Senators say, "We do not like this bill so we will let the House write it. They know more than we do. Members of the House are more able than we are. They are more patriotic. They have investigated this matter better than we have. Let us send the bill over and let the House fix the terms of the bill."

Are Senators ready to do that? Are Senators ready to vote that Representatives in the House from their States know more about the subject and are wiser and more patriotic than are the Senators themselves? If any Senator admits that, probably some Representative will take his seat in the Senate after the next election. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not exactly follow the Senator's line of argument. Why does the Senator say we are turning the bill over to the House? Would we not turn it over to a conference committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is worse than turning it over to the House.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senate would be represented by Members of the Senate in the conference and would not be turning it over to the House, but to a conference committee to reconcile the differences between the House and the Senate. If the Senate conferees did their duty we would be as much represented as the House and would not be leaving it to the House to write a bill for the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Every Senator who has been in the Senate very long knows about conference committees. We adopt amendments such as those offered yesterday by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. He offered two important amendments which were adopted, and the newspapers flashed the information down to North Carolina, and then in about an hour the Senate reversed itself and threw both amendments out the window.

We adopt an amendment to a bill, and it goes to conference. Who are on the conference committee? The conferees on the part of the Senate are members of the committee who wrote the bill. What would happen to the amendment? It would go out the window if they could find a window to throw it out of.

Conference committee! I was elected to sit in the Senate and to be a United States Senator. I was not elected to sit here and let a conference committee of five or six men take over the entire authority of the United States Senate.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. First let me inquire how much time I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has the Senator from Texas offered or suggested any amendments to the bill that would improve it to such an extent as would cause him to support it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I have an amendment pending.

Mr. ELLENDER. Could the bill be amended so as to satisfy the views of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think it could.

Mr. ELLENDER. What suggestions would the Senator have to offer?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have but 5 minutes left. It would take all day to tell the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator may not have the time at this moment, but he had ample occasion before now to offer his suggestions to the Committee on Labor and Education, and to the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has not spoken before on the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. So he informs me; but we have been considering the pending bill since Monday, a period of 6 days.

Mr. CONNALLY. I realize that; but nevertheless I have not spoken.

Mr. ELLENDER. This is the first time the Senator has spoken on the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; the first time. I am sorry the Senator intimates that I ought to have talked all day yesterday and all day the day before.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; I am not making such an accusation, but the point that I mean to emphasize is that notwithstanding ample opportunity, the Senator has remained silent and did not attempt to improve the bill so as to meet such objections as he now urges. A motion to recommit would mean death to the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have an amendment pending. That amendment provides that no order made by the board shall become effective until Congress shall have been in session 60 days thereafter. That would be some safeguard. If the board should undertake to ruin an industry or ruin a section of the country, I would provide that the order should not become effective until Congress had been in session 60 days, in which time we might be able to get some action by Congress to prevent such a disaster.

Mr. President, what do these labor representatives say? These interruptions have diverted attention from what the labor men are saying. What do these labor representatives say?

A measure of such far-reaching effect on labor should not be enacted until there has been an adequate opportunity for examination, consultation, and conference.

Here are two great departments of the American Federation of Labor begging the United States Senate to send the bill back to the committee, begging for hearings, begging for consultation, begging for a conference. What is the Senate going to say? Is it going to say, "No; we do not want to hear you. We are through. We do not want to bother with you fellows. We are in a hurry. We have to pass this bill right now"?

It is for these reasons—

These are the reasons given by two departments of the American Federation of Labor—

It is for these reasons that the two departments of the American Federation of Labor, whose members will be so vitally affected by any such measure, earnestly urge that the bill be recommitted so that the subject can receive the consideration which is so necessary under the circumstances.

Mr. President, I very much regret not being able to be in complete harmony and agreement with the pending measure. I am in favor of the principle of regulation of hours and wages. I think the Congress ought to do something along that line. I do not think we ought to delegate it to somebody else to do.

I am making this motion to recommit in order that we may have more hearings and get more information, in order that the committee may work out a more generally acceptable bill. Who will deny that all of us know more about the bill today than we did last Monday or than we did even yesterday? Why shall we not know more about it in January? The debates that have taken place on the floor of the Senate, the amendments which have been offered, the articles which have been published in the newspapers will all contribute to a crystallization of sentiment on the subject, and the committee and the Congress, and the Senate particularly, will be in better position at the next session to enact wise, sane, and acceptable legislation than they are now at the end of the session, when everyone, petulant, irritated, disturbed, frayed in spirit and in mind, is anxious to go home.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is looking straight into my eyes, and I remember his injunction of some days ago as a scientist, the man of medicine, that Senators ought to be at home and ought not to be legislating under these hectic conditions and circumstances. Have I properly stated the attitude of the Senator from New York?

Mr. COPELAND. Absolutely. The Senator never said a truer word.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this is not a hostile motion. I want the committee to bring back to the Senate a bill for which I can vote. I want to help the man in the lower brackets. I know something about the man who toils. I have done some toiling myself, many, many years ago. [Laughter.] I do not expect to do any more manual toil if I can avoid it, but I have not forgotten my affection and sympathy for the man down in the lower brackets who works long hours and gets little pay. I want to do something for him. I am not going to turn him and his destiny over to five industrial monarchs who will wield a greater power than any five European monarchs who may now sit upon their little painted thrones.

The power of the five members of the board will be real; their power will be vital; their power will reach out into every section of this Republic. The little European monarch merely sits upon a little piece of gilded wood, wearing his robes of office, but with his hands empty of real power and real authority—simply a little tinseled functionary, a functionary for ceremonies and pomp and display. But we are asked to create five great monarchs, industrial monarchs, commercial monarchs, whose edicts and whose ukases will go out everywhere in this Republic.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, yesterday reference was made in the debate to a letter from a prominent labor leader, and again reference has been made to it today by the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], to the effect that the passage of this bill would have some limitation upon the effectiveness of the so-called Walsh-Healey Act. I wish to direct myself briefly to that matter.

If the proposal in this bill had been put forward last year, we would not have heard of the Walsh-Healey Act. Until recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court it was not believed that the proposal contained in this bill was constitutional. The Walsh-Healey Act contains practically all the proposals contained in this bill, but is applicable only to that class of employers and employees who, it was believed, could be held by constitutional authority to comply with the terms laid down; namely, contractors and employers furnishing the Government with supplies and materials. Clearly it was constitutional for the Government to incorporate in any contract for the purchase of supplies a stipulation that such supplies should be produced only in factories and other establishments that operated their employees not more than 40 hours a week, and where a minimum wage was paid that was fixed by a Federal agency, after taking into consideration the standards and conditions set forth in the act.

Mr. President, this bill simply extends the principle of the Walsh-Healey Act beyond merely employees employed on supplies which finally are purchased by the Government; and frankly I cannot understand why any representative of organized labor demands the elimination of the sweatshop and long hours of labor and low wages when his fellow wage earners are working on Government contracts, but does not demand that the same things be done when they are working upon merchandise that goes into the general sales market.

That is all there is to this phase of the question. Instead of contracting or limiting or restricting the Walsh-Healey Act the pending bill extends it.

I repeat, the real issue here is plain and simple. Practically every Senator asserts he is for the objective. Nearly every Member of this body says, "I am for a maximum workweek and a minimum wage for wage earners engaged in interstate commerce." There are just two ways of doing this. We can write a bill and fix therein the maximum hours and the minimum wage and compel all industries to comply with these fixed and rigid standards, or we can leave it to a board to fix the hours and minimum wages according to the different standards and conditions existing in different industries.

Herein is the whole question; and we are going to have that issue when the substitute of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is presented, because he fixes the hours on a sliding scale, depending upon how many persons are out of work, so that one year a man or a woman may work in a particular industry 32 hours a week, and a few years afterward, or the next year, 38 hours, all depending upon the number of millions who may be unemployed.

Now, let us see why we need a board. We need a board because of the facts stated in the letter I hold in my hand from the man who is administering the Walsh-Healey Act, under which a board fixes the minimum wages in different industries, and has those wages incorporated in the proposals when the Government asks for contracts for supplies. I read a portion of the letter, which is dated July 30, 1937:

I am enclosing copies of the recent decisions of the Secretary of Labor determining prevailing minimum wages of $15 in the cotton-garment and allied industries, which include the earlier $15 decision for the men's work-clothing industry; of $16 for the men's raincoat industry; of $14 for the men's work- and knit-glove industry; of $14 in the North and $13 in the South for the men's underwear industry; of $20 for experienced workers and $15 for boxers and trimmers and learners in the neckwear industry; $27 for the men's cap and hat industry; and of $14 for the seamless-hosiery industry.

Indicating that there is a wide variation as to what should be the minimum wage fixed by law in various industries.

I repeat what I have said before during this debate: Do not Senators think every member of the committee would a thousand times rather have brought in a bill which would prescribe for every industry in this country a maximum 40-hour week and a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour? We were unanimous for it; but, Senators, the evidence showed that that would have brought ruin to a tremendous number of industries. It would immediately have impaired the financial standing of 80 percent of the industries of the country and 80 percent of the workers in the industries of the country, and we did not dare do it. The reason why a board is suggested is in order that it may be done gradually, that it may be done after study and a survey, that it may not be done in 1 month or 6 months or 1 year or 2 years, but that the objective of getting most of the industries of the country into that category may finally be attained.

There is the issue—a board, or a rigid law compelling all the lumber mills in the South which are now working their employees 56 hours a week to reduce their hours immediately, at once, to 40 hours per week.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator say that the lumber mills in the South work their men 56 hours a week?

Mr. WALSH. Some of them; yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator ought to say "some of them" then.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps I should.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think the Senator ought to charge that all the lumber mills of the South work their men 56 hours a week.

Mr. WALSH. I had in mind the letters that the Senator from Alabama read and the evidence that was submitted.

Mr. CONNALLY. The other day someone quoted the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] as saying that in New York some women work 24 hours a day.

Mr. WALSH. I had no intention of referring particularly to the South. The Senator knows that I am not and have not been sectional in discussing this measure. I mentioned the lumber industry of the South in the same way that I would mention industries in other parts of the country, because I realize that same of the Senators from the Southern States are particularly fearful of the consequences of this bill upon the industries of their section and that a sudden drastic reduction in hours would seriously handicap these industries.

Mr. CONNALLY. Some of them may work their employees that many hours, but there are not many of them in my State, I know.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have just one other statement to make and then I shall complete my observations.

Some leaders of labor organizations are opposed to this bill. Why are they opposed to it? It may be that some fear that legislation of this nature will have a tendency to restrict the expansion of labor organizations, to restrict the organizing of wage earners into labor unions. We had that fact in mind in the committee, and that is the reason why we reached only for the lowest class, the men and women, as the Senator from Florida said, at the foot of the ladder, who are not organized, who have not the facilities for joining labor organizations.

So, Mr. President, I am anxious to lower the working hours and increase the wages of the millions of wage earners who are unorganized, who are in the lowest group of employees, who are hardly able to make ends meet, who have no means of asserting their economic right to a decent living wage, and that is what this bill does. It can be done in one of two ways—by a direct provision for uniform hours and wages in the law or by a bureau with elastic powers. As for me, I am for the bureau as the easiest and the safest and the soundest and the best way and the most reasonable way of bringing about the desired result.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know whether or not the Senator was in the Chamber a little while ago when I spoke about the provision with reference to child labor. I particularly should like to have the Sentaor give his attention to page 52 of the bill, which provides as follows:

> The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall provide by regulation or by order that the employment of employees under the age of 16 years in any occupation shall not be deemed to constitute oppressive child labor if and to the extent that the Chief of the Children's Bureau determines that such employment is confined to periods which will not interfere with their schooling and to conditions which will not interfere with their health and well-being.

In other words, the Chief of the Children's Bureau may go into every home in the United States and say to the children in that home whether they may or may not work in industry.

I am sure the Senator, who is a member of the committee, would not want such a provision in this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, unfortunately I was not present in the committee when that provision was inserted in the bill. I am disposed to agree with the views of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if our weather-beaten, tempest-tossed legislative bark which has for 6 days floundered in the troubled senatorial sea could speak, it would doubtless say in the language of a wise Hindu poet:

> I live between perils, abandoned by friends,
> Like an ant on a fire stick lit at both ends.

The beneficent purposes of the Black bill to reduce the hours of service and increase the compensation of certain overworked and underpaid toilers will elicit little sympathy, and command less support, from those who were born with silver spoons in their mouths, rocked in the cradles of luxury, or reared on flowery beds of ease.

Only those who have learned in the severe school of experience, or by long and continuous observation, something of the distress of the homeless, the jobless, and the hungry; only those who know the misery of the countless throng whose hopeless existence is portrayed by the melancholy line:

> The short and simple annals of the poor—will wholeheartedly approve this important measure or diligently endeavor to bestow its proffered blessings upon the children of men.

The necessity for the enactment of the pending legislation is clearly and impressively stated by the President in a message which he sent to the Congress on the 24th day of May, and in which the following appears:

> One-third of our population, the overwhelming majority of which is in agriculture or industry, is ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed.

In other words, every third person in the United States is destitute of necessary clothing. Every third person is either homeless or the occupant of a house or a hut that is not appropriate for human habitation; the wolves of hunger are at the heels of every third person in the land.

Do those who are proposing destructive amendments to the bill believe that the fruits brought forth by the toiling masses have been fairly distributed? If so, let them remember that in this richest of all rich countries, in which wealth has accumulated and millionaires have multiplied beyond the dreams of the most avaricious and optimistic, 20,500,000 American citizens were kept alive exclusively by Federal relief during the year 1933.

And today, after more than 4 years of a rapid, uninterrupted, and unsurpassed return of prosperity to those whose incomes are in the high or middle brackets, more than 12,300,000 of our fellow citizens are still obliged to exist on Federal relief because it is impossible for them to find employment in private industry.

According to the most accurate estimates, more than 8,700,000 men and women who are capable of working with their hands are now idle through no fault of their own.

Today more than 5,800,000 American families—21 percent of our people—are existing on incomes of less than a thousand dollars a year. Three-fifths of American families have incomes of less than $2,000 a year.

On the other hand, in 1935, the last year for which complete figures are available, a certain corporation executive received compensation of $500,000, or $369 more for his services for a single day than the total income upon which any one of more than 5,800,000 American families lived for an entire year. In 1935 another corporation executive received compensation of more than $398,000, and another a salary of more than $374,000, while others received compensation of more than a quarter of a million dollars a year.

The alarming spectacle of fabulous wealth and insufferable poverty living side by side; the menacing pageant of corporation executives with preposterous salaries of a half a million dollars a year ruling employees of the corporation who work long hours for starvation wages should move the Congress to instant and heroic efforts to banish the evils and exile the agonies which a third of the people has so long suffered and so patiently endured.

The amazing lethargy which everywhere manifests itself in this matter lies in the fact that those who enjoy lucrative salaries, live in the lap of abundance, and like the man in the parable are clothed in purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day are utterly incapable of comprehending the misery of those who are pursued by woeful want throughout their weary journey from the cradle to the grave.

The general apathy of the public in matters of righting Nation-wide wrongs has throughout the history of civilization compelled governments to deal directly with evils such as the pending bill is designed to abolish.

In addressing ourselves to the Herculean task before us we should be encouraged by the accomplishments of the governments of other lands. As all within the sound of my voice well know, almost every page of history is marred with recitals of the oppression of the toiling masses for the benefit of the fortunate and the favored few.

In Great Britain prior to 1802 little children under 9 years of age were apprenticed to masters who compelled them to work under the lash 15 hours a day. Women who were soon to become mothers were not only permitted but forced to toil as much as 17 hours a day. But during the last 135 years Great Britain has passed labor laws and established labor conditions which are among the most humanitarian in the world.

From Thomas Buckle's History of Civilization we learn that as late as the latter part of the eighteenth century the word "laborer" in India was a term of reproach; to call a member of the so-called upper class a laborer was to commit an offense punishable by banishment; that a toiler who spoke disrespectfully of a social superior was punished by the burning of his mouth with a red-hot iron. If a laboring man read the sacred books he was subject to the punishment of having burning oil poured into his ears. If he committed any part of the sacred books to memory, he was put to death. But even in India, which is still a backward country, amazing reformations have been made for the benefit of the toilers since the dark and barbarous days of a hundred forty years ago.

Fewer than fourscore years have passed away since human slavery was not only legal in a large part of this country but was defended on the floor of the Senate with eloquence comparable to that with which some of our distinguished antireformers have condemned the Black bill.

But the colored man was eventually emancipated, and some of us now demand that American citizens of every race and complexion be freed from the tyranny of starvation wages and inhuman hours of service. The pending bill may not be perfect, but it is the only one on the subject now before the Senate which has a ghost of a chance of becoming a law before the Congress adjourns.

It will at least do these specific things:

Reduce the hours of service of those who work in sweatshops more than 40 hours a week.

Increase the wages of those who receive less than 40 cents an hour.

Prevent the transportation in interstate commerce of the products of child labor.

It will inevitably spread employment to thousands of the more than 8,000,000 who are now unable to obtain work.

But the illustrious Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], with his usual eloquence and sincerity, condemns what he considers certain defects or dangers in the proposed legislation. He fears that the establishment of an additional bureau will jeopardize the safety of the Republic.

He fears that increased favors will be granted those who represent the vested interests. But within the hour in which the Senator from Idaho spoke, the distinguished and eloquent Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] proclaimed his fears that the Secretary of Labor might peradventure send a union labor leader into the South to organize the cotton-mill workers and the peanut pickers and impose unreasonable burdens upon their employers.

The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is afraid of the bill for a variety of reasons, which he eloquently and vigorously stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from West Virgina on the motion has expired.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me proceed on the bill.

But excepting the Senator from Michigan, not one of those who have declaimed so vigorously against this measure has offered a substitute that has a chance of receiving serious consideration before final adjournment; and the substitute proposed by the Senator from Michigan has, by common consent, been placed in a pigeonhole, from which it cannot possibly emerge before January 1938.

The remainder of the antireformers offer no tangible remedy for social diseases and propose no tangible relief from the evils of unemployment and starvation wages. They content themselves by expressing their fears of taking a single step upon the experimental road to progress upon the apparent theory that it is better to bear those ills we have than to take even a remote chance of flying to others that we know not of. Such philosophy, if it had been followed to its ultimate conclusion, would have meant that the earth would still be "without form and void"; America never would have been discovered, slavery never would have been abolished, and the Declaration of Independence never would have been born.

The best answer to all the fears and apprehensions voiced during the debate is that made by Woodrow Wilson 25 years ago in circumstances similar to those that exist today. Hear what Mr. Wilson says in his New Freedom:

> Does any man doubt the great discontent in this country? Does any man doubt that there are grounds and justifications for discontent? Do we dare stand still? Within the past few months we have witnessed (along with other strange political phenomena, eloquently significant of popular uneasiness) on one side a doubling of the Socialist vote and on the other the posting on dead walls and hoardings all over the country of certain very attractive and diverting bills warning citizens that it was "better to be safe than sorry" and advising them to "let well enough alone."
> Apparently a good many citizens doubted whether the situation they were advised to let alone was really well enough, and concluded that they would take a chance of being sorry. To me these counsels of do-nothingism, these counsels of sitting still for fear something would happen, these counsels addressed to the hopeful, energetic people of the United States, telling them that they are not wise enough to touch their own affairs without marring them, constitute the most extraordinary argument of fatuous ignorance I ever heard. Americans are not yet cowards.

Thank God they are not. Mr. Wilson adds "progress" is the word that charms their ears and stirs their hearts. A majority of the people of this Nation and all true liberals in the Senate desire not to stand still but to go forward with the Black bill.

Our unemployment is at this hour a frightful cancer, persistently and ceaselessly gnawing at the vitals of the Republic. A starvation wage for a third of our working population is a malignant tumor that is only slightly less menacing to the welfare of the Nation than the cancer of unemployment. Both of these deadly afflictions will be cured or the patient will perish and the Government of the United States will at last go to the great international cemetery where sleep the remains of Babylon and Nineveh and Thebes and the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome.

The slogan of this hour should be, not inaction, not cowardly surrender, not timid retreat, but "forward, march", to the tune of Onward, Christian Soldiers, against every enemy of improvement and every foe of reform:

> Come clear the way, then, clear the way.
> Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
> Break the dead branches from the path;
> Our hope is in the aftermath.
> Our hope is in heroic men.
> Star led to build the world again.
> Make way for liberty, make way for men.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit the bill. I regret to find myself in disagreement——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to yield in order that we may have a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well; I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, is it understood that the Senator from Kentucky shall have the floor after the conclusion of the quorum call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday I agreed with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and other Senators that I should attempt to protect the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] so that they might be heard within the time during which we agreed to a limitation on debate. The Senator from Connecticut tells me that he can conclude his remarks in 10 minutes, and I am told that the Senator from New Hampshire believes he can do the same thing and will make an effort to do so. Therefore I shall not occupy the floor now, in order that the Senator from Connecticut may be recognized.

Mr. MALONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I inquire what is the question now before the Senate? Is it the motion to recommit the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question now before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. There are some amendments to be considered which have not as yet been formally offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to recommit the bill takes precedence.

Mr. BORAH. I am aware of that, but I thought perhaps the author of the motion might be willing to withdraw it until the amendments could be disposed of.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, perhaps I can clear it up, if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I inquire whose time is this discussion being taken out of? Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY].

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an article from yesterday's Boston Traveler in which it is stated that officials of Massachusetts branch of the American Federation of Labor are opposed to this bill. I ask that the article be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Boston Traveler of Friday, July 30, 1937]

STATE A. F. OF L. HEAD HITS WAGE BILL—TOO MANY CHANGES MADE IN CONNERY MEASURE, SAYS GATELEE

Officials of the Massachusetts branch of the American Federation of Labor do not favor the Black-Connery wages-and-hours bill in its present form, it was learned today.

When the bill was first framed by the late Congressman Connery, of Lynn, State branch officials sent him a telegram declaring their willingness to uphold the bill, but, says John F. Gatelee, of Holyoke, president of the Massachusetts State federation, in his office at 11 Beacon Street today, "The bill has undergone many changes since that time.

"I am old-fashioned, perhaps, but I believe that labor problems can well be solved by labor itself, and by the employers, rather than by hard and fast rules laid down by a central governmental body.

"Some of the provisions in the Black-Connery bill are well thought out, but as a whole, as it now stands, I am not at all sure I should like to see it pass. There are many labor men in high office in Washington who dislike the bill in its present form.

"Under its present form it might be all right under a benevolent dictator, but the next Executive might be merely a dictator.

"The State federation has taken no official action on the passage of the bill. It may be that at some future meeting we will discuss it and perhaps take some action."

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I had hoped yesterday, and prior thereto, that I might have an opportunity to discuss in some detail the amendment which I have offered and which is in the nature of a substitute for the bill reported by the Committee on Education and Labor. In my desire, however, to cooperate with the majority leader, and in keeping with the agreement entered into yesterday, I am confining myself, at his suggestion, to 10 minutes.

I discussed the amendment submitted by me at some length a day or two ago, and I shall do little more now than attempt to refresh the memory of those who listened then and briefly to explain the amendment to those who were compelled to be absent.

Mr. President, in the beginning I had hoped that I might be able to support the Black-Connery proposal. I know just as well as anyone can know that hundreds of thousands of American men and women are in the industrial wilderness. I know that they need help; I feel that there is a governmental responsibility to bring relief to them; but I do not believe the proposal now before the Senate provides a wise method of reaching the objective, and I further believe if we now give up the rights and the powers and the responsibilities of the Senate and of the other House of Congress that we will not be able to get them back at a later time when the distress may become more severe.

I am not willing to surrender the philosophy so long and so eloquently advocated by the Senator from Alabama. I want to regulate the hours of labor by law; I want to stay within the Constitution; I want the Supreme Court to uphold such legislation as may be enacted on this subject. I do not want to attempt to give away the power of the Congress to five men, who are not now known, to fix wages and hours at their pleasure.

I said the other day that the proposal I have submitted to the Senate would give to the board very great powers to relieve industry and bring relief to labor; but I pointed out that it would not give the board power to do anything that might be harmful to industry or to labor. I pointed out that it would definitely remove sweatshops; that it would definitely prevent the exploitation of child labor; that it would, very probably, cut down the relief rolls of the country and help toward balancing the Budget. I pointed out that it would relieve the great terror of uncertainty in the minds of those who are engaged in industry. I pointed out that it would give labor an economic force; that it would create a competition for labor, and would protect against the unfair competition of what has been described as foreign, coolie labor.

I have attempted, in the little time that I have been permitted to have in the discussion of this bill, to point out that labor was opposed to the measure now being considered. I do not know of a single solitary instance, Mr. President, where labor is opposed to my substitute. I have offered supporting evidence that labor favors the substitute. Even many of those who advocate the so-called Black-Connery bill, insofar as I have been able to ascertain, would prefer the substitute embodied in my proposal, but they do not believe sufficient votes can be secured to bring about its adoption. I think there are sufficient votes in the Senate to do so.

I call the attention of Senators who are concerned with the agricultural problems of their neighborhoods, Senators who are concerned with the fear of foreign competition, and Senators who fear the vicious competition of prison labor that all necessary provision is made in the proposed substitute amendment offered by me to afford the protection they desire.

Mr. President, I have only 2 or 3 minutes left, and I wish to call a witness in support of my measure. I call as a witness one man in this country who should know more than any other man, whether or not the so-called Black-Connery bill would work. I quote from the column in today's Washington News written by the man who originated the N. R. A., the brilliant mind that tried to make it work. He says:

> The wage and hour bill is no good for another reason—it won't work. It puts it up to a board to hold hearings and consider "industry by industry, craft by craft, and locality by locality" what wages and hours should be in hundreds of thousands of separate cases. If it could do that intelligently at all—which it can't—it would take from 20 years to a century. For that reason it won't work. Industries and localities are themselves all competitive. You can't hoist the wage scale of locality or industry A and leave locality or industry B until you can get around to it without upsetting or even ruining locality or industry A. You must move the standards of all competing units up and down together and not piecemeal.
> For both these reasons the practical way is for the law itself to set the standards over wide areas, with due regard to existing differentials, and then leave to your board only the duty of dealing with the relatively few exceptions to the general rule in cases of unusual hardship—instead of having it invent its own rule for each of an infinite variety of cases.
> The difference between this suggestion and the Black bill is the difference between success and failure. The suggestion puts the new standards into effect instantaneously. The few exceptions can be quickly handled. The work of the board is reduced 99 percent. Competitive upsets due to piecemeal wage fixing are avoided. Congress, and not an administrative board, has legislated the standards. The suggestion will work and the Black bill won't.
> How do I know this? Because I tried both methods. One worked, the other failed. In all the mud slinging at the Blue Eagle people forget that the principal trouble came under the codes when we tried to do what the Black bill proposes—handle the job "industry by industry."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I recently offered as an amendment to the so-called Black bill a substitute which would strike out the entire provisions of the Black bill and insert in its stead the provisions which I have previously discussed. I am approaching the measure from the viewpoint of a friend of wage and hour legislation.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McADOO. What is the pending motion before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to recommit the bill.

Mr. McADOO. Is it in order to introduce amendments of any character?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] advised me that he had not called up the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas made the motion. It is not necessary to call it up. He can call it down.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that many Senators have amendments to offer, it had been my thought, if agreeable to other Senators, to defer a vote on the motion to recommit until the amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think we had better proceed in an orderly way. The motion to recommit is a privileged motion. The debate ought to be directed to that motion, although it has gone wide of that field. Of course, if we lay aside the motion and the hour of 3 o'clock arrives, and in the meantime debate is continued on amendments, then further debate on the motion will not be possible.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senate not to take up the last few minutes available to Senators who want to speak on the bill merely in order to discuss parliamentary procedure. Do not deprive us of the short time that remains. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has the floor, and I hope he may be permitted to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I shall yield to no one. I wish to occupy my own time.

The amendment which I have proposed would attain the desired objective, which is adequate minimum-wage and maximum-hour legislation. It would set up the same standards of maximum hours and minimum wages that are set up in the Black bill. However, my amendment contains no delegation of power. It would establish by statute minimum wages of 40 cents per hour and maximum hours of 40 per week. It is a sound, straightforward approach to the wage and hour problem.

My amendment would eliminate the dangerous discretionary powers proposed to be given to a five-man board. It would meet the objection of some Members of the Senate in that it would not become effective until 1 year after passage. It provides for the appointment of a board by the President of this body and the Speaker of the House to study sectional differentials and report to the next session of Congress.

My amendment makes similar exemptions to those made in the Black bill, as well as certain additional exemptions. In my judgment, any Senator can vote for my amendment with a clear conscience, knowing that he is voting for suitable wage and hour legislation. The provisions are set forth in a distinct manner. If it should be put upon the statute books and enforced by the courts and district attorneys of the country it would accomplish the desired purposes. Under the provisions of my amendment we would convey to no board wide, discretionary powers, setting them us as czars in control of industry and labor, a feature of the pending bill which has met the opposition of labor and industry alike. The adoption of such a proposal would probably result in tying a millstone around the necks of both labor and industry. I think I have offered a sound approach to the problem, and when the opportunity presents itself for a vote upon my amendment to the bill I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I said a while ago, I am going to occupy only a few minutes in opposition to the motion to recommit. In the short time at my disposal I shall not, of course, have the opportunity to go into a detailed discussion of the measure.

I am opposed to the motion to recommit, and I hope it will be defeated, because, in my judgment, if the motion to recommit should carry, it would mean no legislation on the subject of wages and hours at this session of Congress.

Mr. President, 4 years ago there were some 15,000,000 unemployed able-bodied men in the United States. We have by various methods up to this hour been able to reduce that army of unemployed men to somewhere between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000. There are many well-informed, patriotic, and sincere Americans, without regard to political affiliations, who believe the time has come, or will soon come, when we must consider legislation designed to spread employment among those available for its performance in order that every American who desires work may have it. If we have arrived at a time in this country when we must choose between two horns of a dilemma, one of which is that all our people may work three-fourths of the time and the other that three-fourths of them may work all the time and one-fourth of them never work, then I choose the former. I believe it will be socially, economically, and industrially more wholesome and safe for all the available labor in America to be able to work three-fourths of the time than for three-fourths of it to work all the time and one-fourth never to work.

The bill makes a modest beginning by undertaking to establish among the laborers who are not organized, who have no voice around the conference table, who have no mechanics through which to make a choice of representatives in collective bargaining, an opportunity and possibility of spreading employment among all those able and willing to perform it in order that those who are willing and able to perform it may obtain work.

I am opposed to the motion to recommit the bill because I think the Committee on Education and Labor, the Members of the Senate, and the administration itself, overwhelmingly returned to power only a little more than 6 months ago, are entitled to a vote on the work of the committee which has brought the bill here. If the Members of this body are opposed to it, let them oppose it in a vote. If they desire to kill the bill, let them do it on the front porch and not in the kitchen, in order to establish an alibi that might satisfy somebody with respect to their attitude upon the measure.

It has been claimed that certain representatives of labor were not given an opportunity to be heard before the Committee on Education and Labor. I hold in my hand the printed hearings of the committee, which began on the 2d day of June and ended on the 22d day of June. The hearings comprise more than 1,200 pages of testimony taken by the committee, whose chairman is the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. Not a single American citizen, whether he was an employer or employee, was denied the opportunity to be heard before the committee. Neither of the gentlemen whose letters have been read here today asked to be heard before the committee, and, therefore, they were not denied the opportunity to be heard before the committee.

We have heard much sarcastic criticism because the bill would create a board to administer its provisions. We are told that Congress ought to write a bill providing maximum hours and minimum wages, that Congress ought to sit here in an effort to provide the detailed regulations in order that a minimum-wage and maximum-hour law might be written on the statute books. In the next breath, after we are urged to do that, we are told that we ought to go home because we are all fagged out in mind and body because of our extended labors here during the last 7 months.

Mr. President, suppose the farmers and carpenters of America should decide that they ought to quit work; suppose the miners of America should decide that climatic conditions and weather do not suit them and might endanger their health, and they should walk out like a tired steer in the middle of the road and go home and not work any more? Suppose the workers in our great automobile factories, our great shoe shops, our great railroad shops, all the employees in the country outside of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives should decide that they ought to quit work and go home, what would be the social and economic results to the people of the United States? Are we to confess that we are less interested in the welfare of the American people than are others?

We are asked to recommit this bill because it creates a board. The same argument was heard in 1887 when the act to regulate commerce was passed by Congress. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday said he was not here then. Neither was I; neither were any of us; but we know, as a matter of history, that when the act to regulate commerce was under consideration by Congress the same argument was urged against the creation of an Interstate Commerce Commission that is now urged against the creation of the board which is set up in this bill. It was charged that the Interstate Commerce Commission would be arbitrary, and it was asserted on the floor of both Houses that under the commerce clause the House and Senate ought to write railroad rates and regulate all the other practices that might be indulged in by interstate carriers in the United States because the creation of a board or commission might result in arbitrary action. Yet for 50 years the Interstate Commerce Commission has functioned, and it was created because Congress knew that Congress itself could not write the detailed regulations of railroad practices, and write in the statutes the rates that should apply in various sections of the country.

I was here, and so was the Senator from Idaho, when in 1913, under the leadership of the able and distinguished and beloved Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], we established a Federal Reserve System, and created the Federal Reserve Board. The same arguments were made then, that the Federal Reserve Board ought not to be set up to control banking and currency and money; and yet for 24 years the Federal Reserve Board has functioned because it was recognized that Congress could not sit here and write the detailed provisions of banking and monetary regulation.

I was here in 1914, as a Member of another body, when, under the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Federal Trade Commission was set up; and the same argument was made then. We were trying to unchoke the channels of commerce. We were trying to make it unnecessary for little business and big business to undergo the delays and hardships of litigation in the Federal courts. We were trying to set up a commission which should exercise jurisdiction that was quasi-judicial in undertaking to clear the channels of commerce for the benefit of American business; and when that bill was under consideration the same argument was advanced that is now advanced against the board set up in this bill.

Only a few years ago, when the marvelous invention known as the radio came into existence, by which we may step into our living rooms, and, by turning a metallic dial a fraction of an inch, bring to our ears the music and the oratory and the information that float around through the air, because there was chaos in the atmosphere, because there was no authority anywhere to allocate the channels or the currents of the air, nobody could get a particular program, nobody knew when he turned on his radio that he would be able to get any intelligent response anywhere in the world, we set up the Radio Commission, which recently has been transformed into the Communications Commission. While it has made its mistakes, and while we may all disapprove of some policies that may have been inaugurated by it, no one can deny that it has cleared the atmosphere and brought order out of chaos in this modern method of instruction and entertainment.

When, a year or two ago, under the leadership of our friend the chairman of the Committee on Finance, Mr. HARRISON, we set up a social-security law, we created a Social Security Board; and the same argument was then used that is now advanced against the creation of this board. There is not a State in the Union that has a workmen's compensation law or a social-security law, or any other law dealing en masse with the problems of humanity, that has not created a board or commission to administer that law, because neither Congresses nor legislatures, sitting in their capacity as legislatures and Congresses, have either the time or the disposition to regulate all the details necessary to administer such an act.

When we were in the latter part of the Hoover administration, finding ourselves in economic disaster, when the banks of our country were no longer able or disposed to loan money to business, did we set up here in Congress a committee to loan money from the Treasury to railroads and insurance companies and banks and industries? No; we created the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has loaned more than $10,000,000,000 of the people's money to industry and transportation all over the United States.

A choice between a board and anything else means, as an alternative, no legislation. A board must administer this law or it will not be administered. We must either set up a board to carry out the general policy of Congress or we must do nothing. There are only those two alternatives.

Mr. President, we have been told that in certain sections of the country the proposed legislation will work a hardship. I do not wish to indulge in anything that might be regarded as sectional. I now live within 18 miles of the place where I was born, and that is south of the Ohio River. A large part of whatever education I now have was obtained in the State of Georgia, under the tutelage of one of the greatest men, in my judgment, who ever lived in any State or in any nation. I know the people of that section of our country. I know their background. I know their history. I know their philosophy. I know their chivalry and their patriotism; their devotion to the welfare of their country. I have found, by observation and experience, that there is not a very great difference between the people of the United States of America, no matter where they come from; for all through their hearts there is a golden thread of unity of purpose and of loyalty to the nationality which is represented by our flag and by our Constitution and by our institutions. I do not, therefore, entertain the fear that this legislation will work an injustice to any section of our country. I should not be so bold as to say that it may not make it necessary for some individual establishment to change its hours of labor and perhaps its wages; but, after all, Mr. President and Members of this great body, we are not dealing here with cold economic financial figures. We are dealing with human problems, with social problems; and while we may talk about balancing our financial budgets, I should like to see millions of unbalanced lives in the United States balanced, as well as to balance the financial institutions which we are supposed to support by the taxes which we levy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order not to trespass upon the time which is needed, and which, by agreement, I promised to help others obtain, I shall not occupy any further time, except to say that I sincerely trust the motion to recommit the bill may be defeated.

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. SHIPSTEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, was there an agreement that the Senator from South Carolina should be recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is under the rules of the Senate, is it? I was on the floor and asked recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair saw the Senator from South Carolina on the floor at the same time; and, having in mind the agreement that had been made with the Senator from South Carolina, the occupant of the chair recognized him.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, when this proposal was submitted to the Senate it was my hope and expectation that the committee would report a bill that I could support.

Last week end for the first time I had an opportunity to study the hearings and study the bill. After reading it and studying its provisions I came to the conclusion that it would be unwise at this time for the Senate to pass this measure. Therefore I shall vote for the motion to recommit the bill.

In doing so my action cannot be construed as any criticism of the committee. I believe they have done all they could do under the circumstances, and in the limited time at their disposal, to apply a principle which we all favor to a concrete proposal in legislative form; but I say without fear of successful contradiction that there are few men on the floor of the Senate who now know the effect of this measure. I admit that I do not know it. I challenge any man to say that he has studied section 8 (a) and believes that it is constitutional. There is not a lawyer who will study it, who will read the Schechter decision and the decision of the Supreme Court on the Labor Relations Act and who will conclude that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I have a memorandum relating to the constitutionality of this section, which I shall not take the time to read, but I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Section 8 (a) and (b) of Senate bill 2475 is plainly unconstitutional. Its constitutionality is not supported by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the group of cases known as the Shreveport Rate cases (234 U. S. 342, decided in 1914), and its unconstitutionality is so clearly decided in the Schechter, or N. R. A., case (295 U. S. 495, at pp. 544–550) as to leave no reasonable doubt on the question.

It must be remembered that the Schechter case was no 5-to-4 decision. The Supreme Court was unanimous in that case. Brandeis and Stone and Cardozo, as well as Hughes and Roberts, Van Devanter, McReynolds, Butler, and Sutherland, held that what was attempted there went beyond the constitutional power of Congress. A reexamination of that part of the Schechter case opinion which deals with the attempt by Federal legislation to effect labor standards in purely intrastate production and selling will show that the Court's holding on what was there attempted by Federal legislation directly applies to that which it is sought to accomplish by section 8 of the legislation now proposed.

No one will dispute that Congress has not only the right by legislation to regulate interstate commerce, but the right to regulate, prohibit, and provide standards for many transactions which, though they are not carried on in interstate commerce, do directly affect that commerce. But beyond this we cannot constitutionally go. Even though intrastate transactions do, in some respects, affect interstate matters, that does not give the Congress the power to control them, if the effect be indirect rather than direct. And in the Schechter case it was directly held that wages, hours of work, and like labor standards in commerce which was entirely intrastate were not within the constitutional power of Congress, even though the intrastate products sought to be affected did in fact come in competition with products which were the subject of interstate commerce.

The Court pointed out that the question which must be answered is, Did the transactions directly affect interstate commerce so as to be subject to Federal regulation? The Court expressly distinguished the Shreveport Rate case and other cases involving interstate carriers which also engage in intrastate transportation. In rejecting the contention that Congress could legislate respecting commerce, though it be entirely intrastate, if the goods produced and sold therein came in competition with goods produced and sold in interstate commerce, because necessarily the latter were affected by the competition of the former, the Court said (546):

"But where the effect of intrastate transactions upon interstate commerce is merely indirect, such transactions remain within the domain of State power. If the commerce clause were construed to reach all enterprises and transactions which could be said to have an indirect effect upon interstate commerce, the Federal authority would embrace practically all the activities of the people and the authority of the State over its domestic concerns would exist only by sufferance of the Federal Government. Indeed, on such a theory, even the development of the State's commercial facilities would be subject to Federal control."

Saying that the distinction between direct and indirect effects has been clearly recognized in the application not only of railroad rate acts but of the Antitrust Act, and reviewing cases which came within as well as those that were without such Federal legislation, the Court, after a review of prior decisions, quoted what it had previously said in Industrial Association v. United States (268 U. S. 64). I read that quotation from page 547 of the Chief Justice's opinion in the Schechter case:

"The * * * acts here complained of spent their intended and direct force upon a local situation—for building is as essentially local as mining, manufacturing, or growing crops—and if, by a resulting diminution of the commercial demand, interstate trade was curtailed either generally or in specific instances, that was a fortuitous consequence so remote and indirect as plainly to cause it to fall outside the reach of the Sherman Act."

That is to say, outside the reach of the Federal legislative power.

The Supreme Court followed its review of previous cases, which related to the application of Federal statutes, such as the Antitrust case, with this observation, pertinent to the discussion of the matter now before us (p. 548):

"While these decisions related to the application of the Federal statute, and not to its constitutional validity, the distinction between direct and indirect effects of intrastate transactions upon interstate commerce must be recognized as a fundamental one, essential to the maintenance of our constitutional system. Otherwise, as we have said, there would be virtually no limit to the Federal power, and for all practical purposes we should have a completely centralized Government."

It will be remembered that a question of chief importance in the Schechter case related to the provisions of the N. R. A. code as to the hours and wages of those employed in the defendants' slaughterhouse markets. Those requirements were imposed in order to govern the defendants' management of their local business. Referring to this question, the Court said (p. 548):

"The persons employed in slaughtering and selling in local trade are not employed in interstate commerce. Their hours and wages have no direct relation to interstate commerce. The question of how many hours these employees should work and what they should be paid differs in no essential respect from similar questions in other local businesses which handle commodities brought into a State and there dealt in as a part of its internal commerce. This appears from an examination of the considerations urged by the Government with respect to conditions in the poultry trade. Thus the Government argues that hours and wages affect prices; that slaughterhouse men sell at a small margin above operating costs; that labor represents 50 to 60 percent of these costs; that a slaughterhouse operator paying lower wages or reducing his cost by exacting long hours of work translates his saving into lower prices; that this results in demands for a cheaper grade of goods; and that the cutting of prices brings about a demoralization of the price structure. Similar conditions may be adduced in relation to other businesses. The argument of the Government proves too much. If the Federal Government may determine the wages and hours of employees in the internal commerce of a State, because of their relation to cost and prices and their indirect effect upon interstate commerce, it would seem that a similar control might be exerted over other elements of cost, also affecting prices, such as the number of employees, rents, advertising, methods of doing business, etc. All the processes of production and distribution that enter into cost could likewise be controlled. If the cost of doing an intrastate business is in itself the permitted object of Federal control, the extent of the regulation of cost would be a question of discretion and not of power.

"The Government also makes the point that efforts to enact State legislation establishing high labor standards have been impeded by the belief that unless similar action is taken generally commerce will be diverted from the States adopting such standards, and that this fear of diversion has led to demands for Federal legislation on the subject of wages and hours. The apparent implication is that the Federal authority under the commerce clause should be deemed to extend to the establishment of rules to govern wages and hours in intrastate trade and industry generally throughout the country, thus overriding the authority of the States to deal with domestic problems arising from labor conditions in their internal commerce."

Of course, what has just been quoted from the language of the Schechter case cannot be distinguished from the questions which are presented by section 8 of this bill and the arguments made in support of the constitutionality of the provisions of the N. R. A. code, seeking to prescribe labor standards in wholly intrastate production and selling, cannot be distinguished from the arguments which must be made in an effort to support the claim to constitutionality of this section 8. Having stated those arguments, and what they unescapably led to, the Supreme Court, in the Schechter case, continued (p. 549):

"It is not the province of the Court to consider the economic advantages or disadvantages of such a centralized system. It is sufficient to say that the Federal Constitution does not provide for it. Our growth and development have called for wide use of the commerce power of the Federal Government in its control over the expanded activities of interstate commerce, and in protecting that commerce from burdens, interferences, and conspiracies to restrain and monopolize it. But the authority of the Federal Government may not be pushed to such an extreme as to destroy the distinction, which the commerce clause itself establishes, between commerce 'among the several States' and the internal concerns of a State."

The motive to improve labor standards in American industries is a highly commendable one. The power of the Federal Government in that sphere is obviously broad. But it is clear that however fine the motive, however broad the power, nevertheless the "efforts of the Federal Government must be made in a manner consistent with the authority granted by the Constitution." If Congress is to have power to regulate all commerce, intrastate as well as interstate, then that power can come to Congress only by an amendment to the Constitution made by the people in the manner provided for in the Nation's charter. It is too much to expect that the Supreme Court of the United States would thus soon seriously consider overruling the doctrine unanimously laid down by it just 2 years ago.

There is nothing in the National Labor Relations Board cases, under the Wagner Act, decided April 12, 1937, that weakens anything thus far said. It is true that the Court in those later cases advanced considerably beyond its own position in the earlier cases dealing with manufacture, mining, and farming. But in the last analysis what the Court held in the Wagner Labor Act cases was that the direct effect of labor troubles in the manufacturing plant of an employer whose business is predominantly interstate is to interrupt, obstruct, and prevent the free flow of goods in interstate commerce, and that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce includes the power to enact legislation designed to prevent such interruption or obstruction. The extent to which the Court went was that, as applied to labor relations in manufacturing operations of concerns whose business is predominantly interstate in character, the Wagner Labor Act is valid and constitutional under the power to regulate interstate commerce.

Equally clear from a study of those decisions is it that where Congress attempts to regulate intrastate commerce, or an operation not involving commerce at all, such as manufacturing, the direct effect of the legislation must be to protect or to prevent injury to or obstruction of interstate commerce, otherwise the attempt would be futile because beyond the constitutional power.

Section 8 (a) of the bill now before the Senate goes beyond what was condemned in the Schechter case. As we have seen, in that case N. R. A. was held to be unconstitutional, since the effect of the transactions and relations which N. R. A. sought to regulate were so indirect and remote upon interstate commerce in the business in which the defendants were engaged that they could not constitutionally be regulated by Congress. Section 8 (a) of the bill before the Senate would give the board to be created under the provisions of this act authority to make an order prohibiting the continuance of certain labor practices and commanding the maintenance of labor standards prescribed by the board in any industry producing goods entirely in one State, which goods are sold exclusively in that State. In other words, this section would regulate the labor relations of local manufacturers and local merchants who sell their goods only in one State, and it is clear that that is exactly what the Schechter case has held Congress cannot constitutionally do.

As I read the 1937 Labor Act decisions of the Supreme Court, the Federal Government cannot regulate labor standards in local manufacturing operations, even where the products of the employer are partly sold in interstate commerce—where a predominant part of the products manufactured are sold within the State in which they are manufactured; and this seems to be true, even though the raw materials are purchased from outside the State. Nevertheless we find that section 8 would make subject to Federal regulation labor relations of local manufacturers and merchants dealing exclusively intrastate, if the Federal labor standards board determines that those exclusively intrastate transactions are in products which come into competition with interstate products. It is interesting to note that Assistant Attorney General Jackson, in his statement in support of the original draft of this bill before the Senate and House Labor Committees, did not once refer to the Schechter decision in his discussion of the power of Congress, under the interstate-commerce clause, to enact this legislation. I think the explanation of this is that Mr. Jackson interpreted the original draft of the bill as not including that which we find in section 8 (a). I say this because I find Mr. Jackson speaking of the bill as originally proposed as follows (p. 7, pt. I, of the hearings):

"Care has been taken to hold the pending bill to a good-faith regulation of interstate commerce and nothing more. Any State may use child labor or sweated labor for products of home consumption as much as it pleases, so long as it does not divert or affect interstate commerce in so doing. The State may exploit youth in its internal affairs as far as its own conscience will permit, but it cannot dump its children into the Nation's markets to demoralize our national standards."

If section 8 (a) and (b) of this bill could be held to be a constitutional exercise of the Federal legislative power, then it is not too much to say that no transactions in the production of and trading in commodities on any considerable scale, though absolutely confined to the localities where the production and trading took place, is beyond the regulatory power of Congress. In other words, if this section is constitutional, then, except in the most inconsequential or trifling of transactions, there is no longer any distinction, so far as the legislative power is concerned, between interstate and intrastate commerce.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from many Members of the Senate with whom I have discussed this section, I received the response that they have not had time to study the bill; yet Senators can vote for it only on the theory that it is constitutional. If it is constitutional, then under this bill every local transaction, purely intrastate, would come under the jurisdiction of congressional legislation.

Much has been said of the textile industry. I am not so much interested in what the textile industry thinks of it.

The textile industry in my State would be affected in only a small measure. They are now paying code wages in the vast majority of cases.

But I am interested in the effect upon small industries. I did not know until this week that there were quite so many small industries in my State. But this week I was deeply interested when a group of citizens came to tell me how this measure would affect them. It brought to my mind what I think will later be brought to the minds of all Senators—that this measure will affect the lives and the happiness of more people than we anticipate at this moment.

The little ice-cream factory, the bottling works, the basket factory, the iceman who sells ice to the American fruit growers to ice cars for transportation of their vegetables, the mattress factory with 15 or 10 employees, the furniture manufacturer.

These industries can do business today. They have only a few employees, and are able, in the section in which they operate, to pay wages less than the objective provided in the bill. They can compete with the machine-made furniture or machine-made products of companies with greater capital only because of the differential in labor. Pass this bill and there will be more unemployment in this country than there is at this moment.

It is said that the owner of one of these small industries can get an exemption. Well, we remember N. R. A. Then the industries of the country were divided up into codes, a code for each industry. Still, we could never get to anyone with authority to pass upon any exemptions.

I see in this bill the prospect that hereafter every Senator and every Representative will be besieged daily by people seeking exemptions who today have no idea of what is coming to them under its provisions.

When a man walks into a little factory in some town today and tells the man running the factory what we are proposing to do he will be met with laughter. When he learns what we are doing to him he will appeal to his Senator—and I hope his Senator will have an answer. I have not an answer.

It is said that we exempt the farmer. Exempt the farmer? He is the only man who will be made to pay more for lumber, for ice, for all the other products he uses. A farmer of my State stated to the South Carolina delegation this week, "If you write into the bill a provision that we can get a minimum price of 40 cents a pound for cotton, we do not care if you do provide for the payment of 40 cents an hour for labor." But we cannot do it for the farmer. This bill affects the farmer in many ways. When we raise the wages of other people in the community we take the farmer's labor from him. We can raise the price of the furniture, lumber, and other products the cotton farmer must purchase, but the price for his product is fixed in world markets.

Then we are told, "It is all right to leave it to a bureau." There was the Walsh-Healey Act. I have in mind that the Department, in construing that act, fixed no differential throughout this country until this week, when 2½ cents an hour was fixed. The exact language of the Walsh-Healey Act is in the Works Progress Act. Another department construing the Works Progress Act fixed a differential between Mississippi and New York of $40 a month.

What department will construe the proposed legislation? If they construe it against your views, will you say that you did not have time to consider this bill, that you left it to the House? Will the House include the retailer? No. Is a girl who works long hours in a 5-and-10-cent store included? No. Will any relief be given to employees of that kind, or is this law and its restrictions only for the little manufacturers in the little towns of this Nation?

Labor itself is divided, as evidenced from the letters of the officials of the American Federation of Labor. But proponents say something must be done. Well, we do not have to adjourn. I should like to have Congress adjourn, but I would far rather stay here and see that Congress has a greater opportunity to do justice to the little manufacturer in the towns of this country than to adjourn, go home, and have to answer the questions he will be asking me as to the effect of the law. I would rather stay here than by this law cause the closing of a business and the discharge of employees.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I intend to take but 2 or 3 minutes more, but I cannot yield.

In conclusion let me say that I voted for the Walsh-Healey Act. I voted for the Wagner Act. I voted for every labor act I can recall having been presented to the Congress since I have been a Member of the Congress. No man can say that any antagonism to labor causes me to ask that the pending bill be thoroughly considered in the hope that we may arrive at an agreement as to a measure which would enable us to vote for an objective we so heartily desire to attain. But why do we have to be in such a hurry? The world is not coming to an end in the next 3 months. Thanks to the achievements of the Democratic administration, this country has recovered from the depression. There is no emergency. The people are not anxious for us to act hastily upon a matter of this kind. Their condition is improving; they are going about their daily avocations busy and happy. It is not necessary for us immediately to pass a measure when we do not know the effect it will have upon the people in our States. Why not send the bill back to the committee and let them give further consideration to it?

The Senator from Kentucky refers to the Federal Reserve Board. For more than 6 months there was an Aldrich-Vreeland Commission investigating the currency question. Then, under the leadership of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], we sat for many more months considering that question. A bill was brought before the House of Representatives, a Democratic caucus was held, and that caucus was in session for 2 weeks considering that measure, line by line, to see how it would affect the people of America before it was passed. The bill was considered in the Senate for some months. Now, after 4 days' debate, we are asked to pass the pending bill, which will affect every little business throughout this Nation of ours.

Mr. President, I ask only that the bill be sent back to the committee in order that an opportunity may be given to the capable chairman of the committee, who desires to accomplish the same object every one of us desires, to see if he cannot report a bill that will meet with the approval of the Senate and meet with the approval of the country.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in the few minutes that I have I should like to discuss without interruption some of the things which have been said. I have not had any opportunity to discuss the bill in that way since it came on the floor.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a simple request?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator from Alabama submitted for the RECORD a letter from a Louisiana baker in reference to the hours and wages of labor. The information contained in the letter is wholly incorrect, according to the two telegrams I have just received, one from George Heebe, president of the Louisiana Bakers' Association, as well as a telegram received from Mr. Daniel J. Bordages, an employee of the A. J. Scwabe Bakery in New Orleans.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest the Senator put the telegrams in the RECORD, because my time is limited.

Mr. OVERTON. I was about to make a request for unanimous consent that the two telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 31, 1937.

Senator JOHN H. OVERTON:

That letter received by Senator BLACK from a New Orleans baker is not a true picture of the circumstances existing in the bakeries in New Orleans. In all of the large bakeries in New Orleans the bakers receive from $18 to $40 for a 6-day week; also they never work more than 8 or 9 hours a day.

Respectfully,

GEORGE HEEBE.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 31, 1937.

Senator JOHN H. OVERTON,
Senate Office Building:

Surprised see letter this morning's Times Picayune about working conditions New Orleans bakeries, which is not true, and think you should correct. To my knowledge responsible bakeries here have good working conditions, with 8-hour average per day, 6 days a week, and minimum pay $22 week. Also there is shortage of competent bakers here. I wish state letter received by Senator BLACK is gross misrepresentation of conditions in baking industry New Orleans. I am employee of A. J. Scwabe Bakery, 4229 Magazine Street; in this plant we have six bakers, and working conditions described above prevail.

DANIEL J. BORDAGES.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. BLACK. I would much prefer to have the Senator ask his question at some other time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is important to ask it now. I should like to ask the Senator whether he intends to occupy all the remainder of the time.

Mr. BLACK. I intend to discuss the bill. I had intended to discuss the bill for 30 minutes, but the situation was such that I could not do so.

Mr. President, with reference to the statement just put into the RECORD, the letter I placed in the RECORD was from an individual who worked in a bakery. It was not from the president of the State bakers' association.

Mr. OVERTON. I have a telegram also from an employee of a bakery.

Mr. BLACK. The employee of the bakery may not work the hours I stated. Of course, I did not vouch for the statement made by the employee. He wrote me a letter and I put it into the RECORD.

I wish to read very briefly from the Democratic national platform, which the Senator from South Carolina, and I, and others, including the Senator from New York, as a subcommittee, stayed up all night writing. Let me read this quotation:

> We know that minimum wages, maximum hours • • • cannot be adequately handled exclusively by 48 separate State legislatures, 48 several State administrations, and 48 separate State courts. Transactions and activities which inevitably overflow State boundaries call for both State and Federal treatment.
> We have sought and will continue to seek to meet these problems through legislation within the Constitution.

We are now trying to carry out that platform, a platform which was approved by the American people, a platform which was repudiated by the national president of the Building Trades Association, who is today presenting arguments here again against the Democratic platform and against carrying it out.

It will be recalled that about the only leading representative of the American Federation of Labor who could be secured to fight under the Republican banner against this platform was Mr. Hutchinson, of the carpenters' union, and he fought against minimum-wage and maximum-hour laws. But the Democrats of this country who went around and spoke to the people did not tell the people they opposed minimum wages and maximum hours. I wonder how many of them who made speeches over this country said then they were opposed to minimum wages and maximum hours. If they did not, they stood upon the Democratic platform.

I am not surprised at the message of the gentleman who continues his fight now. The voice is the voice of the gentleman who sent in the protest, the same voice that we heard during the campaign in 1936, but methinks the hands are still the hands of the Republican National Committee.

The Democratic Party declared itself for minimum wages and maximum hours. We promised them to the people. We did not promise to make motions to recommit; we promised to enact legislation.

Is anyone who came before the Committee on Education and Labor and asked it to adopt a single amendment asking that the bill be recommitted? If it was so important that amendments be adopted, why were they not offered to the committee when it was considering the bill? If it is so important that we recommit the bill for consideration, what amendments have been suggested by those who intend to vote to recommit? The only one I have heard of is one which would postpone action until Congress meets again. Have they offered amendments to improve the bill so that it would meet objections which they say they have?

Mr. President, who is it that is moving to recommit the bill on the ground that it gives power to a board? Which one of the Senators has made a motion to write into law a 30-hour week, a 35-hour week, a 40-hour week, a 45-hour week, or even a 65-hour week? Who of those objecting to giving this power to the board has done so? I will say that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] did. But who, of all those who object to giving this power to the board and who stand on the Democratic platform, has said that he wants the Congress to adopt a 30-cent minimum wage, a 35-cent minimum wage, a 40-cent minimum wage, a 10-cent minimum wage, a 50-cent minimum wage, or any other minimum wage?

Mr. President, we are now asked to send the bill back to the committee which had it under consideration for many weeks. We are asked to send it back to the committee in order that the committee may consider—what? The fact that somebody does not like it. However, if Senators stand on the platform of the Democratic Party, they must believe in minimum wages and maximum hours.

Mr. President, I understand that delegations from various States have come to Washington, as stated by my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. He said a delegation of "little men" had come up here. I wonder if they were little enough to be working in the State of South Carolina, like some others I have indicated, who labor for as little as 10 cents an hour and for as long as 10 or 12 hours a day. I wonder if any of those little people have come to the city of Washington to protest against the passage of this bill.

Mr. President, I am very greatly interested in the little fellows. I am interested in the little fellows who are not able to come to Washington. I am interested in the little fellows who are not able to send their representatives to sit up in the gallery over here [indicating] day after day, or in the other gallery over there [indicating].

My friends, I am interested in the little people for whom we promised the Nation we would show our concern, those who work long hours, to the destruction of their health, at wages inadequate for them to support themselves and their children.

Mr. President, I listened with great interest to the statement of my friend the distinguished Senator from the State of Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] as he talked feelingly, and drew a picture of an ox that in the evening shadows, before the sun went down, went to rest under the tree. It was a very sad and pathetic picture. I myself have seen that old ox. I understand that he does want to go to the shade of the tree. We have laws which prevent cruelty to animals such as the ox. But there are others who like the shade of the tree. They would even like to get through their work before the twilight has arrived. They would even like to rest, just as my good friend the Senator from Mississippi said he would like to rest, as the memories of the old ox that went under the shade of the tree prompted his desire to rest his weary limbs. All over the Nation at this time, as we talk, there are those who work who would like to rest their weary limbs.

Senators say, "We are for the principle, but we are against the bill." I have heard that ever since anybody ever introduced a bill.

I have in my desk an article written more than 100 years ago. A man wrote a speech, and he called it "The Speech of Mr. Noodle." He said you could find similar speeches made in the legislative bodies everywhere, and he gave the reasons why men were against various proposals. They were usually for the principle, they were for the objective, but they were against the method. They were for the principle and for the objective, but they wanted to have a commission appointed. They told their constituents that they were for the principle and for the objective.

Senators have stood on party platforms which promised relief to the men and women of this Nation, but they are not for it at the time the bill is ready to be voted upon; they do not want to vote on it until it can be more fully studied by a committee, which has already heard every witness who desired to be heard and which has permitted anyone to testify who wanted to be heard, and which heard witnesses from the very day the committee began its hearings until it finally closed its hearings.

Mr. President, some time ago I went into a State in New England where it is said that good hours of work are observed. I had heard of the hours they worked. It was the State of my good friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. I visted a great factory town in that State. It so happened that I conversed with people I knew well. I learned that in the great and progressive State of Connecticut people worked long hours in the mills within a very short distance from where I stayed, at a time when more than 8,000,000 people had no jobs at all. Young women went to work in those mills in the early morning hours, before the sun had come over the eastern horizon, and they remained at work, with 30 minutes for lunch, until after the sun had sunk into its western resting place.

As we talk today, and as we pledge allegiance to the principle that we promised to carry into effect, and as we continue to exhibit our undying love and admiration and fondness for the little people who work long hours all over the Nation, 8,000,000 and more of our people are doing nothing at all. Many of those little people have to go to work in the early morning hours, so early that they do not have much time to think about principle or method or objective, and they remain at their labor until the evening shadows gather. As one of them wrote me, all they can do is to go to their place of work shortly after they rise in the morning and come home from their place of work and immediately go to sleep. Work and sleep; sleep and work.

Mr. President, it is said that this bill has poetry in it. I should thank God if it had. I cannot forget that the great poets of the world have never failed, down through the ages, to raise their voices in behalf of the helpless and the weak. I cannot forget that more than 2,000 years ago they raised their voices in behalf of the weak and the helpless in the ancient countries of the world. Somehow I have always thought that the poetic phrase, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden", was perhaps more than anything else responsible for the unpopularity of the One who spoke it.

I do not forget that "man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." I do not forget the Song of the Shirt, the lilting melody of which, with all its beauty and all its purity, did so much to awaken the people of its generation to a realization of abuses that must be stopped.

I am told that this bill will injure the farmers of the country, the farmers whose sons trudge into the mills of the city, the farmers whose children have replenished the ranks of the workers of America. I am told that the bill will injure the farmers whose chief customers for the shirts made from the cotton they grow in the fields are the workers of America, whose chief customers for the food they raise are the workers of this country—the workers who would like to have that food if they could get it, but who sometimes are compelled, as they were a few days ago, to burrow into the garbage cans to take out the refuse they can get from them which comes from the tables of others. No one can tell me that the farmers will be injured by improving the condition of those workers.

My friends, thank God for the poetry in this bill if it but reaches a single heart, if it but reaches the standards of American citizens, if it but cuts off unnecessarily long hours that people are toiling, while others live on the dole.

Mr. President, let there be no misunderstanding: A motion to recommit is a motion to kill the bill. Every Senator knows it. If we want to vote against the bill, let us stand up and vote against it. Let it be known that we are against minimum wages and maximum hours. A vote to recommit is a vote against a bill for minimum wages and maximum hours.

I cannot have all I want written in the bill. Other Senators cannot. No other person can. But for weeks and months we have worked and we have labored and we have toiled on the bill. We have brought the bill to the Senate in compliance with the overwhelming mandate of American men and women. We speak for the little men and women, whose voices too frequently are not heard. We are in the city of Washington. They have no representatives up in that gallery, nor over there in the other gallery, nor anywhere, unless it might have been the man who was taken from the gallery today. But, my friends, they are the ones for whom we promised to pass legislation. If Senators are against the bill, let them vote against the bill. If they are for a bill for minimum wages and maximum hours, let them vote against recommittal.

I come from the South, and I am proud of it. I believe I speak the language of its people. My ancestors have been buried under the soil of the South since before the Revolutionary War. They settled in Halifax County, Va. They settled in South Carolina and in the grand old State of Georgia. An uncle of mine marched forward in the face of the shells at Gettysburg, and I am proud of it. My father, at the age of 14 years—the last one in his family who had not gone into the war—ran away and volunteered under the Stars and Bars. The first-born of my father's family was named for Gen. Robert E. Lee, and another was named for "Gallant" Pelham, whose name is a hallowed one in all parts of Alabama and the South. I speak for the little men and women of Alabama and of the Nation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, the time for debate has expired. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to recommit the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to make a request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote first on the amendments and then on the motion to recommit. I think Senators ought to have an opportunity to have a vote on their amendments. I make the request that that course be followed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on all pending amendments and also those to be offered?

Mr. CONNALLY. All those offered. I do not know how many are offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas that the vote on all pending amendments and all amendments that may be offered be taken before voting on the motion to recommit?

Mr. BLACK. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama objects.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. In case the Senator from Texas should now withdraw the motion to recommit would it be in order for him to reoffer it later?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would, and the next amendment which is pending, whatever amendment is pending, would be in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. I asked would the Senator from Texas be permitted to reoffer the motion to recommit after the disposition of the amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. Until the bill is disposed of, any motion may be made by any Senator having the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then, the Senator from Texas will withdraw for the present the motion to recommit and will renew it when the pending amendment and other amendments to follow it have been voted on.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I inquire if the motion of the Senator from Texas to recommit the bill has been withdrawn?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas has withdrawn his motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask consideration of the amendment which I proposed yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment now pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McADOO. I ask that the amendment offered by me to the amendment of the committee be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to restating the amendment offered by the Senator from California? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will restate the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 53, line 19, before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "and any goods produced wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation)."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. BLACK asked for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of the amendment which I have offered and which is on the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 60, line 20, after the word "production", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph (c) shall not apply to employees employed in a plant located in dairy-production areas in which milk, cream, or butterfat are received, processed, shipped, or manufactured.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BORAH. May I be permitted to perfect that amendment before it is voted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right.

Mr. BORAH. I offer an amendment as a perfecting amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the perfected amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee on page 60, line 20, after the word "production", it is proposed to strike out the period at the end thereof, insert a comma and the following additional words:

And provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph (c) shall not apply to employees employed in a plant located in dairy-production areas in which milk, cream, or butterfat are received, processed, shipped, or manufactured if operated by a cooperative association as defined in the Farm Credit Act of 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I again announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent in the performance of official duty as members of the committee appointed to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] is absent on official business in connection with the dedication of the battle monuments in France. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 25, as follows:

So Mr. BORAH's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Has an amendment been adopted exempting the ginning and baling of cotton?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not able to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Louisiana. However, it is suggested by the Parliamentarian that the question raised by the Senator from Louisiana was included in the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. The Chair personally does not know about it.

Mr. OVERTON. I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment and ask that it may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 51, line 2, after the word "in", it is proposed to insert "the ginning and baling of cotton."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I make the point of order that the result has been announced and the demand for the yeas and nays comes too late.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana was asking for the yeas and nays, but the Chair did not hear his request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair observed as well as he could; and if the Senator from Louisiana was on his feet when the decision was announced, the Chair did not see him and he was looking in that direction. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERTON. Am I responsible for the Vice President's vision? [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not at all.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 61, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to employees engaged in processing or packing perishable agricultural products during the harvesting season.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DIETERICH. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLT (when his name was called). Repeating my previous announcement with reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I repeat the announcement made on the previous vote in regard to my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] and his general pair.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 33, as follows:

So Mr. DIETERICH's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee and ask that it may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 64, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to any individual company, association, or corporation employing five or fewer than five persons.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. While the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] was similar in nature, he requested a record vote and did not obtain it, and therefore I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 53, line 19, after the word "condition", it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "including convict-made goods."

Mr. BONE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. The amendment of the Senator from Washington having the same substance and effect as the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], I make the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from Washington is not in order merely because it involves a change of words.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is absolutely correct as to the effect of the amendment, but I do not believe the Senator has stated the parliamentary situation.

Mr. McNARY and other Senators demanded the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not familiar with this particular question, but is advised by the Parliamentarian that there is no rule of the Senate touching it. He is further advised that the precedents are that where the Senate has once voted down an amendment the substance of which is again offered and a point of order is made against it, the point of order has been sustained. The Parliamentarian also advises the Chair that the substance of the amendment now offered by the Senator from Washington has been offered and voted on heretofore. Therefore, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, as I understand the rule, when there is no record vote a motion to reconsider may be made by any Senator. I therefore move that the vote on the amendment offered by me be reconsidered, so that we may have a record vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate rejected the amendment offered by him to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. CLARK. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The noes have it, and the Senate declines to reconsider the vote.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a division. I was on my feet asking for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator was on his feet.

Mr. CLARK. I intended to ask for a division; but, pending that, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right, because he was on his feet. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may be making a gratuitous suggestion to the Senate; but the Senate now is voting on a motion to reconsider the vote by which it defeated the McAdoo amendment.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] because of illness.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are necessarily detained.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent in the performance of official duty, having been appointed members of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

Mr. HOLT. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I repeat the announcement made on a prior roll call in regard to my colleague [Mr. GIBSON].

The roll call resulted—yeas 42, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—42

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion to reconsider, the yeas are 42, the nays are 42, and the motion is lost.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I call up for consideration the amendment which I submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the committee amendment it is proposed to insert the following:

The term "person employed in agriculture", as used in this act, insofar as it shall refer to fresh fruits or vegetables, shall include persons employed within the area of production engaged in preparing, packing, or storing such fresh fruits or vegetables in their raw or natural state.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. On my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

Mr. LEWIS. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on official business, having been appointed members of the Senate delegation to attend the dedication of American battle monuments in France.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HOLT. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. I therefore withhold my vote.

So the amendment of Mr. SCHWELLENBACH to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment, which I should like to have reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of the bill every word, phrase, part of sentence, sentence, part of paragraph, paragraph, part of section or sections containing child labor, and to insert at the end of section 23 of the committee amendment to Senate bill 2475 all of the sections of Senate bill 2226 as amended by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, renumbering all sections after said section 23 in Senate bill 2475.

Mr. WHEELER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not follow the amendment as the clerk read it. As I understand, this is the amendment of the Senator from Colorado with reference to the child-labor provisions, substituting his bill for the provisions of the pending bill pertaining to child labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

The provisions proposed to be inserted by Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out of the committee amendment are as follows:

SEC. 24. That all goods, wares, and merchandise produced on or after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

SEC 25. It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, or merchandise produced on or after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, from one State or Territory into any State or Territory, where said goods, wares, or merchandise are intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State or Territory.

SEC. 26. It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting in interstate commerce any goods, wares, or merchandise produced on or after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, unless the outside of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or the package containing the same if they be packaged, shall bear a conspicuous label conforming to the requirements of this section. Such label shall truthfully set forth—

(1) The name and address of the shipper;

(2) The name and address of the consignee;

(3) The nature of such goods, wares, or merchandise; and

(4) A summary statement of the kind or kinds of work in connection with which child labor was utilized in the production of such goods, wares, or merchandise and the type or types of places where such work was performed.

In case a label conforming to the requirements of this section has been removed from goods, wares, or merchandise, or from a package containing the same, or such goods, wares, or merchandise have been removed from a package bearing such a label, prior to the time such goods, wares, or merchandise shall be offered for shipment in interstate commerce, the information set forth in such label pursuant to the requirements of clause (4) of the preceding sentence or of this sentence shall be incorporated in a new label affixed to such goods, wares, or merchandise so offered for shipment, or to the package containing the same if they be packaged, together with a statement that such information was taken from another label. The incorporation of such information and statement in the new label shall constitute compliance with the requirements of said clause (4) unless child labor shall have been used in connection with processing or fabricating such goods, wares, or merchandise after removal of the label therefrom or from the package containing the same or after removal thereof from the package bearing such label, as aforesaid, in which event the incorporation of said information and said statement shall be a requirement as to said new label in addition to those defined by said clause (4).

SEC. 27. It shall be unlawful for any person who—

(a) has produced goods, wares, or merchandise in any State or Territory, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, on or after January 1, 1938; or

(b) has taken delivery of such goods, wares, or merchandise in any State or Territory with notice of their character whether by purchase or on consignment, as commission merchant, agent for forwarding or other purposes, or otherwise, to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting such goods, wares, or merchandise in interstate or foreign commerce or to sell such goods, wares, or merchandise for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce or with knowledge that shipment thereof in interstate or foreign commerce is intended.

SEC. 28. For the purposes of this act the term "child labor" shall be defined (a) as employment of a human being under the age of 16 years and (b) as employment of a human being under the age of 18 years at "extra hazardous work" specified by regulations promulgated pursuant hereto which specification shall be based on facts found by the Secretary of Labor as to the relative possibility of injury or detriment to health involved in various types of employment after necessary information on the subject has been collected by him or derived by him from sources deemed to be reliable; the term "package" shall be defined as a wrapping, container, or crate and as a unit of rolling stock in which goods, wares, or merchandise may be shipped or transported in bulk; the term "person" shall be defined as an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, or any unincorporated organization; and the phrase "State or Territory" shall be defined to include the organized States and Territories of the United States, any district or possession thereof, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof; the words "produced" and "production" shall be defined to include manufacturing, processing, fabricating, and mining operations but as used in this act shall not be construed to mean planting, cultivation, and harvesting of fruits, grains, vegetables, and other agricultural products or agricultural work in connection with dairying, livestock husbandry, and poultry husbandry.

SEC. 29. Any person violating any provision of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and such goods, wares, or merchandise shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and forfeiture of property imported into the United States contrary to law: Provided, however, That no person who in conformity to section 3 of this act and in good faith sets forth in a label information stated to have been taken from another label shall be deemed thereby to have violated this act so as to render himself subject to conviction, or goods, wares, or merchandise bearing or contained in a package bearing such label subject to forfeiture, in the event any of the information so stated to have been taken from another label proves to be false: And provided further, That no common carrier shall be deemed to have violated this act if, at the time it accepts goods, wares, or merchandise for transportation in interstate commerce in the regular course of its business, it shall rely in good faith upon a signed statement of the consignor that the obtaining of transportation for or the transportation of such goods, wares, or merchandise will not constitute a violation of this act, but any consignor who shall knowingly sign any false statement made to a common carrier as aforesaid shall be deemed thereby to have violated this act. The failure of any consignor to furnish such a statement to a common carrier at the latter's request shall excuse the common carrier from its obligations to accept any goods for transportation in interstate commerce. In any proceeding arising out of an alleged violation of this act, a showing that the goods, wares, or merchandise with respect to which the violation is alleged to have occurred were produced wholly or in part by a person who used child labor subsequent to January 1, 1938, and within 6 months of the date of the alleged violation at the place of employment where said goods, wares, or merchandise were so produced in whole or in part shall be prima-facie evidence that the goods, wares, or merchandise with respect to which said violation is alleged to have occurred were produced wholly or in part through the use of child labor. In any such proceeding a copy of, extract from, or statement summarizing a record kept by, or document filed with, a government, church, or school authority establishing, or purporting to establish, the age or date of birth of a human being whose labor is alleged to have been used in the production of goods, wares, or merchandise shall be admissible in evidence when certified by or on behalf of such authority without further identification or authentication as prima-facie evidence of the age of such human being. The adduction of such prima-facie evidence shall cast upon the defendant or the party objecting to the forfeiture of goods, wares, or merchandise, as the case may be, the burden of rebutting or repelling such prima-facie evidence by affirmative proof to the contrary. All records, returns, applications, and other information filed with or kept by any public office, officers, or authority pursuant to the act of August 14, 1935 (ch. 531, 49 Stat. 620), or any rule or regulation promulgated pursuant thereto, shall be available for inspection by any public official authorized or qualified to enforce this act or to prosecute a violation thereof, and such public official may require that copies of, extracts from, or statements summarizing any of such records, returns, applications, or other information be certified and delivered to him by or on behalf of any public office, officers, or authority by whom the same are kept or with whom they be filed. Any public official authorized or qualified to enforce this act may utilize in that connection, and shall be entitled to rely upon, any and all records, returns, applications, certificates, and other information collected by or filed with authorities charged with the administration and enforcement of the laws of any State relating to the education and employment of human beings that may be made available to such public officials by such authorities and are deemed by such public officials to be useful and reliable.

SEC. 30. Any violation of this act shall be prosecuted in any court having jurisdiction of crime within the district in which said violation was committed, or from or into which any such goods, wares, or merchandise may have been carried or transported, or in any State or Territory, contrary to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 31. (a) The Secretary of Labor, through the Children's Bureau or such other agency within the Department of Labor as he may designate, shall be charged with the enforcement of this act and shall be vested with full authority to administer its provisions and to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for its enforcement.

(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau or any persons designated by him, pursuant to the regulations issued under the preceding subsection, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time factories or other places in which articles are produced or held for interstate commerce and to inspect records relating to the employment of or to the shipment of articles therefrom, and to make periodic reports of such inspections: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize any invasion of the privacy of any home by search or inspection or otherwise.

SEC. 32. Sections 1, 2, and 4 of this act are each intended to prescribe separate and distinct bases of regulation and the invalidity of any provision of any of said sections or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances is not intended to affect the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the roll was called.

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

Mr. HOLT. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and in his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent, having been appointed on behalf of the Senate to participate in the dedication of battle monuments in France.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have an amendment on the desk which I should like to have reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not prohibit employment of persons under 16 years of age when such employment is casual and does not interfere with the education of such person or such casual employment is not injurious to the health or morals of such person.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have discussed the amendment with the Senator from Alabama——

Mr. McNARY. Regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order of the Senate debate is not permitted on any amendment. The statement by the Senator is in the nature of debate.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2 (a) (7), in line 2, page 51, following the semicolon, it is proposed to insert "or any employee of an express company subject to the Railway Labor Act."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 3, after the word "agriculture", it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma, and add, "including persons directly employed in the ginning and baling of cotton where such employment is seasonal."

Mr. OVERTON. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. The amendment just offered by the Senator from Louisiana is manifestly a duplication of an amendment agreed to 3 days ago. Therefore, I raise a point of order against the Senator's amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is endeavoring to ascertain from the Parliamentarian whether or not the substance of the amendment just offered has been considered by the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair now has before him one parliamentary inquiry.

The Chair finds by an examination of the bill that at some time during the consideration of the bill the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] offered an amendment in which appears almost identical language contained in the amendment now offered by the Senator from Louisiana; and the Chair understands that the amendment offered several days ago by the Senator from Oregon was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Does not the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Oregon, and which was agreed to by the Senate, relate only to the workweek; and does not the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Louisiana relate both to the workweek and to wages?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. One parliamentary inquiry at a time.

Mr. BLACK. My parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, is in connection with the subject matter of the previous parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not also true that the Senator from Louisiana offered another amendment relating to the same industry, and covering both hours and wages, which was rejected?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not informed as to that. The present occupant of the chair has not occupied the chair all the time the bill has been under consideration.

The Chair finds that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon probably does not cover the same identical matter as that offered at this moment by the Senator from Louisiana. However, the attention of the Chair is called to an amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, on page 51, line 2, to insert "ginning and baling of cotton." That amendment has been considered by the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Does the amendment which the Senator from Louisiana first offered have in it any clause restricting the exemption to seasonal employment? And does not the amendment now offered by the Senator from Louisiana relate only to seasonal employment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator's amendment is in order. It embraces the proposition of seasonal employment, whereas the other amendment did not.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order of the Senate, there can be no debate. The Senate has ordered that there shall be no other proceedings than voting on amendments until the pending bill is disposed of.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to ask if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] will not include in his amendment——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That request is not in order.

Mr. OVERTON. On my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLT (when his name was called). On this question I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] on account of illness.

I also announce the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who are members of the battle monuments committee and are absent in France in connection with the duties of that committee.

I also announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] are necessarily detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I announce the pair of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

So Mr. CONNALLY's amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any further amendments to be offered?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I have an amendment on the clerk's desk in the form of a substitute for the entire bill as reported by the Committee on Education and Labor. If all other so-called perfecting amendments have been offered which it is desired to offer, I ask that my amendment be acted upon, and on it I ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. If the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut should be adopted, would that do away with the possibility of offering amendments to the original measure reported by the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut would be open to amendment, but if the amendment should be adopted, of course that would end the offering of amendments to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, the amendment has heretofore been read. I ask that the reading be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment proposed by Mr. MALONEY to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Education and Labor is to strike out the matter proposed by the committee and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That (a) there is hereby created a Board, to be known as the Labor Standards Board, which shall be composed of five members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and in such appointment industrial and geographical regions shall be given consideration. The President shall from time to time designate one of the members of the Board to act as chairman. One of the original members of the Board shall be appointed for a term of 1 year, one for a term of 2 years, one for a term of 3 years, one for a term of 4 years, and one for a term of 5 years, and their successors shall be appointed for terms of 5 years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

(b) A vacancy in the Board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Board. The Board shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including provision as to the number of members necessary to constitute a quorum, but no order establishing a working week shall be made except by a majority of the Board. The Board shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

(c) Each member of the Board shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment.

(d) The Board may select, employ, and fix the compensation of an executive secretary and such attorneys, examiners, regional directors, accountants, special consultants, and experts as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties of the Board, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States. The Board may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other employees as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties of the Board and shall fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Board may establish and utilize such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed. Attorneys appointed under this section may at the direction of the Board appear for and represent the Board in any case in court. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Board, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

(e) The principal office of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all of its powers at any other place. The Board may, by one or more of its members or authorized representatives, or by such other agents or agencies as the Board may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its functions in any part of the United States.

(f) The Board shall submit annually a report to the Congress covering the work of the Board for the preceding year and including such information, data, and recommendations for further legislation in connection with the matters covered by this act as it may find advisable.

SEC. 2. (a) The Board shall take a census of unemployment, as hereinafter provided, for the purpose of determining the number of unemployed persons in the United States over 16 and under 65 years of age who are physically and mentally employable. Said unemployed persons shall be classified by race, sex, age, customary occupation, and the causes and duration of their unemployment.

(b) The Board shall establish throughout the several States and the District of Columbia local agencies and, where practicable and desirable, shall establish one such agency in each county and one for approximately each 30,000 of population in each city of 30,000 population or over, according to the last census taken or estimates furnished by the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce. Such agencies shall consist of three members, who shall be appointed by the Board without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

(c) All said unemployed persons shall register with such local agencies in such manner and at such times and places as the Board shall direct. Upon the completion of such registration, the local agencies shall report promptly the results, classified as provided for in paragraph (a) of this section, to the Board and such local agencies shall then be abolished.

(d) Beginning on January 1, 1938, and every 3 months thereafter, said persons, so long as they remain unemployed, shall register at the nearest office of the United States Employment Service in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Board shall prescribe. The Director of the United States Employment Service shall report promptly the results of each such registration to the Board.

(e) No part of any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for relief or work relief shall be used or expended, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of any person who willfully fails or refuses to register as provided for in this section.

SEC. 3. (a) Upon the receipt of the registration report provided for in paragraph (c) of section 2, the Board shall establish working weeks as follows: (1) If more than 8,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 30-hour working week; (2) if more than 6,000,000 but not more than 8,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 32-hour working week; (3) if more than 4,000,000 but not more than 6,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 34-hour working week; (4) if more than 2,000,000 but not more than 4,000,000 such persons are found to be unemployed, a 36-hour working week; or (5) if 2,000,000 such persons or less are found to be unemployed, a 40-hour working week.

(b) The working weeks established by the Board shall continue in force until the subsequent registration reports provided for in paragraph (d) of section 2 show a sufficient change in the number of such persons unemployed, in which event the Board shall establish a new working week in accordance with paragraph (a) of this section.

SEC. 4. On and after January 1, 1938, no article or commodity shall be shipped, transported, delivered, or received in interstate or foreign commerce which was produced or manufactured under conditions which are inimicable to the public interest in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed: Provided, That upon the submission of satisfactory proof of the existence of special conditions in any industry included herein, making it necessary for certain persons to be employed for a longer period of time than that provided for in the established working week, the Board may issue exemption permits with respect to such persons, relieving the employer from the provisions of this act with reference to such persons.

SEC. 5. (a) No article or commodity shall be purchased by the United States, or any department or organization thereof, from any business enterprise operating contrary to any provision of this act, or if such article or commodity was produced or manufactured in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed on and after January 1, 1938, for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed on and after such date.

(b) Each contract made with a contractor for any Federal public work shall contain a provision that the contractor will buy no article or commodity to use on or in any public work from any business enterprise violating any of the terms or provisions of this act, and will buy no article or commodity which was produced in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed on and after January 1, 1938, for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed on and after such date.

SEC. 6. (a) No Federal governmental agency shall make or renew any loan to any employer of labor in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed on and after January 1, 1938, for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed on and after such date.

(b) On and after January 1, 1938, any such employer of labor who applies for a loan from any such governmental agency shall agree at the time of making application for such loan that so long as he is indebted to the United States he will not permit any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, to work for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board and that he will not employ child labor. In the event that there is a violation by any such employer of his agreement, the full amount of the unpaid principal of the loan made to such employer shall be immediately payable.

SEC. 7. On and after January 1, 1938, it shall be unlawful to sell, ship, transport, deliver, or receive into any State any goods or commodities produced or manufactured in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, or manufacturing establishment, in which any person, except officers, executives, and superintendents, and their personal and immediate clerical assistants, was employed for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or in which child labor was employed, if the State into which such goods or commodities are delivered or proposed to be delivered has in effect a statute prohibiting the employment in such business of employees for a longer period of time than that provided for in the working week established by the Board, or a statute prohibiting the employment of child labor.

SEC. 8. On and after January 1, 1938, it shall be unlawful for any employer subject to any of the provisions of this act to reduce, directly or indirectly, the daily, weekly, or monthly wage rate in effect on such date (or, in the case of an applicant for a loan from a governmental agency, on the date his application is submitted) with respect to any of his employees until a reasonable opportunity has been afforded to his employees, through representatives of their own choosing by a majority vote, to meet with the employer or his representatives and to discuss and consider fully all questions which may arise in connection with the reduction of such wage rate.

SEC. 9. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this act, or who fails to comply with any of its requirements, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned for not more than 3 months, or both.

SEC. 10. (a) This act shall not apply to commodities or articles produced or manufactured prior to January 1, 1938.

(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to agricultural or farm products processed for first sale by the original producer.

SEC. 11. As used in this act—

SEC. 12. If any provision, clause, or paragraph of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision, clause, or paragraph to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 13. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

So Mr. CONNALLY's motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Education and Labor was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to perfect my amendment by substituting the antilynching bill as perfected by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary; and on that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will not the Senator from New York ask unanimous consent to have the amendment considered without reading it at length? Otherwise it should be read.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ASHURST. The inquiry is as follows: Is the amendment now offered the substance, and all thereof, of the antilynching bill which was favorably reported from the Senate Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. COPELAND. It is.

This measure is so well known that I ask unanimous consent that the reading of it be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD, in view of the fact that the hour is so late; and I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is this the same amendment which was under consideration a few days ago, at which time I undertook to assert that before adjournment an opportunity would be offered to consider it upon its merits?

Mr. MCNARY and Mr. GEORGE called for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not informed as to that. The Senator from New York has offered an amendment, and he was asked whether it was the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which he responded in the affirmative. The Senator has now asked unanimous consent to have the amendment considered without being read and to have it printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COPELAND's amendment was to insert at the end of the amendment reported by the committee the following:

That the provisions of this act are enacted in exercise of the power of Congress to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States and for the purpose of better assuring under said amendment equal protection to the lives and persons of citizens and due process of law to all persons charged with or suspected or convicted of any offense within the jurisdiction of the several States. A State shall be deemed to have denied to any victim or victims of lynching equal protection and due process of law whenever that State or any legally competent governmental subdivision thereof shall have failed, neglected, or refused to employ the lawful means at its disposal for the protection of that person or those persons against lynching or against seizure and abduction followed by lynching.

SEC. 2. Any assemblage of three or more persons which shall exercise or attempt to exercise by physical violence and without authority of law any power of correction or punishment over any citizen or citizens or other person or persons in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any offense, with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such citizen or citizens, person or persons, shall constitute a "mob" within the meaning of this act. Any such violence by a mob which results in the death or maiming of the victim or victims thereof shall constitute "lynching" within the meaning of this act: Provided, however, That "lynching" shall not be deemed to include violence occurring between members of groups of lawbreakers such as are commonly designated as gangsters or racketeers, nor violence occurring during the course of picketing or boycotting or any incident in connection with any "labor dispute" as that term is defined and used in the act of March 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 70).

SEC. 3. Whenever a lynching of any person or persons shall occur, any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who shall have been charged with the duty or shall have possessed the authority as such officer or employee to protect such person or persons from lynching and shall have willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching and any officer or employee of a State or governmental subdivision thereof who shall have had custody of the person or persons lynched and shall have willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching, and any officer or employee of a State or governmental subdivision thereof who, having the duty as such officer or employee, shall willfully neglect, refuse, or fail to make all diligent efforts to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute the members or any member of the lynching mob, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. Whenever a lynching of any person or persons shall occur, and information on oath is submitted to the Attorney General of the United States that any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who shall have been charged with the duty or shall have possessed the authority as such officer or employee to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who shall have had custody of the person or persons lynched, has willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching or that any officer or employee of a State or governmental subdivision thereof, in violation of his duty as such officer or employee, has willfully neglected, refused, or failed to make all diligent efforts to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute the members or any member of the lynching mob, the Attorney General of the United States shall cause an investigation to be made to determine whether there has been any violation of this act.

SEC. 5. (1) Every governmental subdivision of a State to which the State shall have delegated functions of police shall be responsible for any lynching occurring within its territorial jurisdiction. Every such governmental subdivision shall also be responsible for any lynching occurring outside of its territorial jurisdiction, whether within or without the same State, which follows upon the seizure and abduction of the victim or victims within its territorial jurisdiction. Any such governmental subdivision which shall fail to prevent any such lynching or any such seizure and abduction followed by lynching shall be liable to each person injured, or to his or her next of kin if such injury results in death, for a sum not less than $2,000 and not more than $10,000 as monetary compensation for such injury or death: Provided, however, That the governmental subdivision may prove by a preponderance of evidence as an affirmative defense that the officers thereof charged with the duty of preserving the peace, and citizens thereof when called upon by any such officer, used all diligence and all powers vested in them for the protection of the person lynched: And provided further, That the satisfaction of judgment against one governmental subdivision responsible for a lynching shall bar further proceedings against any other governmental subdivision which may also be responsible for that lynching.

(2) Liability arising under this section may be enforced and the compensation herein provided for may be recovered in a civil action in the United States district court for the judicial district of which the defendant governmental subdivision is a part. Such action shall be brought and prosecuted by the Attorney General of the United States or his duly authorized representative in the name of the United States for the use of the real party in interest, or, if the claimant or claimants shall so elect, by counsel employed by the claimant or claimants, but in any event without prepayment of costs. If the amount of any such judgment shall not be paid upon demand, payment thereof may be enforced by any process available under the State law for the enforcement of any other money judgment against such a governmental subdivision. Any officer of such governmental subdivision or any other person who shall disobey or fail to comply with any lawful order or decree of the court for the enforcement of the judgment shall be guilty of contempt of that court and punished accordingly. The cause of action accruing hereunder to a person injured by lynching shall not abate with the subsequent death of that person before final judgment but shall survive to his or her next of kin. For the purpose of this act the next of kin of a deceased victim of lynching shall be determined according to the laws of intestate distribution in the State of domicile of the decedent. Any judgment or award under this act shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

(3) Any judge of the United States district court for the judicial district wherein any suit shall be instituted under the provisions of this act may by order direct that such suit be tried in any division of such district as he may designate in such order.

SEC. 6. The essential purpose of this act being the furtherance of protection of the lives and persons of citizens and other persons against unlawful and violent interference with or prevention of the orderly processes of justice, and equal protection and due process of law, and against possible dereliction of duty in this respect by States, or any governmental subdivision thereof, or any officer or employee of either a State or governmental subdivision thereof. Therefore, if any particular provision, sentence, or clause, or provisions, sentences, or clauses of this act, or the application thereof to any particular person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this amendment the Senator from New York asks for the yeas and nays.

LOW-COST HOUSING—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WALSH submitted several amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD with the accompanying explanatory statements, as follows:

Amendment to section 2, subsection (1): On page 35, line 5, after the word "exceed", to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four", and in line 9, to strike out the word "six" and insert the word "five."

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

This section provides by definition that the dwellings provided under the act shall be provided solely for families whose net incomes at the time of admission do not exceed five times the rental, except for families with three or more minor dependents, when the ratio is fixed at 6 to 1.

Thus if a rental is fixed at $25 a month, families with incomes of $125 a month would be eligible and those with three or more minor dependents would be eligible if their income was as much as $150 a month. It is not necessary that the Government subsidize families with incomes as high as this, especially when in the rental as thus defined heat, light, water, and cooking fuel may be included.

While it may be unfortunate, it still is true that families in the lowest income groups spend a larger portion of their income on these items, including rent, than is specified in this definition.

Let me recall in this connection that in the program of mortgage insurance of the Federal Housing Administration, 13 percent of the families who are purchasing their homes with insured mortgages have incomes of $1,500 and less, according to the Third Annual Report of the Federal Housing Administration. We must not place the Government in a position of subsidizing tenants whose incomes are equal to or greater than those who are buying their homes under another program of the Government without any subsidization.

Amendment to section 9 (b): Line 15, to strike out after the period, beginning with the word "Such", and substitute therefor the following: "Such loans shall bear interest at such rate not less than the rate charged by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the last previous loan of a similar character made by the Corporation, be secured in such manner, and be repaid within such period not exceeding 40 years as may be deemed advisable by the Authority."

Section 9 (b) authorizes United States Housing Authority to make loans to "limited profit housing agencies."

The loans are limited to 85 percent of the cost of the property. They shall bear interest at a rate not less than the going Federal rate, and may be repaid within a period not exceeding 60 years.

The Authority is limited to $25,000,000 of loans of this type in any one fiscal year.

The definition of "limited profit housing agencies" is so similar to that contained in section 207 of the National Housing Act that it is difficult to see how conflicts or confusion can be avoided between the programs of the Federal Housing Administration and the proposed United States Housing Authority if this section remains in the bill as reported.

Every project on which the F. H. A. has insured a loan under section 207 of the National Housing Act would be eligible for a loan under this provision of the proposed bill. The terms authorized under the bill would, of course, be much more advantageous than those which can be secured from private lending institutions through the mutual mortgage insurance program.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made several loans to limited profit housing agencies at a rate of interest of 4½ percent. One of these recent loans was at Chicopee Falls, Mass., and the other at the end of Sixteenth Street in the District of Columbia. These and other loans have been insured by the Federal Housing Administration. Indeed, the Federal Housing Administration has examined applications for over $500,000,000 for housing loans to limited profit housing agencies. Up to date they have agreed to insure these loans to the amount of $25,000,000.

The passage of this bill permitting loans to limited profit housing agencies at the same rate of interest as local housing authorities under State or municipal control will enable them to borrow money at a rate of 2¾ percent. This will practically do away with many more loans made at 4½ percent through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the insuring of such loans by the Federal Housing Administration.

Strike out section 15 (3), page 56, lines 10 to 19, inclusive, and substitute therefor the following amendments:

(1) Section 10 (a) is amended as follows: Strike out the period at the end of line 3, page 46, and substitute therefor a semicolon and insert the following: "Provided, That no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe and insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project."

(2) Section 11 (a) is amended as follows: Strike out the period at the end of the section and insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, however, That no capital grant shall be made for the development of any low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwelling units provided by the project."

(3) Section 12 (a) is amended as follows: Strike out the period at the end of the section and insert a semicolon and the following: "And provided further, That no such projects shall be commenced in any locality unless such projects include the elimination by demolition of insanitary or unsafe dwellings in the locality or metropolitan area substantially equal in number to the number of new dwelling units provided by the project, or unless and until the appropriate governing body having jurisdiction over such locality, or the appropriate public housing agency shall enter into an agreement with the Authority under which the Authority is assured that upon the completion of such demonstration project insanitary or unsafe dwelling units in the locality or metropolitan area substantially equal in number to the number provided by such demonstration project will be eliminated by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or compulsory repair or improvement."

The purpose of this amendment is to assure that the activities of the United States Housing Authority are directed primarily toward slum clearance. In order to accomplish this purpose, the amendment provides that for every low-rent dwelling constructed through the assistance of a Federal subsidy, an unsafe or insanitary dwelling must be eliminated by demolition, condemnation, or repair and improvement. It requires that when plans are submitted for new buildings there must be likewise submitted plans for the elimination of existing slums.

It appears perfectly clear that without some such provision in this bill, it may in operation be disappointing. That it will produce new housing may be admitted, but there are no safeguards in the bill as it stands which assure that the insanitary or unsafe dwellings now existing in our urban centers will be eliminated as a result of the operation of the bill.

This amendment is directed toward a real weakness in the bill as it stands. Such an amendment can work no hardship upon the program which is contemplated under the bill. It is true that it may require the passage of legislation which will implement public housing authorities with powers to effect the purposes which are contemplated, but if these powers are necessary in order to accomplish the elimination of insanitary and unsafe dwellings, then a program of building must wait upon legislation providing these powers.

The right of the State, exercised through the local governing agencies, to bring about the demolition, condemnation, closing, or repair of unsafe or insanitary dwellings is well recognized.

It should be pointed out that while this power for abolishing slums has existed for many years, comparatively little use has been made of it in most localities. This fact may be attributed to the influence of local interests which prevent slum clearance through the exercise of these powers. If the financial assistance of the Federal Government is conditioned upon the vigorous exercise of these powers, it is reasonable to suppose that this condition will result in increased activity in bringing about the elimination of slums.

It is also significant to point out that in England, after some 80 years of legislation and experimentation in connection with housing and slum clearance, in 1933 all subsidies to local bodies were withdrawn by the Parliament, except those granted for the purpose of rehousing persons displaced by slum-clearance operations.

It should be further pointed out that the provision contained in this amendment makes it possible for a local housing authority to improve housing conditions at a rapid rate by enforcing the repair and improvement of existing structures. For every new house built under this proposed amendment, an insanitary or unsafe dwelling will be either demolished or made safe and sanitary. If the latter course of action is taken the improvement in housing conditions will be twice as rapid as it would be if the provisions of the amendment were not enforced.

Under existing State legislation it is now possible for local public housing authorities to condemn property for slum clearance and housing projects. Legislation now exists in 30 of the most populated States providing for the creation of a public housing authority. All of these laws contain provisions empowering the local public housing authority to exercise the power of eminent domain in order to acquire slum areas for the construction of housing projects or other public uses. Furthermore, the State courts have upheld the exercise of the power of eminent domain for these purposes. Thus the States are in a position to exercise this power of condemnation free from constitutional questions that have been raised against the Federal Government when it entered into the field of housing construction.

It was the intention of the Federal Government, when the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, under the Department of the Interior, was set up to include slum clearance as a part of all projects undertaken by it. This became impossible when courts ruled the Federal Government could not condemn property for slum clearance and low-rent housing projects. As a result the Housing Division was forced to abandon many of its proposed slum-clearance projects and confine its activities to merely Federal housing projects of a general character.

There are some desirable provisions in the Wagner-Steagall bill which contemplate elimination of slum clearance without the construction of new housing, in cases where an existing slum area can be reclaimed through reconstruction or remodeling, but there is no compulsory provision thereunder.

Mr. BYRD and Mr. AUSTIN each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to Senate bill 1685, the so-called low-cost housing bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF COURTS AND REFORM OF JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

Mr. HATCH and Mr. BURKE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 164), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of the chairman and six Senators who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary, to be appointed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation and study of all matters relating to the reorganization of the courts of the United States, the appointment of additional judges for any of such courts, and the reform of judicial procedure, with respect to which any bills or resolutions (including resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States) have heretofore been introduced in the Senate or may hereafter be introduced therein during the Seventy-fifth Congress, and to report to the Senate from time to time its recommendations with respect to such matters. The committee so appointed is further authorized and directed to make a special report to the Senate and to the Committee on the Judiciary with respect to any such pending bill or resolution, if such report is requested by the Committee on the Judiciary.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

APPOINTMENTS OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Out of order, I ask permission to submit a resolution which I ask the clerk to read, and then that the resolution lie upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 163), as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that an appointment to the Supreme Court should be made only at such a time as the Senate may act upon confirmation prior to the entry of the nominee upon his service.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I heard the resolution read. Of course, the Senator is not asking for action at this time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No. I merely ask that it lie on the table and be printed. I would not want to intrude upon the time of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] by taking action at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. If it lies upon the table, instead of being referred to a committee, it would be subject to call at any time, and it ought not to be subject to call unless and until it is investigated and considered by a committee of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, obviously the resolution ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a preliminary to passing on appointments that may be made to the Supreme Court.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, if the Senator from Michigan desires to speak on the resolution, he is entirely within the rule to let it lie on the table until he addresses the Senate on the subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. At the moment I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as to the parliamentary situation, the Senator from Michigan has a perfect right to submit his resolution and have it printed and lie on the table. Should he call it up for consideration, then properly a motion might be made to refer it to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a correct statement. The resolution will lie on the table.

PLAN FOR PREVENTION AND CONTROL OF FLOODS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes, which were to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to submit to Congress with reasonable expedition a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States and its Territories and their principal tributaries. The Chief of Army Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, is authorized and directed to conduct necessary surveys, assemble information, and prepare such a comprehensive plan, which shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and all works necessary for an effective and adequate system of flood control for all such rivers. Such plan and the report or reports to Congress shall list specific projects and set forth estimates of cost (including the expense of acquiring land and easements and payments of property damage) of carrying out the projects, and shall set forth the values of such projects for hydroelectric development and other conservation purposes. And the appropriate bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination, survey, and report or reports, to be made for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds of said waterways, with a view to controlling said floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936. Such plan and report or reports shall take into consideration flood-control projects now under construction or heretofore authorized by acts of Congress, and shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and utilization of water resources through the building of power dams or a combination of power, reclamation, conservation, and flood-control dams, and all works necessary for an effective soil and water conservation for all such rivers and their watersheds. Any plans or reports which include or recommend projects for reclamation shall be prepared in conjunction with the Department of the Interior.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution, to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

And to amend the title so as to read:

Joint resolution to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, development of hydroelectric power resources, water and soil conservation, and for other purposes.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, whether this measure embraces the so-called Oregon flood-control project?

Mr. COPELAND. No; it does not. When that question comes before the Senate the Senator is to be heard on it. This has no relation to that.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas just what the House amendments cover?

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, as the joint resolution was passed by the Senate, providing that the War Department should make a survey of all the rivers of the United States with a view to flood-control operations. The House has amended the joint resolution so as to include plans for development of hydroelectric power resources, water, and soil conservation.

Mr. BONE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT BY WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] a question concerning a joint resolution introduced by him, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) favoring employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry.

I will say to the Senator that I asked my secretary this morning to bring the letters I have had from my State about this resolution, and I find at least a thousand urging its passage. I am not surprised at this, because the virtues of the proposal entitle it to support.

I have read the resolution, and find that it is in harmony with the view I presented to the White House last year and to Harry Hopkins this year. It provides that those who are on the rolls of the Works Progress Administration and who secure temporary private employment shall be furloughed and not discharged from the rolls. In case the private employment ends they may return to the W. P. A. employment.

This gives them a proper and desirable sense of security and does away with the fear of returning to private work. With the possibility of early loss of private jobs, they know they can be returned to the rolls of the W. P. A.

Am I correct in my statement?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will press the joint resolution. May I ask him what is the prospect for it at the moment?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator from New York that reports from the Department were not received by the Committee on Education and Labor until Wednesday or Thursday of last week. As the Senator knows, the chairman of that committee was particularly busy with the wage and hour bill the latter part of last week, and, out of deference to him, and because of the fact that he was busy, I did not press the consideration of the joint resolution by the committee at that time. I intend, however, immediately to ask the chairman of that committee to call the committee together and try to secure action upon the measure.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator to be my mentor and advise me when a meeting of the Committee on Education and Labor is held for that purpose. I happen to be a member of the committee and am desirous of helping to have a favorable report submitted upon the Senator's measure. I shall do all I can to help its becoming a law.

In my opinion, such a law will give a sense of security and encourage the acceptance of private employment. Therefore it will lessen the burden of government and do much to restore normal industrial and agricultural activity.

Contentment of mind, the guaranty of self-support, and the happiness that worth-while employment gives are involved in the Allen-Schwellenbach resolution and its passage. Let us get early action.

THE WAGE AND HOUR BILL—EDITORIAL FROM PHILADELPHIA RECORD

[Mr. NEELY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial in the Philadelphia Record on August 2, 1937, entitled "An Emancipation Proclamation To End Wage Slavery", which appears in the Appendix.]

COST OF RESETTLEMENT PROJECTS IN VIRGINIA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter written by me to Secretary Wallace and the reply made by Mr. Wallace; also another letter by me to Mr. Wallace and a statement which has appeared from me with respect to the same matter, and a statement from the General Accounting Office regarding the cost of certain Resettlement projects throughout the country.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 21, 1937.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
Secretary of Agriculture.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: When I mentioned to you not long ago that I expected to protest against a Federal allocation by the Resettlement Administration to be expended within Virginia you intimated that the day of miracles had not yet come.

I am now asking you to investigate the expenditure of a sum which will be in excess of $1,500,000, in accordance with present estimates, to be disbursed by the Resettlement Administration on Shenandoah Park homesteads in the valley of Virginia. I also ask, if my complaint of gross waste and inefficiency is justified, that you salvage what you can of this allocation and return it to the Public Treasury to be applied to reduce the deficit in our revenue.

I realize that I am assuming a responsibility in requesting that an expenditure of this magnitude within my own State be discontinued, but as a Senator representing Virginia I regard it my duty to call to your attention the impracticability of this spending scheme and the waste and extravagance with which the disbursement has been administered. The objective originally may have been worthy, but the administration of it has been devoid of practical and efficient operation.

I live in the vicinity in which the expenditure is being made, and my request for a thorough investigation is based upon my firm conviction that the projects, as now contemplated, are not only thoroughly impractical but unusual inefficiency and disregard for reasonable intelligent management have prevailed.

On June 1, 1936, the former Resettlement Administrator, Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell, signed a budget for the rehabilitation of mountain families by means of the Shenandoah Park homesteads. This budget called for an expenditure of $1,520,219, an average expenditure of about $6,000 per family for a house and small acreage of land. I am now informed that since this budget was made up the per-unit cost has been substantially increased. For example, the Greene County project, I am told, if constructed as now proposed, will cost $9,835.62 per family, and others will average from $7,000 to $8,000 per family unit. This outrageous cost for buildings and equipment, worth in real value perhaps one-third of the expenditure made, can only be accounted for by inefficient management and a tremendous overhead expense of various unnecessary supervisors and coordinators.

I am informed that as first proposed the project in Greene County was to be operated on the village plan and farmed cooperatively, and provided, among other extravagances, the construction of a community building at a cost of $20,000 for use of 16 families.

The 250 families it is proposed to rehabilitate will be congregated into seven homestead projects. Mountain people have been accustomed to living by themselves and are not happy in close proximity to others. To congregate them in villages in close contact with each other is in defiance of all the traditions, habits, and experiences of these splendid people.

Under the guise of being helpful and to give to these people a better standard of living the Federal Government proposes to exact rentals based upon an excessive cost of construction. A good farm of considerable acreage on which houses have already been built can be purchased for the amount per unit being expended. I am impressed also by the result of an investigation conducted by the Government which shows the average value of homes in 65 cities is slightly in excess of $4,000, about one-half of the estimated cost of these units.

Not only do I protest against the complete project as now proposed but I am unwilling to have the people who have lived in the mountains, and who represent in the main a fine class of citizens, misled in the thought that something is being done for their good, when, in fact, what is really being asked of them is to pay for the mistakes and extravagances of the Resettlement Administration.

Accompanying the budget signed by Dr. Tugwell is an itemized statement showing how the homesteaders can pay the rent to be exacted by the Government, and a perusal of this is sufficient to show the utter absurdity of the whole scheme. For example, it is estimated that on one unit of 10 acres of land, 2 acres will be planted to tomatoes, from which the renter will receive each year $118 in cash, or $59 per acre; one-half acre to be planted to berries, from which the renter will receive $96 each year; three-fourths acre for trucking, from which the renter will receive $75 each year. If these estimates were reliable, it, of course, follows that every farmer would be planting his land to tomatoes and berries and obtain an income much greater than he now receives from general farming operations.

It is then proposed that the renter hire himself out as a laborer for about 150 days in the year, and then his net income, after deducting modest living expenses and making the rehabilitation loan payment, would be $3.60 per year. Even then, the rental is based on a cost of $4,500 per unit, while the cost will actually be probably twice as much. If the Government exacts rental based on the full cost, then the occupant, after his year of labor, would be heavily in debt to the Government, even after paying as rental all he receives by his own labor and the fantastic revenue from the planting of tomatoes, berries, etc. Yet by this plan the Resettlement Administration expects to raise the standard of living by soliciting the mountain people to rent these units and then incur a substantial annual indebtedness to the Government above the most liberal estimate of income. The income as estimated will not be forthcoming, and the whole result will be that the people it is designed to benefit will soon rebel against being compelled to pay for the mistakes and errors of the Federal Government, the homesteads will be vacated, and the buildings stand as a monument to governmental inefficiency and extravagance.

To cap the climax, I have just been informed that to furnish these units for the occupancy of the tenants, furniture including an electric refrigerator has been ordered to be shipped in from Pennsylvania at a heavy cost to be added to the rental price, and that those having furniture at present will not be permitted to use it. The mountain people are most proficient in making household furniture themselves, yet they will not have an opportunity to do this.

On August 11, 1936, I wrote Dr. Tugwell for information regarding these projects. He delayed answering me until October 1, and even then his reply was incomplete and did not disclose the full cost.

On numerous occasions I have verbally protested against the waste of this money. I now publicly call the matter to your attention, and I hope that such steps will be taken immediately to examine the situation, and, if I am correct, to discontinue the construction of these units and salvage what may be possible.

I am informed that applicants for the homesteads are steadily declining, and it is not too late to save a part of the funds allocated for the projects not yet completed.

What I am opposing is not needed help to these worthy families but the inexcusable waste. As the Government is still spending $2 for every $1 we take in, I think the time has come for Senators and Congressmen to protest against extravagances in their respective States. The sooner we can discontinue such absurd expenditures as the one I have referred to, the sooner we can restore the country to financial solvency.

Cordially yours,

HARRY F. BYRD.

MAY 26, 1937.

Hon. HARRY F. BYRD,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BYRD: I am replying to your letter of May 21 regarding the Shenandoah homesteads project.

I recall the occasion last December at the Gridiron dinner when you mentioned this matter to me. As I remember it, you said you understood that Resettlement was being transferred to the Department of Agriculture and that, when it was, you were going to do the miraculous thing of asking that work on a project in your State be stopped. I was surprised therefore that for 6 months I did not hear from you regarding this matter.

Immediately after the Resettlement Administration came under my jurisdiction last January, however, I reviewed its policies with the officials of that agency. It was then decided to complete all resettlement projects under way as inexpensively as possible. For your information, an average cost of $1,200 per house was set for the southern part of the country, while the average for the North was established at $2,100. Of course, it has been obviously impossible to build houses within these limits where construction was too far advanced to make it practicable, but the large majority of farmsteads now being built by the Resettlement Administration are within the new low-cost figures. For your further information, as I testified before the House Appropriations Committee recently, it will be possible to complete these projects with the money which the Congress made available for that purpose in the 1937 deficiency bill. No funds for construction have been asked for from the $1,500,000,000 suggested by the President for relief and work relief for the fiscal year 1938.

It may interest you to know that the total cost of Shenandoah homesteads is now estimated to be approximately $993,000, notwithstanding the amounts previously allotted, instead of the figure above $1,500,000 which you indicated. This is being made possible by finishing the last two-thirds of the units on the project at the new cost figures. The total costs of the new units will not exceed $3,755. This is made up as follows: Land, $1,500; house, $2,100; barns, $400; poultry house, $100; fencing, $250; water supply, $250; outside sanitation, $55.

The present plans do not contemplate cooperative farms—Shenandoah farmsteads will be made up of individual farms, which you feel are desirable for these mountain people. Reasonable rents will be charged those who live on these farms, which will be based on:

(a) The ability of the family to pay.

(b) A fair appraisal of the property.

We, of course, expect to deal fairly with these people who have given up their former homes because of their purchase by the State of Virginia for the creation of the Shenandoah National Park. The rehabilitation of these families has been considered a Federal responsibility by the State of Virginia.

It is not planned to supply the homesteaders with electric refrigerators. While homesteaders who are in need of certain articles of furniture will be given an opportunity to buy them, it has never been contemplated to deny any families the right to bring whatever furniture they have into their new homes.

The last paragraph of your letter questioning the present solvency of the United States has been noted, and I wish to thank you for bringing your viewpoint to my attention.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

MAY 29, 1937.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: This acknowledges receipt of your letter of May 26, replying to my communication of May 21, in which I requested you to investigate waste and extravagance at the Shenandoah homestead projects in Virginia, and, if it were found that my information was correct, to salvage what has been done on these projects and see that the balance of the allotted money reverts to the Treasury.

When, at the Gridiron dinner, I complained orally to you of the waste at the Shenandoah homestead projects, I hoped that such a complaint would warrant you in making your own investigation and avoid the necessity of a public exposure of these operations by me. I realized, as you explained then, that you had just taken over the Resettlement Administration. I sympathized with you in your inheritance of the homestead projects from Dr. Tugwell. I had no desire to embarrass you in your efforts to improve the efficiency and reduce the waste and extravagance of the Resettlement Administration. Out of courtesy to you, I therefore delayed making a public protest in the hope that those things I complained of would be remedied. I am not opposing sound and practical relief to these worthy mountain families, but I oppose this present scheme because it will not be successful in giving the benefits expected.

For nearly a year I have been protesting against extravagance and the sinful waste of the operation of Shenandoah homestead projects. The matter was most forcefully called to my attention last summer when I spent some time in the Shenandoah Park area. I was then appalled upon learning that Dr. Tugwell intended to expend $1,500,000 on a resettlement program for 250 mountain families by means of collective village farming, and that, under the proposals, the mountain people would repay in part this amount to the Federal Government in the form of rentals. I then vigorously protested to local officials in charge.

When Dr. George Mitchell was appointed regional director I protested in person to him. This resulted in the changing of the original fantastic project, known as the C. B. I. Greene project, as it was proposed by Dr. Tugwell. It was there proposed that 28 mountain families would operate as a common unit on a cooperative system similar to those in Russia. No one family would own anything. Everything would be owned in common. The characteristics of these mountain people would render such a project completely impractical. I was pleased when Dr. Mitchell recently advised me that the collective-farming feature of this project would be abandoned.

I am glad to learn also from you now that the order for electric refrigerators has been countermanded. The purchase of them, I am advised, was proposed.

Your letter does not refer to the extravagance of past expenditures. You say the cost of the new units will not exceed $3,755 each. It appears, however, that your itemized statement of this cost does not include any accounting for the costly overhead which has been largely responsible for the extravagant expenditures already made.

Your latest estimate as of May 26 obviously is at variance with another estimate submitted to me under the date of May 21, through Budget Director Bell, and signed by C. B. Baldwin, Assistant Resettlement Administrator. It, of course, is likewise at variance with the previous figures of Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. Baldwin estimates, for example, that in the Ida Valley tract the cost of the land will be $37,179 and the cost of development will be $101,422, making an average cost of $6,929 per unit. The cost of the land in the Washington tract, Rappahannock County, was estimated by Mr. Baldwin on May 21 as $33,065, and the development cost there was estimated by Mr. Baldwin at $121,704. This project is to care for 27 families. These figures indicate an average per unit cost there of $5,703.

It is difficult for me to understand why the Assistant Administrator, Mr. Baldwin, gives an estimate on May 21, which is entirely at variance with figures given by you on May 26.

A very substantial part of the total allocation can still be salvaged, as shown by the fact that Mr. Baldwin stated on May 21 that the total expenditures to that date were $355,630, several of the projects now being completed, and others not started.

On the assumption from your letter that you will not conduct the requested investigation, and acting under authority of Senate Resolution 217 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, as chairman of the Reorganization Committee, and in accordance with the terms of that resolution, which empowers the committee to "require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable", I am asking you to furnish the following information and documents:

1. Copies of all contracts and agreements of every kind that have been entered into with respect to these projects.
2. An itemized statement of the cost of completing each project.
3. An exact, itemized statement of all expenditures separated as between the seven projects.
4. A complete statement of the overhead and administrative cost and a list of these employees at Washington and elsewhere and the salaries of all who perform or have performed services on these projects.
5. A list of the families, with addresses, who have made agreements to rent the houses and copies of the agreements.
6. A statement of the rent to be charged and the amount of principal payment required.
7. A statement of the number of agreements with tenants or prospective tenants which have been canceled and the reasons for each cancelation.

I am asking prompt compliance with this request because of the discrepancy between the $1,520,219 estimate presented to me by Dr. Tugwell, the estimates cited as of May 21 by your Mr. Baldwin and the Budget Director, and the estimate contained in your letter of May 26.

With best wishes, I am,

Cordially yours,

HARRY F. BYRD.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HARRY F. BYRD

When I communicated with Secretary Wallace, complaining not only of the gross extravagance but of the complete impracticability of the whole scheme involved in the building of the seven homestead projects in Virginia for the occupancy of the mountain people, I based my statement upon such information as I could secure from the Resettlement Administration and the budgets prepared by Dr. Tugwell.

I stated that the Budget allotment was $1,500,000 to provide for the construction of 250 home units, but that the actual cost of these units would be from six to eight thousand dollars each. With full knowledge of this activity, which is near my home, I asked for an investigation of my charge of waste and if the charge were found to be true that the Secretary at once discontinue further construction on the homesteads not yet completed and salvage what might be possible and return to the Federal Treasury the sum unexpended but allocated to this work. At that time only 46 units out of 175 had been completed and the opportunity still remained to save hundreds of thousands of dollars being wasted on these projects, provided that the land was sold on which construction had not been started. Secretary Wallace refused to hold up construction of the units not begun and no investigation was made so far as I have been informed. In a sharp reply he said he would proceed and that my figures were erroneous.

I then requested complete itemized expenditures, not only from the Resettlement Administration but from the General Accounting Office of the United States Government. The Resettlement Administration's reply contradicted the figures this same Bureau previously gave on May 26 and is at wide variance with the official figures reported by the auditors of the General Accounting Office. And, therefore, to sustain my criticism of waste on these projects, I will use the unbiased figures of the General Accounting Office. Fortunately the General Accounting Office is still an independent branch of the United States Government, responsible only to Congress. So long as this condition continues the Members of Congress and the people in general can rely on the reports presented by this department with full confidence of their accuracy and unbiased preparation.

As to how long the General Accounting Office will remain an independent branch depends on the action Congress will take on the recommendation made by the President's Committee on Reorganization which is to the effect that the present independent status of this Office shall be destroyed to the extent that all preauditing shall be under the control of the executive branch of the Government. The fact that I have received contradictory financial reports from the Resettlement Administration and the General Accounting Office strengthens my belief that the independence of this Office should not be impaired by the passage of the legislation now pending.

I stated the cost of this work would be $1,500,000 with an average cost per unit of six to eight thousand dollars. Mr. Wallace replied and said the cost would be $993,000 and that the new units would cost no more than $3,755. My original statement was based on the construction of 250 home units. By reason of the inability, I assume, to obtain tenants, this number has now been reduced to 175. The General Accounting Office reports that after a thorough audit of expenditures and allotments as of July 19 the cost will be $1,384,136.81 and that the average cost per home unit will be $7,909.35. During my investigations I discovered another fund of $150,000, now available for the purpose of providing homes for these same mountain people. This sum is in the hands of the F. E. R. A., therefore the total is $1,534,136.81, which is in excess of the amount I first stated. It is interesting to note that the funds in the hands of the F. E. R. A. are being expended on the basis of approximately $800 per family. It happens that the sum of $150,000 from the F. E. R. A. is being expended under the State welfare department. Here is an instance where a State agency is spending $800 for the same service which is costing the Federal agency ten times as much. The State welfare department very wisely purchased small farms, a much more practical solution than to congregate mountain people in villages. It is further interesting to note that I have an official memorandum of a budget dated January 4, 1934, placing the total cost of all of these projects at $480,000, an average of about $2,500 per homestead, yet the final cost appears to be approximately $8,000. The land cost for these projects is $301,778.13, but to me the most appalling waste of all is the sums that have been expended for overhead cost. The General Accounting Office reports that the overhead expense on this project is approximately $300,000. The overhead expense in the Washington office is $186,319.75. The amount of $115,000 was expended for overhead in the field for supervisors, surveyors, engineers, et cetera. In other words plans and administrative costs represented by overhead were about as much as the cost of the 6,889 acres of land.

I have received from a responsible contractor a bid for the reproduction of the four-room houses at Ida Valley at $900 each, including plumbing and wiring. The utter absurdity of the whole scheme is demonstrated by the fact that a unit cost exists of nearly $8,000 when the houses to be occupied are valued at less than a thousand and not worth more because these houses are of the most flimsy construction.

No explanation has been made of the astounding cost of overhead but an investigation appears to me to be in order.

At the Elkton project, for example, as of June 17 when only $2,664 had been expended for construction purposes and the land had only recently been purchased, the overhead was $30,524. At the Washington project in Rappahannock County where only $2,445 had been spent for construction, the overhead was $14,563. At Flint Hill, where there has been no construction cost as of the date of the report the overhead was $30,391. Although the construction work is only about one-third completed, $119,020 has already been expended in salaries to officials and supervisors, not workmen, and $10,672 has been expended for traveling expenses.

The item of overhead expenses appears to have been nearly entirely omitted from the report made by the Resettlement Administration and would not have been disclosed except for the independent diligence of the General Accounting Office. In Greene County it was first proposed to operate a community unit with common ownership of all property on the same plan as a Russian village. The houses are constructed close together. There is one community meat and vegetable house in which it is proposed that all the 19 tenants will use as a common storehouse and there are two barns for the use of all. Mr. Wallace stated in his reply to me that these would be individual farms but, of course, it would be impossible to operate any individual farms when the buildings are constructed in groups and where there are but two barns and one meat house for 19 families.

Another amazing fact I ascertained from the Resettlement Administration is that not a single contract has been signed for the occupancy of a single one of these 175 houses now being constructed. Yet the waste goes on and the Government continues to build houses without the assurance that any will be occupied on a rental basis. I have endeavored in every way I could to stop this waste and extravagance in my own State, and am willing to assume full responsibility therefor to my constituents. Yet my efforts have been unavailing and there is nothing further I can do. I am making this statement merely in confirmation of my original criticism which has been fully sustained, and further to call attention to the fact that an executive department of the Government is guilty of furnishing estimates of costs and expenditures which are in contradiction to the official records of the United States Government as reported by the General Accounting Office.

As a Member of the United States Senate I did not have an opportunity to vote against this expenditure. It was included in a lump-sum appropriation. I may say that the extravagance and waste in the Shenandoah Park project can be found in the 252 homestead projects now going forward throughout the country. At Tugwelltown, more than $16,000 is being expended on each home unit and the homesteads at Hightstown are costing more than $20,000 per home unit. Similar conditions exist in all the other homestead projects throughout the country. Yet no effort apparently is made to prevent this squandering of public money. The absurdity of collecting adequate rentals on these homesteads is so apparent that I make the confident prediction that the hundreds of millions of dollars being expended by the Resettlement Administration for the construction of these homes will stand as a permanent monument to a waste and extravagance such as has never before been known in a civilized country.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill before the Senate at this time is one to provide financial assistance for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity. It is not my purpose to detain the Senate very long in an explanation of the bill, because last year we considered at some length a bill having a similar objective. However, between last year and this year we have improved the bill very much and removed the objections which were developed in the Senate at the time the previous bill was before this body for consideration. As Senators will remember, that bill passed at the last session by a very substantial majority.

I may say in passing that during my time in the Senate I have never advocated legislation which was of such a noncontroversial nature. There is practical unanimity throughout the country in favor of the measure. A short time ago I placed in the RECORD a list of sponsoring organizations, covering various interests in public affairs and representing every State in the Union. There was practically no opposition to the bill in the hearings before the committee. The slight opposition which developed there was on the part of one or two men who seemed to feel that the slum dwellers were better off in the slums than they would be in decent and sanitary housing.

I shall not take the time to read the list of those favoring the bill, but the list comprises practically every labor organization in the country, a great many women's organizations, such as the Women Voters' League, and at least a thousand other organizations. I doubt whether any Senator has received any communication in opposition to the objectives of the bill. There may be amendments to be offered, and, of course, my mind is always open to reasonable amendments which may tend to perfect the measure.

I have not a prepared statement to submit at this time in explanation of the bill, so I hope Senators will feel at liberty at any time to question me with reference to its provisions.

I have never been in charge of any measure with respect to which there was such unanimity of support from the newspapers of the country. Of course, we would naturally expect the liberal newspapers to support this kind of legislation, but in this case the most conservative newspapers have found virtue in the measure and by editorial comment have approved it. There are many newspapers which have found fault with a great deal of the so-called New Deal legislation, but even they seem to have made an exception of this bill and indicate that it ought to be approved by the unanimous vote of the Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator going to discuss the question of causes of slums? Why do we have these awful degraded conditions?

Mr. WAGNER. I think that is a very simple matter. It is because of the low incomes received by the individuals who live in the slums. That is the fundamental difficulty. If overnight we could increase their incomes by a more fair distribution of the wealth of the country, we would not have any slums.

Mr. BORAH. I am not saying this in opposition to the bill, but I ask the question for the reason that it seems to me we will continue to have slums, no matter what we may do at any particular time, unless we do increase incomes. And, the Senator will permit me to say, we will have slums so long as we have private corporations fixing prices on everything the slum dweller has to have in order to eke out his miserable existence. Our system calls for just such things as slums and economic slaves.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator's remedy and mine are interdependent, but it seems to me that this bill presents an immediate problem. We have slum dwellers living under conditions which tend to generate crime and disease, trying to live on incomes of less than $400 or $500 or $600 per year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I hope before the Senator concludes his argument he will indicate whether this is a bill largely for the benefit of the big cities, such as New York and Chicago, where a large number of people have flocked for reasons best known to themselves and to the public, or whether it is a bill for the general benefit of the people throughout the United States. Is it not rather a plan to help the Senator's city and a few of the larger cities of the country?

Mr. WAGNER. I hope the Senator does not intend to intimate that I am favoring legislation for New York City alone. I have said before and I assert again that I have never given utterance to any provincial thought in connection with any measure which I have advocated or which was before the Senate. This is a national problem and it applies anywhere in the country where there are slum dwellers, whether urban or rural. That is definitely set forth in the bill and clearly understood by the committee. The matter of housing is very much like the question of relief. Wherever the slum dweller lives, and there are many in the rural sections of the country as surveys have shown, the provisions of the bill will apply.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is there anything in the Senator's bill that contemplates acquisition of ownership by the tenants, or is it simply a matter of giving them a Federal bounty in the form of cheaper rent?

Mr. WAGNER. In the first place, there is no private ownership at all in this proposal, Mr. President. This is work to be done by local public authority; generally, housing authorities.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Government contributes money to it, though.

Mr. WAGNER. The Government makes a subsidy contribution; yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. What I had in mind was that where the purpose of legislation is for the person to become the owner of a home, either in a town or in the country, I can see that probably it is sound public policy for the Government to subsidize to some extent that sort of an operation; but where it is simply a question of how much rent I am going to pay, without any permanent benefit, except getting lower rent, that is quite a different principle.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill simply aims at assisting the one-third of our population who today are compelled to live under insanitary conditions, whether rural or urban.

Mr. CONNALLY. How would the measure operate in rural communities? I am interested in that phase of the subject. There are a great many people in my State who live in the country under conditions wholly as bad as the conditions in the slums about which the Senator is speaking.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill will operate in the country as well as in the city. The local authority will determine the kind of structures to build to house these unfortunate persons. The Federal Government will have nothing at all to do with that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether the broad authority contained in section 6 for the Authority to—

> Determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations and expenses shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and the manner in which accounts shall be audited—is intended to include loans and contributions? Does the Senator so understand the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. It is not very clear to me just what the Senator intends to ask. If he means to inquire whether the Federal Government is to have something to say to be sure that both the loan and the subsidy are to be used only for houses built for the low-income group, I say that authority must be conferred somewhere, and it must be more or less flexible. It cannot be narrowed down in any way of which I know. If the Senator has some other way of narrowing it down, I hope he will suggest it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have no sympathy with the expenditure of the taxpayers' money without any preaudit, without any examination by the Comptroller General in advance to ascertain whether or not the purpose and use of the money are within the law. In fact, I am opposed to that; and I understand that the bill expressly exempts these contracts and expenditures from that preaudit, and that it permits——

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator make a speech in his own time? I am quite willing to have a question asked, but I can see that the Senator is going beyond a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I certainly am willing to do that. I accepted the Senator's statement that he would permit inquiries; but I will sit down now, because I see that he declines to submit to them.

Mr. WAGNER. No; but I do not want the Senator to make a speech in my time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to complete my question, and then I think the Senator from New York will not criticize it as a speech.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. Let the Senator go on and have his say, and perhaps he may clarify some point on which an amendment would be very desirable. I do not know.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont has had no say about the proposed legislation up to date. This is the first opportunity he has had to examine it; and not being on the committee that has considered it, he thought he could inquire of the Senator from New York, who sponsors the measure, to ascertain his view of it; that is all.

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite willing to have that done; but the Senator was delivering what I took to be a speech on the subject.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then let us go back and see if I can fairly and clearly state my question, for I desire to obtain information.

I will go back to the beginning and ask the Senator from New York if he understands that when the bill says:

> The Authority shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations and expenses shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and the manner in which accounts shall be audited—

It comprehends and includes the loans and contributions provided for in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. It does?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I may say to the Senator that we shall have to empower the Housing Authority which we are creating by the measure to see that the money is properly used; namely, for the purposes for which it is advanced.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator understand that the bill exempts these contracts and grants of loans and contributions from examination in advance by the Comptroller General to ascertain whether or not the use that is to be made of the money is within the law? Does he so understand it?

Mr. WAGNER. I do so understand it; and that is what we have done in every loaning authority which we have created under different acts of Congress. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation makes a loan or makes a contract with a municipality it does not go to the Comptroller General first to have the validity of the transaction ascertained. We have conferred upon the Housing Authority the obligation and the duty to do what is set out in the bill, and they will be faithless to their obligation and their duty if any of this money is spent except for the purposes for which it was intended.

We must lodge the responsibility somewhere. If the Senator thinks perhaps an added clause will make that provision stronger, let him offer the amendment. My mind is open about the subject. Perhaps then we shall get somewhere.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further clarifying question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. The only way to ascertain whether or not the Senator holds certain views is to ask him, and that is all I am purposing to do.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to ask whether the Senator understands that the bill remits the auditing or examination which the Comptroller General may do of any of the transactions comprehended in the bill to the sole purpose of an audit which will enable him to make a report to Congress, and not for any other purpose. Is the bill understood in that manner by the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. I think in doing that the Comptroller General has a right to examine into the accounts, and if there is any question about that the Senator may correct it. Let the Senator offer his amendment, if he has any doubt about that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am inquiring what the Senator from New York claims for the bill. He is in charge of it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. As a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, I attended all the hearings held with respect to the pending measure; and I am very much interested in slum clearance and in providing suitable dwelling houses for the low-wage earner.

Section 1 of the bill in effect states that there exist throughout the United States slums, blighted areas, or unsafe, insanitary, or overcrowded dwellings, and because of their existence the spread of disease is encouraged; the health, morale, and vitality of large numbers of the American people are lowered; hazards of fires, accidents, and natural calamities are increased; and the moral standards of the young are subjected to bad influences. Hence this measure is proposed.

Will the Senator from New York point out wherein the bill provides for slum clearance? Referring to the provision on page 56, subsection (3), wherein slum clearance is made one of the conditions of a loan, I find the following proviso:

That such elimination may be deferred in case of a shortage of housing of a low-rent character.

Does not the Senator feel that the quoted proviso may have a tendency to nullify the language which precedes it?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think so, Mr. President. We discussed that question in the committee. This is an amendment which I readily accepted because I think it helps the bill very much. The amendment was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. That does not mean that the slum dweller is not going to be removed from the slum area; but I think I shall be able to show in a minute that there is a tremendous shortage in housing, and we might have this situation:

As we know, in many of the slum areas, because of the low incomes, families are doubling up, and trebling, and sometimes four families are occupying space which in decency one family only ought to occupy.

All that this provision means is that where there is a shortage of that kind, the old dwellings shall not simply be torn down and the people thrown out upon the street. We say simply defer that tearing down until we are able to build another unit, and provide for the slum dwellers still remaining there.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. So the Senator interprets the language of this particular section in that way, does he?

Mr. WAGNER. Absolutely. That is all that it means, because we use the word "deferred", not "indefinitely postponed."

Mr. ELLENDER. That is not my interpretation of the language referred to. It could, and would, in all probability, be interpreted to mean that so long as there is a shortage of housing, the present dwellings, the present slums, will remain. Suppose the funds run out, and there is still a shortage of housing. Does the Senator believe the slums will be cleared? How could the sums be cleared?

In other words, suppose all the money now being authorized should be spent to provide for persons who at present have no homes because of the insufficiency of dwellings. How could we then clear the slums?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, we are hoping that the local authority will provide against that; but let me say to the Senator that all I am concerned with is the excess of dwellers in the slum areas. If the Senator wants to provide in this act that when a slum area is razed enough units shall be built to provide for all the tenants, that would be more than substantially the same number of units. In that case it would require four times as many units as were in the slum area originally, because at present families are doubling up, to my own knowledge, three or four times. I mean, three or four families are occupying three rooms in some of these areas, because of the serious situation which exists.

Mr. ELLENDER. That being true, Mr. President, I am more convinced than ever that the proviso of subdivision 3, of section 15, nullifies the language that precedes it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Louisiana has called attention to a very vital and extremely important feature of the bill, to which I expect to make reference later. Through some inadvertence, it must have been, the amendment which I offered is incorporated in the bill as one of ten standards which the United States Housing Authority is to consider. I offered my amendment to require and compel the Federal Housing Authority to pass upon a slum clearance project at the same time it approved a project for rehousing and slum clearance. At a later period I shall move that that proviso be inserted in the bill. The difficulty of the Senator from Louisiana is also my difficulty, that the bill simply makes it optional. It is one of the standards.

Mr. WAGNER. The entire provision?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. It was not so intended by the committee, nor by me. We wanted to make it mandatory.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to hear that, because that is vital.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator knows that that was our intention.

Mr. WALSH. In the drafting of the bill, in my absence from the committee, this was inserted in the provisions which give the board an option whether to act or not. I am glad to hear the Senator say that he is in favor of a prohibition against the granting of any money for rehousing unless it is accompanied by the elimination of an actual slum area.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I assured the Senator long ago of that fact. I thought the bill so provided. But now the Senator is talking about something else.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator from Louisiana, Is not what he is asking the Senator what I have referred to?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator had difficulty about it, and spoke to me about it?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. In this important proviso, instead of making the action mandatory and compulsory, as it is written the board may disregard it.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think the board may disregard it.

Mr. WALSH. There are two groups concerned about these projects.

Mr. WAGNER. When it is provided that they "shall be guided by these considerations", does not the Senator think that is a mandate to the board?

Mr. WALSH. I certainly do not think so.

Mr. WAGNER. If there is any question about it, let us insert language to make it certain.

Mr. WALSH. There are various standards provided which they must consider.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This is one of the standards, and it is not compulsory. None of those standards is compulsory.

Mr. WAGNER. I think when we provide that they must be "guided by these considerations", that makes it compulsory. It is a matter of language.

Mr. WALSH. I think we ought to make it clear now—and I am sure the Senator is in accord with me in this—that there are two very high-minded and sincere groups interested in these housing projects. Many of them are concerned vitally, because of the present necessity for housing, to make the bill more or less of a housing project. They want all of the money they can get to go into the housing, and are inclined to minimize what the Senator and I are so deeply concerned in, namely, slum clearance.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The other group, with which I know the Senator and myself are associated and with which we are in sympathy, wants slum clearance to go hand in hand with new housing. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WALSH. In my judgment, the amendment I have proposed puts it unmistakably and clearly in the group saying that the Federal authority under this bill will give its attention first, last, and foremost to slum clearance, and, secondly, to rehousing, and the Senator from Louisiana has the same difficulty I have, that we are of the opinion that the bill now does not do that.

Mr. ELLENDER. It does not. Will the Senator from New York yield further to me?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but let me first make a suggestion. The Senator from Massachusetts expressed apprehension that, in the way this provision is worded, it might not be compulsory. I think it is compulsory, and if it is not, let us have no question about it being compulsory. I remember the Senator from Massachusetts agreed to something like this under similar circumstances, "Provided, That such elimination may be deferred in case of a shortage of housing of a low-rent character."

This is the situation. It should be provided that in every case where there is a removal of a slum area, not the same substantial number of units may be built, but enough units be built to take care of all the occupants of the slum area——

Mr. WALSH. That must be.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course; then we have to change the amendment, because now, as the Senator offered it, it provides that a substantially equivalent number of units be constructed. In other words, where buildings are razed, substantially as many units shall be built to replace them. I know of my own knowledge that the numbers in some of these buildings are doubling up three or four times, and if we build substantially the same number of units, if they are doubling up four times, we will take care of only one-fourth of the slum dwellers until new dwellings are erected.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I wish to make this suggestion, if the Senator from New York will agree to strike out, on page 56, after the semicolon in line 17—

Provided, That such elimination may be deferred in case of a shortage of housing of a low-rent character.

I think that would take care of the situation complained of.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I can convince the Senator that that would not do it.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from New York has admitted that at present there exists a shortage?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Very well. If that be true, then the provisions preceding the proviso to which I referred a few moments ago cannot be enforced. So long as there exists a shortage of housing, slum clearance may be indefinitely deferred.

Judging from the remarks of the Senator as to existing housing shortage, it will require years and the expenditure of billions of dollars to alleviate the situation. The point I desire to emphasize is that the bill does not provide for mandatory slum clearance, when, as a matter of fact, the presence of slums is given as the main reason for this legislation.

Mr. WAGNER. Then let me tell the Senator what we must do. "Defer" means only deferring, not making something permanent. I am sure, then, that the Senator from Massachusetts will agree that we must change the words "substantially equivalent in number" to "a sufficient number of units to provide new dwellings for those who are in the old dwellings."

Mr. WALSH. I have an amendment which covers that very point. I believe we are in accord on the principle. I will offer the amendment later.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator will take care of the situation?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I should like to ask the Senator a few fundamental questions for the information of the Senate, simply for the purpose of letting our fellow Senators understand what the committee understands about the problem.

Mr. WAGNER. Does not the Senator think I should proceed for a while, and then the Senator ask me the questions?

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps that would be better.

Mr. WAGNER. Otherwise, I am sure I will forget something I desire to say. I have not prepared any address, and shall speak only as my memory serves me, and if there is anything I omit, I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts will bring it to my attention.

Mr. WALSH. At the very outset, simply for the sake of enlightening our brother Senators, and not for the purpose of catechising the Senator, I should like to ask him one question. First of all, is it not a fact that there is or can be authority given to any State in this Union or to any municipality in this Union to destroy and abolish a slum without costing one cent of money?

Mr. WAGNER. I did not catch the whole question.

Mr. WALSH. Is there not existing authority in some States, and the possibility of it in all States, if they will pass the legislation, to give the right to a municipality which finds an unsanitary house to close it up and end it as a slum, without costing a dollar of money to anyone?

Mr. WAGNER. That is true; except to the owner of the building.

Mr. WALSH. The owner of the building cannot collect any money.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator said without costing anyone any money. It would cost the owner money.

Mr. WALSH. I am speaking about grants and loans for slum clearance.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. There is not any need of it.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Grants and loans are needed for rehousing these people?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. So that if the authority is exercised, we can do away with all slums without any bill at all.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Maryland puts it in another way, but more tritely; there is always authority in any government to get rid of a nuisance. That can be done by the local authority, and has been done quite extensively by some cities. For instance, the city of Boston has ordered the destruction of a large number of buildings. But, unfortunately, without funds it is impossible to rebuild, and without funds it is impossible to rehouse the tenants, and one of the purposes of the pending bill is to provide housing facilities for those people who are forced out of the slums.

That is why the Senator from New York and I are insisting on such procedure, and that is why we believe this bill, with my amendment, is the best we have yet produced on the subject.

Mr. WAGNER. I think so.

Mr. WALSH. We believe that the two will go hand in hand. The local authorities then cannot simply say, "We want $10,000,000 for rehousing. Here is our project. It is up in the north end of Baltimore, and we are going to build a number of houses there and rent them at a low rent." If my amendment is agreed to, we can ask: What are you eliminating? What slums have you torn down or destroyed? Where is your project in that direction, in that respect, as well as the project of new housing?"

Mr. WAGNER. Another amendment was in the bill as it was reported last year which provided that the slum dwellers cannot be put out of their homes unless other homes are provided for them.

Mr. WALSH. Of course.

Mr. WAGNER. That is to prevent the situation that the Senator from Massachusetts spoke of. The Senator knows what has happened to a number of families in such cases. A great many of them are now living out in tents. They have no place to live in except in tents.

Mr. WALSH. That is the fault of the local authorities. In the city of Boston or the city of Philadelphia the local authorities may say, "That building has to come out." The local authorities ought to have built a house for those who occupied the house to be torn down, but did not have the money to do it.

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly right. That is what caused people to have to live in tents.

Mr. WALSH. I wanted to make that point clear before the Senator continued.

Mr. WAGNER. I am glad the Senator did make that point. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In connection with the question asked by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], I should like to ask a question. Is it possible under this bill to build new houses to take care of those who now live in slum houses without eliminating the slum houses? In other words, even though houses are built at another place than where the slum houses now exist, it is provided in the bill as a mandatory proposition that equivalent housing shall be built for the families who occupy the slum area to be destroyed; that new houses are to be built—when their quarters are vacated and destroyed.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Massachusetts has agreed to an amendment to the bill as it now stands, so there shall be no question about that. I think the Senator is right in what he says. The language is not exactly in the words to provide for what the Senator has just suggested, but it is going to be in words making such provision.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is going to perfect the bill, as I understand, in such a way that if 400 families in New York City now occupying slum houses are provided with quarters in the same area in whole or in part, or in some place else in whole or in part, those 400 families' old habitations must come down and pass away and disappear. Is that correct?

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly what we are trying to do. I think the Senator has agreed that the bill should be amended in that respect.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is what the bill will provide when it is amended.

Mr. TYDINGS. It does not do it now?

Mr. WALSH. It does not necessarily mean that those 400 families will get those new houses.

Mr. WAGNER. No; not unless they are families of low income.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from Maryland understand that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. The point I am making is that there is no use of building new houses to eliminate slums without the slums being simultaneously eliminated.

Mr. WALSH. That is the thing I have been contending for from the very beginning.

Mr. WAGNER. What must be done, however, is to build a sufficient number of units to take care of all the slum dwellers, because in many cases now three or four families occupy three rooms. That sounds like a very improbable situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one more question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator any statistics on that subject, or has there been a census of the number of families who live in slum houses, so called, in the cities of the United States?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes. The general statistics are that about one-third of the families of the United States are ill-housed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is that in the cities? Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. WAGNER. No; there are some bad slums in some of the rural areas. That is what I desire to have clearly understood—that this bill is of universal application. It provides that wherever there is a slum area it shall have application. The purpose is to take care of a rural slum area if there is such.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator means, is there poor housing on a farm?

Mr. WAGNER. If there is; exactly. It takes care of such situations anywhere.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Slum tenements are owned by individuals. Such dwellings, unsanitary or nuisance dwellings, are owned by individuals.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. When those buildings are destroyed and new buildings are erected, in whom does the investment lie?

Mr. WAGNER. The new buildings are constructed by a public authority, because the legislation applies only to that type of occupant for whom private industry, concededly cannot provide. It is set forth in the bill, and every builder will concede it, that private industry cannot take care of the situation. The property is condemned as a slum area, and the owner of that area will get whatever value the court places upon it. Then the public authority takes hold of it and clears the slum.

Mr. SMITH. Then does the possession and equity in that property pass to the Government?

Mr. WAGNER. To the municipality. The Government has no other function in this matter except to grant a loan, which is a very sound loan. While it is a contingent liability, it will absolutely be paid. It is as sound as 90 percent of our loans. Then the Government provides a subsidy to take care of the low-income group which cannot provide decent housing for itself.

Mr. SMITH. The question I should like to ask is this: Somebody, some individual or corporation, owns this unsanitary area. The Government condemns it.

Mr. WAGNER. The municipality condemns it.

Mr. SMITH. The municipality condemns it?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Then, under the law, the owner is granted whatever equity or whatever value is attached to it?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH. Then he is eliminated?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. The municipality then owns it and operates it.

Mr. SMITH. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from New York how this bill can be administered so far as rural homes are concerned?

Mr. WAGNER. In the same way that it is administered in the city slum areas.

Mr. GEORGE. No loan or grant of any kind is to be made under the bill except to a State or a municipality or a housing agency.

Mr. WAGNER. We assume that the municipality or the State or the political subdivision in which the farms are located has some form of housing authority.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to know on what the Senator bases that statement. There can be no housing authority in the country, in the rural areas, except the owner of the property. There are no such housing authorities in the rural areas in America.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a housing authority in the State of New York.

Mr. GEORGE. For farm homes?

Mr. WAGNER. It has jurisdiction over the State, except the city of New York. The city of New York has a separate housing authority, because of the unique problem existing there. The State housing authority may deal with slum areas wherever they exist in the State, whether rural or urban.

Mr. GEORGE. There may be some police authority in the State exerted through that agency.

Mr. WAGNER. That is the authority under which all these authorities act.

Mr. GEORGE. But no grant or loan may be made, no financial benefit may be extended, to any person or organization save the State or the county or the municipality, or to some limited profit-sharing housing project. When you come to the rural area, there would be no way to do anything about housing.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course there will be.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the Senator explain how.

Mr. WAGNER. The rural section of my State is a part of our State, just as the cities are.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly it is a part of the Senator's State; but how can it be done unless you are going to acquire the farm? A man cannot live in the country unless he has some land.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. GEORGE. He must have land that will support him if he is to remain in the country, unless he owns an estate.

Mr. WAGNER. If the place is a slum area so as to be a menace to the State, then the State may step in. It is only because the area is a menace that authority exists under which the State may step in.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator answer me, then, who would build the houses in the country?

Mr. WAGNER. A housing authority would do it, if the area be a slum area.

Mr. GEORGE. A housing authority in the country?

Mr. WAGNER. In any place where slums exist. I do not see the Senator's distinction.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not worrying about taking care of the cities, but why not eliminate any reference in the bill to the rural areas, because it cannot apply to them?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course it can apply to them.

Mr. GEORGE. No; it cannot. We passed a farm tenancy bill. The only way in which rural areas could be dealt with is under the provisions of that legislation. The only way in which it can be applied is under the Farm Tenancy Act or the Resettlement Act. We must have land on which to put houses in the country, and those lands are privately owned.

Mr. WAGNER. We are not going to build upon the farm. What will be done will be, as is done in most cities, that the slum area will be eliminated, and where those slum houses existed other houses will be built. That is for the low-income group. Of course, it must be only for the low-income group, where slum houses exist.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator says we will build other houses. Who is going to build other houses?

Mr. WAGNER. The Housing Authority.

Mr. GEORGE. What housing authority in Georgia, in Florida, or in Alabama?

Mr. WAGNER. If the State creates a housing authority, that authority has jurisdiction throughout the State.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose the State does not create any housing authority?

Mr. WAGNER. The State has the power to do it.

Mr. GEORGE. To acquire farms?

Mr. WAGNER. I am not talking about acquiring farms. The Senator is talking about something entirely different. We are not talking about acquiring farms.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is talking about building houses in the country, in the rural districts.

Mr. WAGNER. All right. There is not any difference between the country and the city so far as condemning slum dwellings is concerned. The bill provides that if they exist in a farm area, and those living in them belong to the low-income groups so that they can not afford to have decent housing of their own, the State steps in just as it does in the city, removes the houses which are in slum areas and in their place builds decent housing for the low-income group.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, as I understand, the State, through some agency, would have to step in and acquire the land?

Mr. WAGNER. Whether it is the city or the country.

Mr. GEORGE. I know; but I am talking about the country, acquiring land in the rural areas, acquiring farms.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; we are not talking about farms specifically. We are talking about the houses in which the people live. Why does the Senator insist upon always putting in there the farms?

Mr. GEORGE. I asked the Senator how the bill was going to be administered in the rural areas.

Mr. WAGNER. Just the same as in the cities. For instance, there are five or six houses——

Mr. GEORGE. Will not the Senator, then, please answer my question? If a State agency of some kind is going to step in where a slum area has been found, located in the country, in a rural area, and is going to condemn it, then that State agency must acquire the farm, the land?

Mr. WAGNER. Not necessarily at all. They acquire——

Mr. GEORGE. Could any money be furnished the owner to build a house under this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. The owner could not get any money. The money would go to a public authority. I cannot make it any plainer to the Senator. I am sorry.

Mr. GEORGE. How could the public authority get any money unless it owned the land?

Mr. WAGNER. For the last time, I am going to try to make this matter clear. It is perfectly clear in my mind, but the Senator keeps putting a farm into a housing proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. No, I am not; but houses are to be built in the country, on the farm, on farm land, and I cannot get the Senator to understand that there is not any city lot in the country, in the rural areas. There is either land that is cultivated or land which may be cultivated, somebody has got to own it, and under the bill there is nobody who can own it and get any help under the bill except the State, the county, or some public authority.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the public authority must acquire the farm in order to do the work under this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Not at all. The ordinary farmhouse of which the Senator speaks, of course, would not come under this proposed legislation at all.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, why does not the Senator say so? That is what I wanted him to say.

Mr. WAGNER. We do say so.

Mr. GEORGE. Say so, then.

Mr. WAGNER. We do say so.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, why does the Senator want to put in the bill provision for slum clearance in rural areas?

Mr. WAGNER. We do so because we provide a very definite rule that this is to apply to people of low income, the low-income group.

Mr. GEORGE. Those in the rural areas are of the low-income group.

Mr. WAGNER. Are they ill-housed?

Mr. GEORGE. Some of them are.

Mr. WAGNER. If they are ill-housed, and the State authority says that they are in a condition of being slum dwellers, are a menace to the health of the State, to the safety of the State, then that housing authority can go in there and remove the slums and put in place of them houses fit for human habitation.

Mr. GEORGE. The housing authority in the State or some agency of the State?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. And the only way the bill can be administered is for the State or some agency of the State to acquire the land in the rural area?

Mr. WAGNER. To acquire that part of the land where the slum houses exist.

Mr. GEORGE. Would it not be a beautiful picture to put a house where some old, dilapidated house exists in the midst of a large cultivated area of land, with nothing to go with it? Then there would arise the problem of supporting the inmate of the house and keeping him from starving. That is all I wanted to say, that this bill cannot be administered so far as the rural areas are concerned.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it can be.

Mr. GEORGE. It can be if the State is willing to buy the farm.

Mr. WAGNER. I think that is beside the question.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it is very much in point, and it is very pertinent, I will say to the Senator, and he knows that this bill cannot be administered in the rural areas unless the State or some State agency becomes the owner of the land.

Mr. WAGNER. Not at all.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, tell me how it can be administered unless the State or the State agency does become the owner.

Mr. WAGNER. I have tried to explain to the Senator that the fundamentals of this bill are very simple.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I know they are. I am not asking about the fundamentals of this bill; I can understand the fundamentals of the bill. They are very simple.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. But I ask the Senator how the bill can be administered in the rural areas unless the State or some agency of the State is going to acquire the farm in the rural area?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not know how it is in the Senator's State, but in my State, New York, and in my native State, Michigan, are many little settlements, rural settlements, where there are perhaps half a dozen houses, dilapidated houses, filthy houses, with nothing in the way of sanitation, just as indecent as they can be, just as much a menace to health, just as much a menace to morals as can be imagined. Those are rural dwellings.

Mr. GEORGE. Is not the Senator now speaking of a village?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I am not speaking of a village.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, let me ask the Senator from New York, do the occupants of those houses live on the land?

Mr. COPELAND. They are day laborers upon farms.

Mr. GEORGE. What farms?

Mr. COPELAND. Not their own farms. They go out on other farms.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, the Senator is referring to a village?

Mr. COPELAND. No; it may be a hamlet, but it is a rural settlement, it is an unincorporated place.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand it may be a rural settlement, and it may be unincorporated.

Mr. COPELAND. It is unincorporated; it is simply a part of a township, but such places, I am sure, are the ones my colleague has in mind. I do not think he would expect to go into the middle of a 640-acre farm, buy land, and build a farmhouse. But I can picture now a dozen such little places where live men who go out on the nearby farms to work. Yet they live in groups so squalid, so broken down, so indecent that it is not human to let them dwell there under such conditions. That is the situation this bill is intended to remedy, as I see it.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be so, but those places are not strictly in the rural area.

Mr. COPELAND. They are not city areas; they are not urban areas.

Mr. GEORGE. They are villages, after all. Let me ask the Senator, do the dwellers in those homes own them?

Mr. COPELAND. No.

Mr. GEORGE. Who owns them?

Mr. COPELAND. They are usually owned by some landlord, perhaps a big farmer nearby who has this little settlement.

Mr. GEORGE. Are they a part of his farm?

Mr. COPELAND. Not in the sense of the cultivated farm; they are separate entirely. There may be a post office there; the dwellers there may have a local post office; there might even be a church there, but it is not a city; it is not urban.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand it is not a city.

Mr. COPELAND. It is strictly rural, and the people who live in such places are just as much entitled to decent homes in which to live as are those who live in New York City, where there is no question about the right to construct houses and wipe out the slums.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but what agency is there to wipe out even a small village?

Mr. COPELAND. My colleague will explain that.

Mr. WAGNER. We have a State authority in New York which has jurisdiction throughout the State, except in New York City, where there is a separate authority. I am very grateful to my colleague for helping me out, for I have just thought of a number of homes which I myself saw near a canning industry.

Mr. GEORGE. Both Senators from New York are speaking of an aggregate of homes, a village, or a community of homes?

Mr. WAGNER. It may not be a village, but merely a row of old houses where people, after they get through at the canneries, go back to spend the night. I saw some of them.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not strictly a rural community, though it may be in a rural area.

Mr. WAGNER. It is absolutely a rural community; it is not a village.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Assuming the existence of a farm dwelling such as has been described here, is there any way for the owner of the dwelling of this wretched habitation to secure directly and through himself any financial aid through one of the public agencies to be set up?

Mr. WAGNER. No; he could not get any financial aid.

Mr. BONE. Would it be necessary, in any event, for a public agency created under this bill to take over the land itself and build a house in which a family might live in a rural neighborhood?

Mr. WAGNER. It could be done if, in the first place, the public authority ascertained that the family came within the low-income group of which we have been speaking, because, mind you, we are only trying to take care of the class of people who have not enough income to afford a decent sanitary dwelling and for whom private industry can make no provision because such persons cannot pay the rent which would give private industry a profit.

Mr. BONE. I understand that.

Mr. WAGNER. As to the point I tried to explain to the Senator from Georgia; when one is not in sympathy with legislation it is always difficult to explain it to him.

Mr. GEORGE. That is a very unfair statement.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not mean to be unfair; I am only judging——

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator is arrogating to himself the right to sit in judgment upon his fellows in this body.

Mr. WAGNER. Not at all. I have in mind the bill last year——

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I voted against the bill of last year.

Mr. WAGNER. And have I not a right to conclude that the Senator is not in sympathy with the methods we are providing by this proposed legislation?

Mr. GEORGE. I am not in sympathy with any fraud in the bill, and when the Senator talks about rural areas

I know it is a fraud, because the bill cannot be administered in the rural areas.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator suggest that I am indulging in a fraud?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NEELY. The rules of the Senate prohibit any Senator from making remarks that reflect upon the character or patriotism of another Senator; to accuse a Senator of having "a fraud" in this bill is such a reflection, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I mean no personal reflection when I say that the bill is a fraud, and I will repeat that with respect to certain provisions, if I understand the bill, it cannot possibly be administered. That is all I say.

The Senator has the floor, and I have made no personal reflection upon him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will suspend. The point of order has been made, and was made against the Senator from Georgia. The point of order is well taken against both Senators. The Chair hopes that both Senators will observe the rule.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Chair whether I violated any rule when I said the Senator from Georgia is not in sympathy with this legislation? I know his opposition is sincere. I made no suggestion of any kind affecting the Senator's character and I do not think the Chair ought to make any such intimation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair's ruling may be appealed from if the Senator desires.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to repeat exactly what I said. That is over now, however, and we will proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Chair will hear me, I meant no reflection in the Senator's character. I hold him in highest regard, and there was not anything personal in my remarks.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. We will apologize to one another.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sure the Senator made no reflection on me.

Mr. WAGNER. I know the Senator's position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Neither Senator is now out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am deeply sympathetic with the Senator's bill, the pending measure, but there are two or three matters which are disturbing me.

I note in section 9 provision is made for the authority to make loans to public-housing agencies. That is very clear. However, in subsection (b) the authority is clothed with power to make loans up to $25,000,000 to limited-profit housing agencies, with an 85-percent limit of cost of construction.

Going back to the definition on page 37, I note that a "limited-profit housing agency" is defined as any corporate body organized to develop or administer low-rent housing projects. Then I turn back to the definition of "low-rent housing projects", which I find includes not only dwelling houses and necessary or desirable appurtenances but includes also recreational, commercial, and other lands, buildings, and facilities.

Is there not great danger in clothing the authority with power to loan to private corporations?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator has practically read my mind. That provision has been suggested by a number of Senators from Western States, who contend that some of the cooperative organizations, which are really not organized for profit at all, ought to be aided.

I have a number of letters from Senators with reference to the matter. I have reflected since the bill was reported and believe now that that particular provision would be better in another bill separately dealing with that particular subject. Before we reach final consideration of the matter it is my purpose to ask that that provision and other provisions relating to that feature be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am very glad the Senator has made that statement.

Mr. WAGNER. That will be done for the reason that a number of Senators who are interested have suggested that the matter ought to be dealt with in separate legislation.

Mr. GILLETTE. May I also invite the Senator's attention to section 8, which to my mind aggravates the danger? In that section the authority is given power to make and provide rules, regulations, and definitions, and paragraph (b) of section 8 provides that "the findings of the authority, if reasonably substantiated, shall be conclusive." With that safeguard around all loans which they make, there is added danger of making the type of loans to which I have referred.

Mr. WAGNER. The courts have always found that facts found by an authority, if reasonably substantiated, are conclusive. We have that provision in all the public-utility laws.

Mr. GILLETTE. I have no objection to it whatever except when it is used in connection with the power to loan to private agencies.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator has brought up that matter before I got to it. It is my purpose to ask to eliminate that provision.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, where is the provision which the Senators are discussing?

Mr. WAGNER. It is in several different sections of the bill. It will all be eliminated.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. I invite the Senator's attention to section 20, on page 63 of the bill, having reference to the financing of projects. Recently in the relief bill authority was provided for the sale of securities by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the authority of the National Recovery Act and previous acts. In that bill specific provision was made for the expenditure of the funds so secured by the sale of securities—certain amounts for fire hazards in schools, and certain amounts for other purposes.

The language in subparagraph (b) is that—

Any unallocated funds now in the hands of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or hereafter received by it, which are derived from the sale of securities acquired—

Under these acts may—be allocated to the authority for the purposes of this act.

Mr. WAGNER. That is only for the purpose of making a loan.

Mr. BYRNES. What is the thought of the Senator from New York? This money will be secured hereafter by the sale of securities which will not be allocated to particular projects, but the intention of Congress, as expressed in the act, was that it should be used for those purposes. Under this provision of the bill now under consideration, authority is given the President to use that money "for the purposes of this act."

Mr. WAGNER. For additional purposes. Is there any harm in that?

Mr. BYRNES. Only this. The amount referred to in the authority in the relief act was arrived at by adding the total various subjects to carry out pledges made by the Democratic leader in another body to that body in the passage of the bill. It represents the exact amount reported by the Public Works Administration as necessary to carry out those provisions. I do not know whether it is the intention of the Senator or the committee to authorize the diversion of any of that money from the purposes set forth in the relief act to the purposes contemplated by the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. No. Suppose we limit this bill to moneys hereafter received. Would that make any difference?

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator's intention is not to interfere with the amounts which were earmarked in the relief act, certainly suitable language can be found to make that clear. Was it his intention to interfere with those amounts?

Mr. WAGNER. No; it was not.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. As I understand, the bill provides for the making of outright grants of aid for housing projects carried on under the auspices of public bodies.

Mr. WAGNER. That is an alternative. There is another provision in the bill relating to that. I have not yet had an opportunity of getting to the point of explaining that feature of the bill because of the questions which have been asked.

Mr. BONE. I had marked the section on page 63, referred to by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], which provides that P. W. A. funds derived from the sale of securities might in the discretion of the President be allocated to the authority set up in the bill now under consideration, and allocated, using the language of the bill, "for the purposes of this act." That would mean an outright grant, would it not?

Mr. WAGNER. No; it does not mean that. It is limited to loans, because there is another provision of the bill which limits the amount to be used each year for the purposes of the grants to $10,000,000. During the next 3 years only $10,000,000 may be used each year for the purposes of the grants.

Mr. BONE. There was no suggestion of a limitation on the loans.

Mr. WAGNER. There is another section of the bill which limits the amounts of the grants to $10,000,000 a year and makes appropriation therefor, so it cannot be used for any other purpose.

Mr. BONE. Is there any doubt in the Senator's mind that under this language some of the money derived from sale of P. W. A. securities through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might be diverted "for the purposes of this act"? This language is very broad, and there is no restriction imposed by the section itself.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a restriction definitely set forth in another provision of the bill. I want to be perfectly candid with the Senator. If there is any doubt in the mind of any Senator that the language does not clearly cover that point, I am quite willing to adopt some other language in order that it shall be clear that it is limited to loans. That is the intent, and I think it is very clear; but if there is any question, let us add language which will make it very clear that it applies only to loans.

Mr. BONE. There is a comparatively limited amount of money available—that is, limited because of the large number of demands—for schoolhouses under P. W. A. grants, and I think we might have some challenge against this provision on that account.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to have any interference with the reservations already made in the relief bill. I did not intend any such thing, and I think we can amend this bill in some respect so as to provide clearly for that matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MALONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Apropos of the question just discussed, does the Senator think it proper—I will not use the word "fair", but "proper"—to attempt to yoke this bill to the P. W. A. and to subtract from the P. W. A. funds which have been granted to it, or funds which it may obtain from time to time from the sale of securities, to be used under this act? Is it not a commingling or an intermingling of two agencies which ought not to be permitted?

Mr. WAGNER. No. I will say to the Senator that I think the general opinion in the country is that one of the wisest possible expenditures of public moneys would be to rehouse the one-third of our population which at present is ill-housed. We have used a large amount of public funds for purposes which were not nearly so useful or desirable as the housing program. In spite of what has been said here, when conservative and liberal press and every organization in the country which has anything to do with this subject approve the proposed legislation, certainly that is an expression of public opinion in its favor. As an abstract proposition, I think almost everyone will concede that clearing our slums and housing these unfortunate persons in sanitary and decent living quarters is one of the most desirable things that can be done, both from the economic and from the social point of view.

Mr. KING. I was not discussing that question at all; but when we have set up one agency and authorized it to extend credit and to sell securities, it seemed to me highly improper to set up another agency and authorize the second agency to subtract from the funds of the first agency. There is a commingling of funds there which will make the act difficult of administration.

Mr. WAGNER. It is not a commingling, Mr. President, because we simply authorize the President to do it. If he does not desire to do it, it will not be done.

Mr. KING. Personally, I am not willing to support section (b) of section 20 in the committee amendment on page 63 of the bill, and I shall move to strike it out if the chairman of the committee does not assent to its being eliminated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I suppose I shall never get to what I intended to say, but it does not matter very much.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator's speech.

Mr. WAGNER. No; the Senator is not interrupting me.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am anxious to know the sum total of the problem to which we are addressing ourselves, if the Senator can tell me. He frequently refers to the fact that one-third of our people are ill-housed, and so forth. That does not mean, does it, that a third of our people would be eligible under this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; oh, no. In the first place, we have a loaning authority up to the amount of only $700,000,000, and we have authority for a direct appropriation of only $20,000,000 a year; and under the legislation which I propose, the amount cannot exceed that. In other words, for the purpose of paying subsidies not more than $20,000,000 a year may be appropriated; so there is a great limitation upon the appropriation. Of course, the loan is absolutely a sound loan. Every dollar of it will be repaid.

Mr. KING. Twenty million dollars for 3 years, limited to 3 years.

Mr. WAGNER. After 3 years, when the construction under this program will have been completed, only $20,000,000 per year may be appropriated over a period of 20 years, under this legislation, unless Congress enacts new legislation in the meantime; and at the end of 20 years there is to be a readjustment. In other words, there can be no larger appropriation than $20,000,000 per year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Just a minute, if I may pursue my own question.

Mr. WAGNER. Perhaps it would be better to have the discussion proceed in this way than to have me make the remarks I had intended to make.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I realize that this very conservative limitation exists; but that would not affect our obligation to treat alike all citizens who fall in a given classification.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So I am trying to ascertain from the Senator what he thinks the sum total of that obligation would be if we should treat all citizens alike under the terms of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean all of the low-income group?

Mr. VANDENBERG. All those who would be eligible under the terms of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot estimate the number, but it would be very much larger than the number it is proposed to deal with under the bill. This is only a beginning, and future Congresses will have to determine whether or not we ought to expand our program.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator if he would agree with the statement in one of the New York papers of Sunday last that—

> There are probably about nine million American urban families with incomes of $1,000 a year or less, substantially all of whom would be eligible to live in dwellings erected under the Wagner-Steagall Act.

And it is the estimate of this writer that that could cost $36,000,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. That may very well be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that very far from the fact?

Mr. WAGNER. The estimate perhaps is a little large, but it may very well be accurate; but we must make a beginning in legislation of this character.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand that.

Mr. WAGNER. I made the measure as conservative as possible, although I have been interested in housing for a long time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree with that.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me state what happened in England and in Ireland. In England the Government began very modestly. Pretty soon public opinion supported the elimination of the slums to the extent that it became the most important program during the time of the Baldwin Cabinet, although it was started by the Labor Party; and the thing of which Prime Minister Baldwin is most proud is the building program under his administration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not criticizing the Senator for starting conservatively.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that. The Senator need not tell me that I am starting very conservatively. I know it. I am just touching the situation, and even that has been difficult. This is the third year of the attempt to secure legislation of this kind.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am simply asking the Senator whether we must not contemplate the sum total of our obligation, inasmuch as we cannot start subsidizing rentals to a portion of our people except as we are prepared to subsidize all who qualify within the same classification.

Mr. WAGNER. Except that, in spite of what some persons say, we must keep in mind the fact that our country is becoming more prosperous all the time. We desire to deal with the unemployment situation, and this is a case where we are apt to put a million men to work, directly and indirectly. If we deal properly with the subject of technological unemployment and shorter hours, as we did here the other day, we are going to spread our income to some extent, and then these slum dwellers will get out of the slums, because their incomes will increase. So I look forward to the day when the number which has just been mentioned will be reduced substantially by a more prosperous country, which I see ahead if we intelligently and courageously deal with this subject and help the low-income group to come up.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator one further question? He has referred to the British development.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I myself saw it, Mr. President.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And I myself saw it, and was tremendously impressed with it. I think it is a magnificent monument to vision and foresight. Can the Senator tell me to what extent this method of procedure is similar to the British method?

Mr. WAGNER. The method of annual contributions, Mr. President, is identical with the British system. During the first year Great Britain adopted the capital grant system, as we did in the case of the houses we built. We have not built any houses for the low-income group. Let us not make any mistake about that. What we provided was a capital grant; and the houses have been too expensively built, and there has not been a sufficient subsidy.

Great Britain started the first year of development by a capital grant system. In the year following the construction of the first number of buildings, 2 years after the beginning, the British authorities discovered that they were not doing the job properly; that it was too expensive; that when a lump sum is given to a community, it has this large sum, and the tendency is for it to be extravagant. So they changed from that system, and during the past 7 or 8 years they have adopted and the Senator saw what they have done over there—the system I have provided for in this bill, under which there is to be a contribution each year based upon what the construction costs and what the expenses are. They determine what rent would have to be charged to pay all expenses and make perhaps a little profit, amortize the loan, and all that; and then they add as a subsidy such an amount per room as will bring the rent down to a figure within the ability of the low-income group to pay.

While some persons think there will be difficulty about determining the composition of the low-income group, England has no trouble about that. The English authorities watch it very carefully. Nobody gets into the dwellings except those who are in the low-income group. As soon as those persons become sufficiently affluent they are asked to go out; there is no longer a place there for them, and other low-income groups are brought in.

But here is an additional consideration, Mr. President: This housing program has reduced the unemployment problem in England. For some reason—and the office to which I spoke could not exactly explain it, except as a matter of psychology—private industry began to build, too; and as you go through England, you find, wherever you go, that private industry is now building, and is rehousing England. What was done by the Government there ignited a fuse of private construction; and both England and Ireland—I must commend Ireland, too—are doing a fine job along the same line. They distinguish without any difficulty between the slum dweller and the man who can afford to pay rent above that paid by the low-income group, and they have no difficulty in the classification. The housing program has been the most popular thing that has happened in England.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. It had been my intention to say something about that subject at this time; but I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York, so ably presenting this bill, inform me whether it is the purpose of the bill to ignore the present existing authority to carry out certain privileges and authorities in the way of slum clearance, say in my own city, under what we call the administrator, being the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes?

This bill, unless I am wrong, creates a completely new board with a new authority, an administrator, and, under him, five others. I ask my able friend whether it is the intention to create a completely new board, a new set of officials, in addition to those who are already administering slum clearance?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no. Perhaps I have not made that clear. The clearance of the slums and the construction of houses are not handled by the Washington authority at all. They are handled by the authority in the city of Chicago, and I think there is an authority also for the entire State of Illinois. They would have the same authority they now have. They would make their application to Washington if there were a slum to be cleared. They would both initiate and complete the job. All the Federal commission would do would be to make the loan, and at the end, when the project was completed, provide what subsidy the city of Chicago, for instance, or the State authority, would be entitled to in order to house the low-income group. There has been no change at all. I have a long list of organizations in the State of Illinois which have endorsed the bill, and among them is the Chicago Housing Authority.

Mr. LEWIS. I fear I have not made myself clear. Conceding all my able friend says as to what has transpired, and is transpiring now, under some provision which authorizes the local branches at Chicago and other parts of the land to act, is it not true that they are serving under the officer whom we speak of as Administrator of Public Works, whom we know to be Mr. Ickes, designated as Secretary of the Interior? When this new board shall be created, as provided in the bill of the able Senator, will it supplant and supersede Mr. Ickes and his force which is now aiding in clearing the slums in my city and in other parts of the country?

Mr. WAGNER. No. The objects to which the Senator refers have been built by the Federal authority. We intend to decentralize that, which has been the cry of the country, so that the local authority will do the job itself. Heretofore the project built in Chicago has been built by the Federal authority, and were very well constructed, except that I think it cost more than the local authority would expend for a slum-clearance project. The authority now is proposed to be transferred from the Federal Government into the local Chicago authority. They will do what the Federal Government formerly did.

As to those who are engaged in building these so-called demonstration projects, the President is given authority to transfer all of those engaged in that work, if he so desires, to this new authority. So that if the President desires, those who are now doing the housing, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, will continue to do it.

Mr. LEWIS. So that under the bill the President, by Executive order, may concentrate all of the work in the single body?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. Of course, the bill would do that; but those who are now employed in the Interior Department doing this work might also be transferred to the new authority. But the new authority will do very little in the way of construction. It will provide only for loans, and supervise to see that the houses are being built for the low-income group, which, of course, should be done; otherwise the objective of the bill would be destroyed.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator, and appreciate the patience with which he has replied to my inquiry.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator some questions, if he will permit.

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is there any way by which the occupants of the houses may acquire title after they are constructed? It seems to me that we ought not to establish a policy which will make it impossible for the occupants of the houses which are constructed to acquire title and emancipate themselves from the control of these agencies.

Mr. WAGNER. The occupants of the houses are of the very low-income group. They cannot even afford to pay more than $2 or $3 or $4 or $5 per room. The moment they become affluent enough to afford to pay more than is provided for the low-income group, they cannot remain occupants of the houses. The authority would say, "You go. You are earning more money than are those in the low-income group, and you can no longer occupy these dwellings." So that there would never come a time when they would be in position to acquire title.

Mr. KING. Under that theory are we not discouraging home ownership, and making this one-third of the public to whom the Senator refers psychologically and otherwise of the opinion that they never can be home owners, that they are to be renters as long as they live?

Mr. WAGNER. Just as soon as they earn enough, they can become home owners; but we are speaking of a class of people who because of their very low incomes—and I will give the Senator the figures—are unable even to live in decent quarters, and thus are a constant menace to the health and welfare of the communities in which they live. Ireland and England had an experience which proves that our statistics are almost mathematically correct, that the moment we eliminate the slums and put the people in better quarters juvenile delinquency disappears, crime disappears, disease generated from the slums and spread to all other sections of the city disappears. It is an economic advantage to us. There is a constant, standing menace. Without some such legislation as this these unfortunate people would never otherwise get better surroundings than their present very evil surróundings. They are never in a position to. If they were, they would not be in this very low income group. These are people where the whole family earns a thousand dollars or less. Can the Senator imagine that, a family of four or five living on a thousand dollars a year?

Mr. KING. I know that 6 or 8 years ago—indeed, just before the war and since the war—the average income of all the lawyers in the United States was less than a thousand dollars a year each, and the average income of all the preachers of the United States was less than a thousand dollars.

One other question. How long are we to continue this subsidy, and what will be the aggregate amount paid out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. WAGNER. I have told the Senator that, so far as this bill is concerned, there is a limitation of $20,000,000.

Mr. KING. For how long?

Mr. WAGNER. For a period of 20 years. Then the contract is to be adjusted, and the authority will determine whether the subsidy ought to continue at all or not, or whether it ought to be reduced. If prosperity keeps on spreading, and the families no longer need aid, we will put an end to the help. In the meantime, there is no other way these people can be gotten out of the slums. Everyone who has been a student of this subject agrees to that. Many countries have had to take similar action in order to take care of the ill-housed. They are a menace also to our safety. That is where communism comes from.

Mr. KING. We will discuss that later. As I understand, then, the bill means a commitment for an indefinite period of $20,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. Not indefinitely; for 20 years.

Mr. KING. A legal commitment——

Mr. WAGNER. Of not more than $20,000,000. It may be only $10,000,000. It depends on our experience.

Mr. KING. At any rate, it is a legal commitment of $20,000,000 for 20 years?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; not more than $20,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. $20,000,000 a year?

Mr. KING. $20,000,000 a year.

Mr. WAGNER. A short time ago we made a commitment of $60,000,000 to build ships. Twenty million dollars is about one-third of what one battleship would cost, and are we not willing to make that contribution to lift these unfortunate, underprivileged people into a decent place in which to live? I wish I could take the Senator around to some of these slum areas.

Mr. KING. I have been there.

Mr. WAGNER. Where he could see the people who live there. The children never have a chance. It is the duty of wealthy America to give them a chance, and I am sure it will.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator where the people who live in the slums come from.

Mr. WAGNER. A great many of them have been here a long time. I have not any statistics as to that. What does the Senator mean by where they come from, whether they come from some other country?

Mr. ANDREWS. Do not some of them also come from the farms in the States, from the country areas?

Mr. WAGNER. The people who live in the slums live there because they have not incomes large enough to enable them to rent decent quarters, and they are all types of people. Out through the Western States will be found people whose families have been in this country for hundreds of years. They are living in our country; they are citizens of our country. It does not matter to me much where they come from. Does the Senator think we ought to segregate these people so that those who have been here only 10 years and who have become citizens of our country should receive different consideration from those who have been here longer? I am sure the Senator does not mean that.

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not.

Mr. WAGNER. I knew the Senator did not.

Mr. ANDREWS. I think we ought not to offer an inducement to people to come in from our country or foreign countries or anywhere else and take advantage of our Government in supplying them with homes. For instance, if we examine the birth records in New York we will find that most of the people there in the slums were not born in New York, but the bright lights have attracted them from everywhere, and that is one reason why there are so many millions in New York without homes. They go there and when there comes a depression, we find that many of them have nothing to do and must go on relief. If they could be induced to stay on the farms or in the foreign country whence they came there would not be any slums. There are no slums in the country.

Mr. WAGNER. There are slums in some rural sections. A survey shows quite a number of slums in rural areas. That was brought out this morning.

Mr. ANDREWS. I am referring to a slum as defined in the bill. Is it not true that in farming districts there are no such things as slums as defined in this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. There are in some sections.

Mr. ANDREWS. The people are generally healthy out on the farms.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is mistaken. Surveys show the contrary.

Mr. ANDREWS. If the same persons who have failed on the farm were to move to the city they would make just as big a failure there as out on the farm, where they at least have the ground to till, and where they can have a garden, chickens and cows, and, if necessary pigs.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator thinks we ought to abandon these people altogether, and just let them stay in the slums?

Mr. ANDREWS. No, sir; that is not my idea.

Mr. WAGNER. What can we do?

Mr. ANDREWS. If we build palaces for them——

Mr. WAGNER. We are not building palaces for them. We are building homes that should average no more than $1,000 per room, which is quite an ordinary type of construction, I may say. Such homes give the dwellers sunlight, it gives them a bath, it gives them a toilet, it gives them ordinary sanitation so that they may live under decent conditions, so that the children may have decent environments and live in a fairly decent home. Nothing beyond that is provided.

Mr. ANDREWS. We all want to see that if it would include the native American farmers.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I am trying to do. But if we want to see it done, we ought to do it. I see no way of removing this cancer except by doing it.

Ours is a wealthy country. One-third of our people are so poor that they cannot properly house themselves. The reason for that is that they do not earn enough money. That is due to our economic system. The fault is not theirs. They would like to work and they would like to earn enough money properly to take care of themselves. But we have sweatshops and many of these people work in them. These poor people are unorganized. They are working in industries in which the workers are unorganized. They can make no effective demands. The very fact that they live in slum dwellings makes them undernourished and underfed and unhealthy, and frequently they are not able to do what healthy persons can do.

I wish the Senator had been with me in England, where I saw families living in the slums, and I saw families also that had been removed from the slums into decent surroundings. When one looks at the children, the men, and the women who have been removed from the slum areas and compare them with those who live in the slum areas one finds that the difference between them is as great as the difference between night and day. England had found it of great economic advantage to clear out her slum areas and move the slum dwellers into decent surroundings and decent homes. When that has been accomplished it is not necessary to build so many hospitals. England is still continuing that program.

Mr. ANDREWS. Have they and their ancestors always been there in the slums.

Mr. WAGNER. They and their ancestors?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I never inquired about that, because it does not interest me enough. I look upon human beings as human beings whether they came here 20 years ago or their parents came here two or three hundred years ago. If they are unfortunate enough to have to live in those slums, and if that is a menace to our health and our welfare, and if an economic advantage results to our country from lifting them out of the slums and giving their children a chance to become decent citizens instead of criminals, I say that, no matter who they are, they are entitled to be helped out of the slums. I would not think of inquiring into whether their parents or their great grandmother came here 100 years ago. I am sure the Senator will distinguish between this country and others. In this country we have a democracy. This is America, a country with equal opportunities.

Mr. ANDREWS. I fully agree with the Senator that this is a democracy.

The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: As a matter of fact, does the influx of population into New York City also largely come from the rural sections of the United States?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is talking about New York, and, of course, that is a favorite subject here. I do not find much fault with that. It seems to me that only when I am speaking does New York become a favorite subject for everyone to say something about. New York is not the only benefactor under this proposed program. I do not know how much New York will benefit.

The application of the program is country-wide in other places where even worse conditions exist than in New York and which ought to be treated even before New York. However, I am not thinking of this program in terms of one municipality. I am thinking of it in terms of the whole Nation. Wherever these areas exist and wherever these unfortunate people exist, let us try to help them. I know there is a better way to do it, but it will take too long.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is it not the business of the municipalities to see that there are no slums in those cities?

Mr. WAGNER. I think that becomes a national problem, because if we in New York stop buying automobiles a depression would come to Detroit. An interdependence exists in this country which makes the problem a national problem. We contribute money for the building of prisons; we contribute money for the building of hospitals; we contribute money for health protection. The Federal Government makes contribution for all those things. What we are now proposing is in the same category. The Senator does not hesitate to vote favorably, and I voted favorably myself, for the appropriation of tremendous sums to build battleships. I think this program will be of greater service than building battleships. If we lift these poor people out of their slum surroundings we will benefit the Nation in greater measure than by building battleships.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. POPE. I have been very much interested in what England has done along this line; and, as I recall, she has been engaged in dealing with this problem for many years.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. POPE. Can the Senator give us some idea as to what it has cost England annually, or for some period of time, to carry on the work of its housing program?

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot give the Senator the figures offhand. England has spent a good deal more money per year than we provide in this legislation, but England began modestly. Everyone in England is in favor of their slum-clearance program, a fact with which I think the Senator is familiar. I heard Prime Minister Baldwin himself say that the greatest achievement of his administration was to extricate these people from their unfortunate surroundings and give them decent places in which to live.

Mr. POPE. I was thinking that that program has undergone perhaps less criticism than any other that the Government is undertaking in Great Britain.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. POPE. It is the one that receives the approval of almost all the people. In view of that approval, I was wondering whether the expense of the program added very greatly to the taxes of the people of Great Britain. Of course, England is very much smaller than the United States, and would, I suppose, have fewer families living in slums than we have in our country.

Mr. WAGNER. They have, as a matter of fact, a great many slums.

Mr. POPE. I wonder if the Senator, before he takes his seat——

Mr. WAGNER. I was not intending to take my seat just yet. I want to emphasize a few more points.

Mr. POPE. I wish the Senator would tell us how the program would work. A United States authority is provided.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. POPE. Then provision is made for local authorities, and the United States authority is given power to make loans and make annual contributions, capital grants and assistance, and establish demonstration projects. I was interested to know just how it would work out, and just how these different administrative bodies would function in making the loans, in what cases they would make loans, in what cases they would make contributions, and how they would affect the rental situation in making these various contributions. I was particularly interested in getting a statement with respect to that.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to make such a statement. Does the Senator wish me to do so right away, or shall I run through some of these figures first? In the course of what I am saying I think the Senator will get that very clearly. I may say that, so far as subsidies are concerned, we are dealing here exclusively with the low-income group. Therefore, the housing authority can get a loan from the Government only when it intends to clear slums, plus building units for the slum dwellers who have lost their homes because the authority has cleared the slums.

Mr. POPE. The question was asked a little earlier by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] as to whom this service would be extended to. It is clear that it could not be extended to one-third of our population. What particular families would be selected to receive the benefits? I suppose those who need it most would be the first to receive the benefit of it.

Mr. WAGNER. The lowest-income group.

Mr. POPE. The lowest-income group would receive it first; but I am interested to know how the authority would deal with the situation where they find a bad slum situation. What would they do, exactly?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean the Federal board?

Mr. POPE. Yes; the Federal board or the local board. What would they do?

Mr. WAGNER. The initiation of the whole project of slum clearance comes from the local authority. The Federal authority does not initiate anything. The local authority, say, in the city of Boise—Boy-see—is that the way to pronounce it?

Mr. POPE. The Senator pronounced Boise correctly; but I doubt whether any application will be made from the city of Boise, because we have no slums.

Mr. WAGNER. The people there are very fortunate. However, if any city, Chicago, New York, St. Louis, Los Angeles—in those cities perhaps they have no slums—but if the local housing authority of a city makes application saying that they have a slum-clearance project, that they want to clear the slums and house these unfortunate individuals, they come to Washington and make their application for a loan. Then the authority at Washington, of course, inquires into the facts to ascertain whether those involved are people of low-income groups.

They must find out just what their earnings are. That report will go to Washington. Then, if the proposal is one involving a real proper slum clearance, the authority will make a loan for the construction, or lend so much of the amount required as they want to lend. The locality may make a contribution. They are to take into consideration what the locality can do. They may make the locality contribute toward the construction. The authority will build with that borrowed money. When the building is complete they will say, "Here is what it cost us per room, and here is what the rent will be if we are to pay all of the running expenses." That will probably be above the amount which the low-income group can afford to pay. Otherwise we would not be in this thing at all; we would let private industry do it all. That is the way it is done in England, too. What can the low-income group afford to pay? Suppose each room provides a rental of $5 and the low-income group cannot afford to pay more than $4 per room?

The Federal Government says, "All right; for the period of 20 years, so long as the housing is limited to the low-income group and we have the right of inspection at any time, we will provide a subsidy of $1 per room." That is what the Federal Government agrees to pay over a period of 20 years. Then the contract is to be readjusted, because during that period we may become more prosperous and there may not be the need for dwellings for the low-income group there was before. We may stop paying subsidies altogether, depending upon the conditions of that time.

Under this bill a 3-year program is provided, and the appropriation at the end of the third year to provide for subsidies cannot be more than $20,000,000 per year. It may be less, but it cannot be more. So, from the standpoint of an appropriation, it is a very modest sum if in that period of time we can begin to eliminate the slums. We can, under the provisions of this bill, house or rehouse about 875,000 families, and my prediction is——

Mr. TYDINGS. Is that a year?

Mr. WAGNER. The total will be over 850,000 persons.

Mr. TYDINGS. In what length of time?

Mr. WAGNER. Over a period of 3 years, with about 175,000 family units, as I recall the figures. As I started to say, my prediction is that what will happen will be just what has happened in England. The housing project there became so popular that the House of Parliament was, by public opinion, compelled to go forward with a larger program, and today, as the Senator knows, it is the thing that England is proudest of. Besides that, as the Senator has noticed, all through the rural sections there homes are being built, because for some reason or other the movement on the part of the Government started also private construction. I expect it will be so in this case.

Mr. POPE. The homes built in the country are, of course, built privately?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; they are built privately. We are limiting this measure to a class of people that private industry cannot take care of. That is set forth in the proposed legislation itself, and that is so as a matter of fact, because what can the low-income group with $1,000 for a family of five, or $800, or $700, do to provide housing for themselves? We will probably get down to the $600 class. That is where we want to start.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not read the bill, and I desire to ask the Senator some questions purely for information. These grants, as I understand, will be made to States and cities, either one. Is that correct?

Mr. WAGNER. To the local housing authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. To the local agency. Is such agency required to put up a certain amount of funds or does the Federal Government furnish all the money?

Mr. WAGNER. That is also a matter of discretion; the housing authority must determine it after going into all the facts. If a municipality can make a cash contribution, they will have to do so. What will happen? A good many of the bonds of the local authorities will be sold to private investors, because they will be a good investment, so that the Federal Government, undoubtedly, will not be required to put up the total amount. The loan would be perfectly safe—as safe as 90 percent of the loans made by the Federal Government have been.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not asking about that.

Mr. WAGNER. But I am trying to sustain my point.

Mr. TYDINGS. After the money is put up, who will build the houses?

Mr. WAGNER. The local authority. It is an absolutely decentralized bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. They let the contracts?

Mr. WAGNER. The local authority does all the construction work.

Mr. TYDINGS. They would take bids, and so on, would they?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course. We have nothing to do with that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand they would do it just as if they were building a fire house or anything else in the community.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. After a new housing unit is erected, who will have the title to them?

Mr. WAGNER. The authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Federal authority?

Mr. WAGNER. No; the local authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then we will have simply guaranteed a proportion of their bonds?

Mr. WAGNER. We will have made a loan to them for which they will give us their bonds; those bonds they must amortize and they will have to pay the rate of interest which the Government is required to pay, plus a sum to repay the principal over a period of years. The loan will be absolutely secure.

Mr. TYDINGS. For the loan we would have the municipality's bonds, would we not?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; or the housing authority's bonds, which would be the same thing, for it is a public authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. I suppose in some cases the housing authority would have the additional support of the municipality?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that if the housing authority's assets were not sufficient to pay off the bonds in full, the municipality would make up the difference?

Mr. WAGNER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other cases the municipality, perhaps, might not have the assets, as contemplated by the bill, and the housing authority could act only for itself but could not bind the municipality.

Mr. WAGNER. Then we must rely to some extent upon the experience of the Government. I am sure the Senator knows that in no case where money has been loaned to a municipality or any other political subdivision has there been a default to the Government at Washington?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator means recently?

Mr. WAGNER. No, I mean all through whenever a loan has been made.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator means a loan made by the Government?

Mr. WAGNER. By the Government; yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, we only went into that business because of the depression.

Mr. WAGNER. I mean the Government has actually made money on some of the loans. It has sold bonds at a higher price than was paid for the money which was borrowed, so that the Federal Government actually made a profit from these transactions. The R. F. C. has done so.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator another question. I wish to read the bill, but I should like to get some sort of idea of its provisions before I start reading it, so that I may understand it better. The bill is designed to take care of the low-income group?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is thoroughly commendable. Will the low-income group be in a position to pay the rents that will result from the building of these new units?

Mr. WAGNER. Not without a subsidy.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, as I see it, the low-income group is living in the slums primarily not only because there is a housing shortage but because they cannot afford to pay higher rents elsewhere?

Mr. WAGNER. Absolutely; that is the main reason for the bill; and that has existed for some years. We have had slums with us for years, not merely during the depression.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the point I make.

Mr. WAGNER. And nothing has been done about it.

Mr. TYDINGS. So we will, in reality, build a unit for a low-income group in the form of housing which that low-income group will probably not have enough income to handle in a financial way?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the subsidy uniform?

Mr. WAGNER. No; because the cost of construction is not uniform.

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean the percentage.

Mr. WAGNER. Not even the percentage.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is all discretionary, is it?

Mr. WAGNER. We want to provide for as high a rent as can possibly be paid. In some cases, after a project shall have been constructed, it will be found that the cost is very much less than in some other sections. Therefore, the rent which will be needed to amortize and to pay all maintenance and running expenses would be lower than in some other community where materials, labor, and other costs are higher. So that in some cases there may not be any subsidy needed, because the costs may be so low that even the low-income group may afford to pay the rent provided.

Mr. TYDINGS. I doubt if that would follow in the larger cities.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think it would there.

Mr. TYDINGS. Because it stands to reason that a great many low-income families are living in low-rent houses because they just have not the money with which to get any better housing.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Therefore, if we build them other houses, it will be necessary for us to subsidize that type of family if we put them into a better house?

Mr. WAGNER. There is no question about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. My question was, Is there a limit upon the amount of subsidy?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes; it cannot be more than 3½ percent of the cost of construction annually.

Mr. TYDINGS. And that would be 3½ percent per year?

Has the Senator any estimate as to how much the Government would lose through a subsidy and through other forces that might come into action in the operation of this bill due to the fact that the low-income class cannot pay the higher rent that would be necessary completely to amortize the loan? How much actual money expended on the operation would fail to come back to the Treasury? I do not know whether I have made myself plain.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think the Senator has.

Mr. TYDINGS. The subsidy is gone forever, is it not? We do not get that back?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; just as when a hospital is built.

Mr. TYDINGS. Outside the subsidy, how much of the Government outlay would fail to come back to the Treasury?

Mr. WAGNER. Not a cent. I mean that the loan would be absolutely secure, as secure as 90 percent, as I have said, of the loans made by the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that the money we are appropriating here, outside the subsidy, is really only a loan which eventually will come back into the revolving fund?

Mr. WAGNER. Absolutely; it is not an appropriation, it is a bond issue.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much does the Senator estimate the subsidy will amount to for a year, in dollars and cents?

Mr. WAGNER. We have limited it, after the completion of the program, to a period of 3 years to $20,000,000 a year, and it cannot be more.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the subsidy.

Mr. WAGNER. That is the subsidy, spreading it over a period of years.

Mr. TYDINGS. So the maximum cost would be $20,000,000 a year?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. If all of that sum were used, it would be a complete loss insofar as its return to the Treasury is concerned?

Mr. WAGNER. No; that would be a gain.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am talking about the business end of it.

Mr. WAGNER. We had some businessmen before us who said the subsidy would be a gain.

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean from the bookkeeping standpoint.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, it will not come back.

Mr. TYDINGS. The $20,000,000 goes out and does not come back in the form of $20,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. To what extent is there a limitation placed upon the loans that may be made to the authority for slum clearing? Is there any limit?

Mr. WAGNER. There is no limit.

Mr. TYDINGS. It could be $2,000,000,000 if necessary?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean the loans to the authority?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a limitation of $700,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. When the entire sum shall have been loaned, to what extent will that have solved the problem?

Mr. WAGNER. We would still have a great deal to do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator think we would have solved one-fourth of it?

Mr. WAGNER. I doubt it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator any substantial figure he could give me on that point?

Mr. WAGNER. We are going to take care of 850,000 persons, roughly speaking, under this program. It is said there are 9,000,000 families badly housed.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is farm and city families both. We would not have slums on the farm, though the farm help might be poorly housed. There would have to be a community before we could have a slum. The Senator means farm units rather than farms?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; a rural unit.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. In the rural community the houses would have to be in a rural village before the terms of this bill could apply, would they not?

Mr. WAGNER. It is not always a village. I know some areas around New York which do not constitute villages. The people live alongside of or near the farm. The houses are very old, having been built a long time ago.

Mr. SMITH. Are those houses attached to the farm?

Mr. WAGNER. They are not attached to the farm, but the people living in them work on the farm.

Mr. SMITH. But they are segregated from the farm and therefore the tenants who live on the farm would not come under the terms of the bill, would they?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to be technical about it. Does the Senator mean they live right on the farm, or they are workers living in houses really adjoining the farm, the houses having been built years ago to house the farm help who are seasonal in character, I suppose? Many of them have been declared to be very badly housed. That is not my statement from personal knowledge but based on surveys which have been made.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think there are about 28,000,000 families in the United States. I think probably one-third of them would come in the lower brackets and some would be better housed than others, but approximately about 9,000,000 families are included. The point I am making is that $700,000,000 is to take care of substantially 1,000,000 of the 3,000,000 families, so if we wanted to take care of the entire number who are poorly housed we would have to multiply that by 8, which would make $5,600,000,000, assuming we did the whole job in 1 year at present costs. That is substantially correct, is it not?

Mr. WAGNER. Except that the Senator should allow for future improvement of conditions of some of the families. Otherwise the Senator's statement is approximately correct, as to the loans for construction costs.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am trying to get a general picture of the program. I realize we could expect, if we did it all at this time, if the total program were taken care of in 1 year, instead of 20 years to take care of every condition, it would cost between $5,000,000,000 and $6,000,000,000. I take for granted that in the lower one-third, down at the bottom of that one-third there is probably 15 or 20 percent who are the people the Senator wants to take care of first.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, the yardstick will be to take care of those who above all others need it most and first?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is that provided for in the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. That is the objective of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is that provision in the bill, or is it merely left to the board?

Mr. WAGNER. The bill is intended to cover the lowest income group.

Mr. TYDINGS. And would that take care of them, in the Senator's opinion?

Mr. WAGNER. As the Senator knows, there must be some discretion lodged somewhere. I am very thankful to the Senator because he has brought out some points I would not have been able to bring out probably.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. POPE. It seems to me the problem the Senator from Maryland stated is very much larger than he suggested. In the report on the bill it is stated:

> Taking the country as a whole, respectable living quarters cost about $7 per room per month, which means that a normal family of five, in order to obtain four rooms in which to live, must spend about $336 each year for rent. By and large, studies indicate that it is socially undesirable for a family to spend this amount for rent with a family income of less than $1,600 to $1,800 per year.

Then, in the table which follows, it is shown that the percentage of farmers in 1936 with incomes of less than $1,500 was 56.3 percent. It would seem to me the problem is a tremendous one, very much larger than stated even by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from New York encompassed a larger field than he intended, I think, because out of the 28,000,000 families in America there are about 5,000,000 who are farmers who own or rent or mortgage their land, so those 5,000,000 would come off first of all. That would leave only 23,000,000 families, and one-third of 23,000,000 would be approximately 7,000,000 instead of 9,000,000, so the figure I took was the outside figure as to what might be called the ultimate cost if we include almost everything.

Mr. WAGNER. I am glad these questions are being asked because it shows what a modest beginning we are making in the venture. I want to have the opponents of the bill understand that the problem is much more tremendous than we are undertaking to take care of in the bill now under consideration. I know that in other countries public opinion has compelled the doing of more than this.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I have missed a part of the Senator's argument.

Mr. WAGNER. I have been answering questions. I have not been presenting an argument.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the point or order.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator yield to enable me to make the point of order that no quorum is present?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, Mr. President, I prefer not to yield for that purpose. Through the questioning I think Senators have learned a great deal about the bill. I have not had any prepared speech, but I do want to get some other figures in the RECORD.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I thought the Senator was entitled to a rest of about 10 minutes and then he could proceed after a quorum had been obtained.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Massachusetts is very solicitous about the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Massachusetts knows I have not been well, but I am ready to proceed and answer the questions of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Has an estimate been made of the cost per family unit?

Mr. WAGNER. Per room unit.

Mr. BYRD. Per family unit?

Mr. WAGNER. $4,000 per family and $1,000 per room, on an average for the whole country.

Mr. BYRD. What assurance has the Senator that the same extravagance which existed under the Resettlement Administration at Tugwelltown, when that unit was built as a low-cost housing unit, will not continue? At Tugwelltown the unit cost was $16,000 per unit, while up in New Jersey $20,163 per unit was spent. What guaranty can the Senator give that the same extravagance will not appear in connection with the program under his bill?

Mr. WAGNER. No such mandates were given those bureaus of the Government as are provided in the bill now under consideration. I want to say to the Senator, and I have tried on two or three occasions to mention it, that none of those projects were built for the low-income group, because the wrong method was used.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will look at the record he will find that Mr. Tugwell said that Tugwelltown was being built for the low-income group, but as a matter of fact $16,183 per unit was the cost of building Tugwelltown.

Mr. WAGNER. I am looking ahead and not to the past. Under the capital-grant system used by the Public Works Administration, they did the best they could. I think some buildings were built on too costly a scale. The units contemplated under the bill now under consideration are to be built by local authorities.

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment limiting the cost to $4,000 per family unit or $1,000 per room unit?

Mr. WAGNER. I would not at all be willing to accept such a limitation. Is not that a rather difficult limitation to put in a bill of this kind?

Mr. BYRD. I am taking the Senator's statement and asking his opinion.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I assume will be the cost, and I am sure it may be lower in some instances.

Mr. BYRD. The average cost of all homes in the cities of America is $4,400.

Mr. WAGNER. No; it is $6,500, according to the statistics I have.

Mr. BYRD. The statistics I have show the average cost is $4,400.

Mr. WAGNER. Statistics tell many different stories.

Mr. BYRD. I think Congress should have some assurance that the same extravagance which occurred under the Resettlement Administration, which began to deal with low-cost housing projects, but spent at Tugwelltown $14,259,000, or $16,159 per unit. Four hundred and eighty-six thousand dollars was spent there for landscaping. Does the Senator propose to do anything of that kind?

Mr. WAGNER. No; of course not.

Mr. BYRD. Tugwell spent $5,000 per unit for landscaping.

Mr. WAGNER. This is a slum-clearance bill.

Mr. BYRD. I understand that.

Mr. WAGNER. It provides for the elimination of a slum wherever any construction takes place.

Mr. BYRD. But Tugwelltown was built for low-income people, and at that time is was so announced, and after Congress appropriated the funds on that basis, it was found that Tugwelltown was built at a unit cost of $16,000 and more.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a mandate in the pending bill that its terms shall apply to the low-income group. There is no question about it.

Mr. BYRD. We were told the Tugwell program was for the low-income group.

Mr. WAGNER. There was no legislative mandate there. They had the authority to do as they wished about the matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Virginia must get these figures into the RECORD, and I am quite willing that he shall go on.

Mr. BYRD. I do not have to take the Senator's time.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with the Senator that the project to which he refers was extravagantly built.

Mr. BYRD. These figures are from the General Accounting Office, and they are the official figures of the United States Government.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. BYRD. I am asking the Senator a sincere question as to what protection Congress has and the people have that the extravagance to which I have referred will not be duplicated under this measure.

Mr. WAGNER. The mandate of this legislation.

Mr. BYRD. What is the mandate of this legislation?

Mr. WAGNER. That mandate is that the housing is to be for the lowest-income group.

Mr. BYRD. I know; but that is what Dr. Tugwell said. That means nothing. A $10,000 dwelling may be built for those in the low-income group.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield; yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to make an observation, if I may. I think the Senator from New York would be very wise if he would espouse an amendment limiting the cost of these units to a fair price, because the Senator says he is just starting this thing; that this is more or less of an experiment. Assuming that the country wants it—and I know the Senator from New York wants it——it strikes me that unless the first venture is encompassed with all the business safeguards we can throw around it, the whole program by maladministration will get into bad repute, and the program then will be ended.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with the Senator on that point. I thought there were sufficient safeguards; but, after all, I do not think I have ever shown myself to be an adamant individual upon the floor of the Senate. If that is a desirable amendment, I shall not oppose it; but I should like to inquire a little more as to whether or not we are running a risk in imposing, over a period of 3 years, a limitation such as the Senator proposes of $1,000 per room.

Mr. BYRD. I simply took the Senator's own figure. If he wants to increase that figure, it is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator wants some limitation?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of what happened at Tugwelltown or anywhere else, is there not this difference: These houses will be built by the local authorities with money loaned by the Government. The Government itself is not going to build the houses. The bill provides for loans to the local authorities.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the cost of the houses will be under the jurisdiction of the local authorities, subject to the provisions of the bill—which are general, of course—that they are to be for the benefit of the low-income groups wherever they are undertaken. Under that provision, would there be any possibility of spending $16,000 or even $10,000 on a house or a group of houses in a slum-clearance area for the low-income groups?

Mr. WAGNER. No; because under the provisions of the bill the local authority must provide these homes only for the low-income groups; and the moment there is a violation of the agreement, the subsidy stops altogether.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What the Senator from Kentucky has said is correct, except that the point being made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is of absolute importance to this extent: The subsidy that we have to pay for all time depends upon the cost of the project; so it is important to keep down the cost of the project to the lowest point in order to keep down the subsidy.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and I want to keep down the cost. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator from New York speaks of a subsidy. It is all dependent upon the cost.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true; but the local authorities have to pay back the principal.

Mr. BYRD. I will take the Senator's own estimate of the cost—$4,000 per family unit, and $1,000 per room. I do not want to disturb the Senator by asking too many questions.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is not disturbing me. I should like to bring out all of these facts. I have been doing nothing but answering questions.

Mr. BYRD. There is another question which I desire to ask the Senator. I do not believe he is cognizant of section 6 of the bill, which makes this authority absolutely immune from the General Accounting System so far as preaudit is concerned.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator wants a provision inserted in the bill to change it in that respect, I do not care. Such a provision is not in any of the other acts, however. It is not in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. It is not in any other loaning-agency act. I simply followed the same rule that had been applied to all the other loaning agencies we have created. If there is something about this authority which needs even greater checking than the obligation and the duty—because, after all, these men are to be public officials—I am not going to quarrel about it; but why do it? Is there some reason why this particular authority may not discharge its duties conscientiously and properly that does not apply to other authorities?

Mr. BYRD. The reason is, as I understand the proposal, that in this instance the Government is to put up 75 percent of the cost. Is that true?

Mr. WAGNER. No; under this proposal it is impossible to tell, until after the construction is completed, just what the Government shall put up. It may amount to 75 percent.

Mr. BYRD. What I am getting at is this: The Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not loan out 100 percent on any given security.

Mr. WAGNER. The loan here is on 100-percent security.

Mr. BYRD. Does not the Government take care of 75 percent of the risk under this plan?

Mr. WAGNER. It may do so under certain circumstances; but I have been trying all day to explain that there are two separate transactions. One is the loan for the construction, the cost of the project. That is the loan made by the Federal Government to the municipality, which must be paid back 100 percent with interest at the same rate which the Government pays. The subsidy is measured subsequently, when the building is finished. Then it is determined what the cost of the project was, what the maintenance charges are, and what rent it would be necessary to charge if all of those charges had to be met. That amount may be as much as $5 per room or $6 per room. We know that the very low income group we are trying to provide for cannot afford to pay that much. Therefore, the rent is reduced to the point where the low-income group can meet the rental. The difference may be $1 a room; it may be 50 cents a room; it may be $2 a room. That is the subsidy which is paid, which is done by an entirely separate transaction.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has no objection to having the auditing done under the General Accounting Office, then, just as in the case of other funds of the Government?

Mr. WAGNER. I shall consider that.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. May I sit down for just a moment?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; of course. I merely wish to make an observation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. In order that the Senator from New York may have a 10-minute rest, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	King	Radcliffe

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me to make the observation I started to make a while ago in respect to the suggestion as to a preaudit?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I notice that in section 6 (a) the language which apparently relieves against the requirement of a preaudit is much broader in respect of expenditures than in relating to loans, but it seems to me to relate to all the expenditures of the funds of the authority. I desire to suggest to the Senator from New York that if that language is to be amended, perhaps consideration ought to be given to a distinction between a preaudit of a normal business operation of the authority and a preaudit of its expenditures made for current expenses. I think there might be some difficulty in a preaudit upon the making of a loan, and probably there is not a valid reason for a preaudit in the case of a loan. There is every reason for a preaudit of an expenditure where the money is paid out irrevocably, and never is to be recovered. It seems to me of some importance.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, to what expenditures is the Senator referring now—expenditures for current expenses, or for subsidies, or what?

Mr. STEIWER. The language is very broad. Let me read what it is I have in mind. Beginning with line 18, page 42, I find this recital:

> The Authority shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations and expenses shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and the manner in which accounts shall be audited. Vouchers approved by the Administrator for expenditures of the funds of the Authority shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government.

That is the language that is used conventionally to relieve agencies of the Government from the control of the office of the accounting department of the Government, and I assume it was inserted here for the purpose of effecting a complete relief against the control of the Accounting Office.

Mr. WAGNER. I remember that in the Committee on Banking and Currency the bill providing for the Farm Credit Administration contained an identical provision. There is no governmental agency which is required to submit all of its loans to the Accounting Office.

Mr. STEIWER. I believe that is accurate.

Mr. WAGNER. It would be a mistake to make a change here.

Mr. STEIWER. Loans of the character contemplated in this bill have been subject to preaudit. I recall when $100,000,000 was allocated for almost the express purpose for which this bill is drawn, allocated to the National Housing Corporation, and I think the Comptroller General's office refused to approve the vouchers, and the $100,000,000 was never paid. I am not so sure about the identity of that money. As I recall, it was P. W. A. money. But whatever may have been the source of the money, the purpose for which the allocation was made was substantially the same as if not identical with the purpose of the bill the Senator from New York is discussing. Certainly there ought to be a rational middle ground which could be taken with respect to this matter that should leave the Authority reasonably free in the handling of its loans but would place the general expenditure of money which ought to be subject to audit subject to preaudit by the Comptroller.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator for his suggestion, and I will take it under consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to emphasize what the Senator has said about some of these other agencies. Of course, it is manifestly impossible to have a preaudit by the General Accounting office of loans made by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, for instance, to individual home owners. The law did not require that, and could not, because the loans are so large in number that they would clutter up the General Accounting Office, and at the same time delay unreasonably the relief the law was intended to afford. The same thing is true of the Farm Credit Administration, and the other agencies which are lending money. The same is true of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Public Works Administration in making grants and loans, and of other agencies.

Of course, safeguards can be thrown around the profligate lending of money, but to require a preaudit in advance of every individual transaction where the Government is making these loans, either to individuals or to local authorities, it seems to me would tend to delay the relief which is provided for in the bill. There may be ground for the suggestion that there ought to be a little closer audit than may be provided here.

Mr. WAGNER. As to some of the expenditures. The Senator himself agrees it should not apply to loans.

Mr. President, I shall not take very much longer, but I think I have been very generous in yielding, because I took the floor at 12 o'clock, and it is now a quarter of 3, and I have done nothing but answer questions. That has aided, in that Senators have helped me very much in explaining the proposed legislation, and it has also shortened what I had desired to say. But I wish to call attention to another objective of the bill, which relates to the unemployment situation.

I need not discuss the causes of unemployment at this time. We all recognize that there are probably 8,000,000 unemployed in this country today. Many of them are unemployed because of technological reasons. Many of them are unemployed because the industries in which they have been engaged are still in a sluggish stage, or far below normal. I may also say that whenever there has been a depression there has always been some new activity started which has helped us absorb the unemployed.

The building industry, which will be aided by the pending legislation, is the one industry which is still in the depression stage, and I predict that under this program alone at least about a million men unemployed now throughout the country in this particular industry will be reemployed. Of course, I need not say to Senators that the moment that many are employed the purchasing power which they will receive will give an impetus to other industries so as to increase the employment in those industries.

I think the bill we passed yesterday, a measure shortening the hours of many of the lower-paid working people, will also assist in finally absorbing the unemployed. But more must be done, of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. On page 5 of the report will be found a table prepared by Warren J. Vinton, Chief of Research, Division of Suburban Resettlement, Resettlement Administration. I suppose the Senator has not any information as to how these figures were obtained by Mr. Vinton.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean the figures with respect to the income of individuals? I will say to the Senator that I do not know. I have made use of a number of statistics. I think the figures are generally agreed upon.

I wanted to call attention to the situation in the building industry. Here is the contrast between the indexes of industrial recovery and residential construction: The period from 1923 to 1925 is the period on which the figure 100 is based, because that was the time when we had what is generally regarded as normal employment.

In 1929 we had industrial production at the figure 119, and residential contracts at 87.

In 1930, industrial production stood at 96, and residential contracts at 50.

In 1932, industrial production stood at 64, and residential contracts at 13.

In 1933, industrial production stood at 76, and residential contracts at 11.

I know that figures are tiring, but these figures tell an extraordinary story. They tell the story that even though the other industries had gone up past normal in 1936, industrial production being at 105, which means that it was 5 points above normal, yet residential contracts were at 37.

For the first half of 1937, industrial production stood at 119, and residential contracts at 46.

Let us now look at the figures dealing with family accommodations. Table 4, on page 3 of the report, deals with families accommodated in new dwellings in cities of 25,000 and over in the 7-year periods 1923–29 and 1930–36, respectively. These are startling figures.

In 1923, 492,000 new family accommodations were provided. In 1925, 540,000 family accommodations were provided; in 1926, 507,000; in 1927, 435,000; in 1928, 411,000—coming down a little bit. In 1929 there were 261,000.

If I may digress, I will state that that was the time when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and I contended that the depression was on, and employment was decreasing, but we were then "a voice in the wilderness." I also desire to add the distinguished former Senator from Colorado, Mr. Costigan, as one who also made that contention. He, unfortunately, is not now in this body. He is greatly missed by those of us who call ourselves liberals.

Senators, look at the contrast. In 1930 there were 135,000 family accommodations provided. That was a drop from 1925 of 540,000 down to 135,000 family accommodations provided in 1930. In 1931 the number was 107,000. In 1932 it was 31,000. Cannot Senators now see the reason for the tremendous shortage in housing which is threatening us, and which is going to be a very great menace if we do not pass legislation of the character of the pending legislation?

In 1933 there were 28,000 family accommodations provided. In 1934 there were 23,000. In 1936 the figure went up a little, to 132,000. But all of those years of inactivity in providing family accommodations have caused us to be confronted now with a serious housing shortage.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask the Senator about another part of the bill than that which he is now discussing, but I do not wish to interrupt him if it is not convenient to have me do so.

Mr. WAGNER. I will answer the Senator's question if I can.

Mr. ADAMS. Section 20, on page 63 of the bill, is a provision authorizing the President to allocate available funds to the authority, for the purposes of this act.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator that we have discussed that section in the Senator's absence. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and I discussed that provision. I said that I did not want to interfere with any provision made in the Relief Act, and that this provision perhaps could be modified so that any provision made in the Relief Act would not interfere with the provisions of this measure.

Mr. ADAMS. I think subsection (b) ought to go out, because all of the money which is covered by subsection (b) has been definitely set aside.

Mr. WAGNER. Even that which comes in in the future?

Mr. ADAMS. All that which comes in in the future comes from securities, pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act. That is not new money.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand. The money is coming back as the securities are liquidated.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but the Relief Act allocated all of that money for public improvements.

Mr. WAGNER. If all of the money has been covered and none is left, I certainly am not going to interfere with that program, although in subsection (b) it is left to the discretion of the President.

I call attention to some other figures indicating the serious unemployment situation in the construction industry, the recovery of which is one of the objectives of the bill, because it is a provision to help that industry to recover and to absorb a large part of our unemployed.

We again take the employment figures of 1929 as 100.

In 1933, in all manufacturing industries, the employees stood at 68, and the pay rolls stood at 45. In the building industry employees stood at 31 and pay rolls at 20.

In 1934, in all manufacturing industries, employees stood at 78, and pay rolls stood at 57. In building construction, employees stood at 35, and pay rolls stood at 23.

Senators will see the tremendous contrast. In other words, building construction did not benefit by our general recovery.

In 1935, in all manufacturing industries, employees stood at 82, and pay rolls stood at 65. In building construction, employees stood at 39, and pay rolls stood at 32.

Even in 1936, in all manufacturing industries, employees stood at 85, and pay rolls stood at 72. The employees in the building construction stood at 45, and pay rolls stood at 40.

That, Mr. President, clearly shows that the building industry is still in the depression stage, and would be greatly aided by the enactment of this legislation. My estimate is that about a million unemployed men would be absorbed if this legislation were enacted. So Senators see what a shortage in housing is confronting us in this country. Something really ought to be done about it.

On page 7 of the report will be found some figures on the crime situation, and I should like to refer to them. The report refers to the fact that both disease and crimes are caused by slums. The report says that in the city of Cleveland the tuberculosis death rate is 5 times as high in the slum areas as in the rest of the city, while the danger of contracting the great white plague is 30 times as high, because of the insanitary conditions and the terrific congestion.

During the past 2 years, in the city of New York, 6 times as many people were burned to death in the old tenement houses as in the better localities, showing the expense of fire protection which could be saved if we cleared the slums.

An investigation made in Chicago showed that juvenile delinquencies are over 300 times as great in the slum area in the loop as upon the prosperous North Shore. The major crimes committed by children under 21 years of age were 20 times as high in the slum areas as in other sections.

I simply want to emphasize to Senators who have been examining the so-called low-rent housing projects which have already been constructed under the housing division of the Interior Department that those who have had them in charge have learned something by their experience. The houses were constructed, I think, at too great a cost, and under a subsidy system of grants, which, in my opinion, is the wrong way of reaching the low-income group.

Mr. President, the result has been that there are only a few projects—of which one in Georgia and one in Florida—in reference to which it can really be said that they have reached the low-income group. It might interest Senators to know that in the Northeastern States families with incomes of less than $1,000 are 39 percent of the total.

In the Southeastern States those earning a thousand dollars or less are 50 percent of the total. That shows what a problem we have on our hands. Of course, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] said the other day, those of us who are living comfortably and have fairly reasonable incomes, unless we see the circumstances under which these unfortunate persons dwell, do not appreciate their plight.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In defining the low-income group the bill apparently intends to set the rule at five times the rental of the dwellings to be furnished, plus the value of heat, light, water, and cooking fuel. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that five times those factors would ordinarily be much more than a thousand dollars?

Mr. WAGNER. I think that rule reaches the low-income group, because, in some cases, there may be a number of children involved, and this formula fixing five times has been generally adopted as representing the limit as affecting those who may be permitted to occupy houses built for the low-income group.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator give me an example by way of illustration as to what he would think the rental would be for an average family in one of these completed projects?

Mr. WAGNER. It would depend on the family; but suppose we take a family of four and four rooms—and a family of four really ought to have four rooms—if the rent is $4 a room then the total would be $16 a month.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will excuse me there, there has to be added heat, light, water, and fuel.

Mr. WAGNER. That is not a very large sum, I may say to the Senator. I have not the figures with me at the moment, but those factors do not represent a very large item.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It would seem to me, if the Senator will permit the observation, inasmuch as necessarily we cannot deal with the whole problem under the limited authority of the pending bill, and simply want to deal with those who are most greatly in need, that the rule of five times the rental, plus the various other items is too liberal and that a rule of four times would bring the benefits of the bill more surely to the thousand-dollar group.

Mr. WAGNER. The difficulty with making it too low is that it would not allow flexibility. We have got to rely upon the administrators to do what we say should be done, and the administrators must report to Congress each year so that we can follow the matter up. But take a charge of $4 a room. Some families cannot pay $4, and we have got to get down below $4 in some areas. In New York those in the slum area can pay $4 because their wage, low as it is, is a little larger than in some other areas. But take a family of four, father, mother, and two children, paying $16 for four rooms; that would mean they have an income of under $1,000 a year, on the formula of 5 to 1.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree to that

Mr. WAGNER. I am just a little afraid of making the formula too low. In some areas, for instance, in New York, those having $1,000 a year, with the cost of living, which, as Senators know is much greater in New York than in some other areas, are of the lowest income group.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that is so, and it would seem to me that a rule of five times the rent, heat, light, water, and cooking fuel often would cover an income of over twelve or fifteen hundred dollars.

Mr. WAGNER. I will have the figures a little later. It is not nearly so large as that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I remember a year ago, when the same general subject was up, the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and I discussed the matter on the floor at some length.

Mr. WAGNER. I remember that very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And I think the Senator from Massachusetts rather agreed with my point of view in connection with it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I did agree with the viewpoint of the Senator from Michigan in that respect, and I expect to offer an amendment along that line.

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator going to make it four times?

Mr. WALSH. I am going to make it three or four. I want the people who get this subsidy to be not the low income group but the lowest of the low income group; and we have got to make the provision very low to bring that about.

Take a tenement the rent of which is $25 a month, this bill would permit a man who gets $124 a month, if he had the political pull or influence with the authorities, to get into one of these houses and enjoy a subsidy as against the poor washerwoman with only $50 or $60 a month income.

I know the Senator from New York and I are absolutely in accord as to the fundamental principle, but there is a difference as to how far we ought to go. The Senator from New York is disposed to be a little more liberal to the authority than I am. That is the only difference between us.

Let me say that I am convinced that unless we tighten it so that only the lowest-income group—not the low-income group but the lowest-income group—can get these tenements and these subsidies, we will have a housing scandal on our hands in the future.

Furthermore, we have made some mistakes in Federal housing which we must avoid in this bill. We are providing for and giving subsidies to people who have gone into better houses built by the Federal Government than the average workingman enjoys. There is no question about that. We must avoid this in the future.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, that is so.

Mr. WALSH. We must see to it that the law is restricted so as to prevent such a thing happening under the bill. Perhaps I am too extreme, but the difference between us is only one of degree.

Mr. WAGNER. I think three times would simply be impossible in the large cities, when the construction cost is taken into consideration. In New York City—I am merely speaking of my own city, but the same thing must be true of others—a man earning $700 a year under the rule which would be applied by the Senator from Massachusetts would hardly be able to get into a house provided for under the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Under the rule I suggest nobody, unless his income was under $700, would get into the house.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I want, but do not make it so strict that no one but the man having only $200 or $300 a year could get a house.

Mr. WALSH. Let us take a rental of, say, $25 a month. It must be a pretty small tenement in New York City that can be rented for that sum.

Mr. WAGNER. In the slum area, I think, the rent is a little less.

Mr. WALSH. Including water and heat?

Mr. WAGNER. It is a little less, I think, in the slum area.

Mr. WALSH. The ratio of 5 to 1 means that a person with $124 a month, which is $1,400 a year, if he had influence enough, could get a tenement as against the washerwoman who is only getting $50 a month.

Mr. WAGNER. We do not want to disagree as to this measure; but we want to be sure not to undo what we are trying to do. The Senator is assuming that the rent to be charged per room will be $5 or $6. The low-income group cannot afford to pay that sum. In New York, for instance, we would have to charge $3 or $4 a room.

Mr. WALSH. As I understood the question of the Senator from Michigan, he wanted to know who would occupy these tenements and get the benefit of the subsidy. He referred to a provision of the bill which determines the group that would get these subsidies and occupy these tenements, and he pointed out the fact that the spread would include all those persons who could show an income within five times what the rent would be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Plus the other factors.

Mr. WALSH. Including the other factors. I illustrate that by showing that a $25 tenement can go to the man or woman who gets $124 a month, when we all know that in the city of New York and everywhere else there are men and women, with a houseful of children, working in sweatshops and doing scrubbing work, who earn only $50 or $60 or $75 or $90 a month. I want them to be preferred to those earning $124 a month.

Mr. WAGNER. If any housing authority in the city of New York should charge $25 for three rooms, it would be violating every provision of this bill, for it would indicate that the renter was within the $1,500 or the $2,000 group, and I am not concerned about him.

Mr. WALSH. I am not speaking of rooms but of tenements. Will any of these houses that will be built have less than three rooms?

Mr. WAGNER. I should not think so.

Mr. WALSH. Very well; what does the Senator figure may be the basic price per room?

Mr. WAGNER. I should say that for rent it would be $3 per room. I think that is what they are charging now for the houses built in the first real slum-clearance project. Three times that amount for three rooms would be $9.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator speaking of the rent per week?

Mr. WAGNER. No; I am speaking of the rent per month per room.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator mean to tell us that anywhere in New York City he can rent three rooms for $9 a month?

Mr. WAGNER. Not now, but under this legislation I hope we will come down to that basis.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator were a poor man and wanted to hire a tenement and wanted three rooms, what would he have to pay in the slum area?

Mr. WAGNER. In the slum area, more than $9. That is the reason why families are doubling up there. In some places there are three families living in three rooms.

Mr. WALSH. I do not live in the city of New York. I live in the country in a small mill town. I do not know of any tenement anywhere, half slum or partly slum or all slum, where anyone can get a tenement for less than $12 to $15 a month.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, if the Senator is sure he is right, I cannot dispute him; but I know that in the slum area in New York City, in some of the very bad areas down on the lower East Side and the lower West Side, families are doubling up, and no family pays more than $9. Two families may pay $18.

Mr. WALSH. If it is possible for people in New York to get a decent tenement for $9 a month, then there is no need for this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. But it is not fit for human habitation.

Mr. WALSH. These places are going to be fit for human habitation?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course they are.

Mr. WALSH. What are they going to cost?

Mr. WAGNER. I have been inclined to estimate the cost at $1,000 per room, and we need a subsidy to make up the difference if we are going to reach the low-income group.

Mr. WALSH. I agree that we need a subsidy. The only difference between the Senator from New York and myself is one of degree. The Senator desires to give more latitude and elasticity than I in the powers of the board. But there has been a movement behind the bill on the part of legitimate builders to go into housing on a large scale, which has merit. I am desirous of restricting and limiting the bill down to the very narrowest limit, so that the first tenant to get into one of these subsidized tenements, to get a subsidy for life, will be the poor washerwoman of New York City with her children.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator say the builders are interested in this program? If they are, I do not know it.

Mr. WALSH. Deservedly and properly so.

Mr. WAGNER. That statement must be based on knowledge which came to the Senator. No builder came to me about the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator know the labor organizations in the building trades are interested in it?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but I do not class them as builders.

Mr. WALSH. I am not criticizing them. I want housing, but I want not families with low income but families with the lowest income to get the benefit of the subsidy.

Mr. WAGNER. So do we all.

Mr. WALSH. I shall not vote for the bill unless it is clear and unmistakable that the subsidy will be removed from any possibility of favoritism in its granting of subsidies. I insist its benefits reach the lowest-income group and that those of the lowest income get the tenements provided for in this measure.

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator doubtful that I am after the same objective?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is inclined to object to my proposed restrictive language and says it is too restrictive.

Mr. WAGNER. That is another question, whether it is not a little too strict in some communities.

Mr. WALSH. What is the harm in trying it? In another year, if we find it harmful, we can change it if necessary.

Mr. WAGNER. We can agree on some amendment of that kind. Of course, the labor organizations have been interested for another cause. Another objective of the bill is to secure employment in an industry which has been and still is in a very depressed state.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the Senator will keep in mind that our colloquy is not merely for the purpose of informing ourselves as to the views of each other, but to place in the RECORD our opinions in order that the RECORD will reveal that he and I again and again on the floor of the Senate pleaded that the poorest and lowliest people in the country should get the subsidies carried by the bill. It is not so much that the Senator differs with me or that I differ with him, but that we want the RECORD to show that it is the purpose and the intent of the Congress of the United States that the subsidies shall go to the most needy of our poor families.

Mr. WAGNER. I am willing to have a mandatory provision that it shall be the duty of the board, the obligation of the board, in each case where a loan is made, that as a condition precedent to the making of the loan the lowest-income group among the slum dwellers shall be first served before any other group. I think the objective is clearly stated, but we can make it clearer if that is desired.

Mr. WALSH. I do not want to be too finicky. The Senator knows I want to restrict the powers of the board only within reasonable limits. To insure what we desire I would go so far as to incorporate a provision that the local housing authority every year shall be compelled to file with Congress a list of the tenants, of their incomes, and of the rents they are paying.

The Senator knows and I know how easy it is to let political favor enter into these matters. We have a housing problem in the city of Boston. I have not the slightest doubt there will be hundreds of families striving to get into the few tenements to be constructed under previous programs, and I fear that there, as elsewhere, the tenements may be parcelled out through political favor.

Mr. WAGNER. I really have not that apprehension. I think through social service of this kind we can get those in charge of the project and on the authority who will not permit politics to enter. When I was in Europe I inquired in England and Sweden as to whether there was any politics entering into the plan or not, and was told that no politics entered into it at all.

Mr. WALSH. Is there not now politics entering into it? Let us be frank about it. Who will be the administrators of the housing projects already constructed?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know anything about the Senator's State. I assume he will take care of it.

Mr. WALSH. I wish I could, but I am forced to recognize the practical side of these questions. Is there any doubt that these appointments will be made of competent men, but through political influence?

Mr. WAGNER. I think that anybody who would permit politics to enter where these unfortunate, underprivileged, low-income groups are concerned is a pretty mean sort of individual. I really think that such individuals do not exist. In New York we have Langdon Post in charge. I have never discovered the slightest politics involved in the housing projects that have been conducted there. He had great difficulty when it came to the first houses in the first slum-clearance project. He put in the very lowest-income group. I heard no complaint that in the selection of those tenants any politics had entered at all.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if the Senator feels that is true, then he really ought not to have any objection to such a limitation in the bill as I have suggested. If the appointees are all going to be of such a high-minded character and the condition is going to be so idealistic as the Senator has in mind, then there is no need of any limitation.

Mr. WAGNER. I was expressing confidence in the individual.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator said that before, but he must remember, to use an extreme illustration, the scrub woman and the washer woman and the poor man invalid going to work here and there for a few days in order to live have not the vocal and group power through which they can make their protest even if favoritism is involved.

Mr. WAGNER. Long before any other Senator raised his voice, I raised mine in behalf of these people, when mine was almost a voice in the wilderness, so no one can question my interest. It has been the epitome of a life's work.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator agree with me that everybody in political life in New York City feels the same way about it?

Mr. WAGNER. No; I will not; but it is a pretty mean individual who in a case of this kind would permit politics to interfere. If there is not sufficient protection against such a thing, I am perfectly willing to provide any mandate in the bill that would protect against the injection of politics in the selection of occupants. The Senator and I will not disagree about that point.

I have provided in the bill for the housing authority to make a report to Congress each year. I take it that that report will have to include the condition of a local project, the rents charged, the costs, and all the other things involved otherwise the report would be meaningless. Does not the Senator think that would cover the subject?

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator, but let me submit one further observation.

I think we are both—I hope we are both—arguing this matter with the thought that we want to better the housing lot of these people; but I say frankly to the Senator that if I were the representative from the south Boston district, where that housing has gone up, and if hundreds of my constituents of low income, any or all of whom qualified, came to me and said, "You must help me get one of those tenements", he would not expect me to ask him to go out looking for the washerwoman who was more entitled to it than he. I would expect the administrator to do it; but the pressure and influence would come for the most active and insistent applicants. Is not that the way it would be done?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not think I would do it. I am only an average person, but I do not think I would ever do it.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator might have to agree to it under political pressure.

Mr. WAGNER. No; political office does not mean as much as that to me.

Mr. WALSH. In any event, when they arrive at the office of the superintendent of the bureau that rents the houses, and they are shown the law stating that this is not discretionary, here is the limitation, the political pressure to which I have referred might be curbed.

Mr. WAGNER. Well, just put in there "the lowest-income group", and any other formula that may be desired, so that we may protect ourselves.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I observe that the Senator put in some figures in his reference a moment ago to the low-income groups of the country; but I desire to add that, according to the latest figures I have been able to obtain as to the general population, 10.4 percent of all the persons in the United States make less than $500 a year each, which in the aggregate represents 7.1 percent of the total national income. If the computation were restricted to the farmers, if we referred to nothing but the farmer groups, we should find that 30 percent of the farmers in the United States have annual incomes of less than $500 each, which in the aggregate represents 8.6 percent of the total income of all farmers.

Will the Senator yield to allow me to put in the RECORD the latest figures on income groups generally in the United States?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly, because I think all this information is very helpful. It furnishes additional evidence of the tremendous problem which confronts us; and this is only a very humble beginning.

Mr. PEPPER. I say this with tremendous sympathy for the Senator's objective, because, as the Senator knows, I am very strongly in favor of the pending bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I know the Senator's sympathy; but it also shows the insignificance of this proposed legislation. It is merely a start; but I hope public opinion will so approve it, if Congress sees fit to enact it into law, that we shall soon speed on to help the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the tables submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] will be printed in the RECORD.

The tables are as follows:

Six hundred and fifty thousand farms covering 100,000,000 acres operated by over 500,000 farmers, where the farms are too poor to make possible the earning of a decent living.

Forty-two percent of the total farm population is tenants; over 10 percent rent land in addition to that that they own; 47 percent of the farmers own their own land.

From 1930 to 1935 there was over 200,000 increase in the number of tenant farmers in the United States.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BONE. On page 36 of the bill it is stated:

The term "public housing agency" means any State, county, municipality, or other governmental entity or public body * * * authorized to engage in the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum clearance.

Is there anything other than that in the bill which attempts to define the powers of any such body, or is it left merely to the people of any locality to set up any agency they select?

Mr. WAGNER. Unlike some other measure, it is up to the State. This bill is a bill decentralizing this whole activity, and it is up to each State or municipality or other political subdivision which has the power to deal with the subject of low-income groups and slum clearance to create its authority for that purpose.

Mr. BONE. Then, in part, this measure is predicated on the assumption that cities and communities and municipalities will set up some sort of agency to bring themselves within it?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; because the local authority, under this bill, initiates the whole project.

Mr. BONE. Then this is merely, in a sense, a provision to subsidize those in that class of work, to aid them with grants and loans in that sort of work?

Mr. WAGNER. Grants and loans; yes.

Mr. BONE. There is one other thing that has bothered me, and I think it has bothered some other Members of this body, and that is this particular thing: I do not know that it could be met by legislation of this sort without making the bill so complicated that it might be cumbersome. Possibly this point has been raised before, and I have not heard it discussed:

Assume that a city like New York, for instance, should desire to engage in this sort of work, and should build some decent habitations and dwellings for persons of low incomes, unless they tore down the old slum dwellings, a new subnormal group, or whatever the category might be into which they would fall, might come in and occupy the old slum dwellings, and we should have the same problem over again in a new form.

Mr. WAGNER. That is provided for, Mr. President.

Mr. BONE. Where is it covered in the bill? I have been going through the bill, and I did not see it.

Mr. WAGNER. It is on page 56:

> In the case of a low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, that provision is or has been made—

These are standards set—

> (either as a part of the project or otherwise as a condition to its initiation) for the elimination, by demolition, condemnation, effective closing, reconstruction, remodeling, or repair of unsafe or insanitary dwelling units in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, substantially equivalent in number to the new dwelling units constructed.

In other words, a project consists of two things, namely, to clear the slums, and to build units to house those who have lived in the slum dwellings.

Mr. BONE. In other words, as a condition to the grant or loan, the slum buildings in that section must be demolished?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. Of course, as I well realize, we could not attempt to demolish all the slums in a city in order to get rid of them.

Mr. WAGNER. No; this refers merely to the slums in the project that is involved.

Mr. BONE. In other words, in the particular area we are endeavoring to help, adequate provision would have to be made to eliminate the old slums there before the new buildings would go up.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; and it would be necessary to provide for the slum dwellers.

Mr. BONE. I think that covers the matter I had in mind.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. POPE. On page 35 of the bill, in subsection (3), is a definition of slums. The Senator this morning was kind enough to refer to my own home town of Boise. I then made the statement that we do not have slums in Boise. Of course, we do not have slums in the sense that they exist in the large cities. That led me to examine this definition.

The provision in the definition is—

> The term "slum" means any area where dwellings predominate which, by reason of dilapidation, overcrowding, faulty arrangement or design, lack of ventilation, light, or sanitation facilities, or any combination of these factors, are detrimental to safety, health, or morals.

I am wondering how that definition would apply to a situation like this, which occurs in my own town:

We have buildings which are not necessarily unsanitary or dilapidated or dangerous to the health or safety of the individual, but we do have our low-income groups. They may not be very well because of hunger, or because of lack of income sufficient to furnish them all the things that are necessary; but it is not so much a matter of health or bad air or lack of sanitation as it is simply the fact that they are members of the low-income groups. I wonder what the Senator would say about that type of person, located in many cities or even in the country, but whose dwellings are different from the ordinary slum dwellings in large cities.

Mr. WAGNER. There are slums in rural areas, too, Mr. President. The Senator from Idaho has not described one. In a case like that, my opinion is that the bill would not apply, because the persons to whom he refers are not living in unsanitary and unhealthful and indecent conditions. They are living in reasonably safe quarters.

Mr. POPE. There is one place in my own town which is called a cardboard town. The small buildings are constructed out of cardboard, tin cans, or slabs which may be picked up, or anything else which will make some sort of habitation, and yet they are not really unsanitary. They are not dangerous to health and safety, but they are simply poor dwellings where people live.

Mr. WAGNER. This bill would not apply there, Mr. President, because we are not rehousing everybody who has a low income, but only persons of low income who live in unsanitary and unsafe and unhealthful conditions which are detrimental to morals, to health, and also to safety.

Mr. POPE. Then, in the Senator's judgment, the emphasis should be placed on safety, health, and morals in any situation?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, absolutely! The definite objective is to safeguard people of that character.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I agree to the sentiment just expressed by the Senator from New York. May I be pardoned for making a statement? It seems to me, I may say to my friend from Idaho, that the Federal Government may not, under this broad plan and with the objective which it has, undertake to furnish homes for all the workers of the United States of low income. That would be impossible.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course not. It is the lowest-income group that we are trying to reach, and at the same time to clear the slums, because they are a constant menace.

Mr. KING. And the bill does not contemplate taking a house that I may have, and, because it is a poor house, taking the title away from me and transferring it to this organization, and having the organization build a house for me.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; of course not—not any such thing.

Mr. KING. Just one other question: I desire to ask the Senator with respect to page 36, line 25:

> The term "public housing agency" means any State, county, municipality, or other governmental agency or public body (excluding the Authority), which is authorized to engage in the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum clearance.

I challenge attention to the words "or public body." Would that be an organization which has been promoted under the laws of a State, a political subdivision, or a municipal organization?

Mr. WAGNER. A public body is a body created under the law of a State.

Mr. KING. This definition would not, then, permit any private corporation to organize and then try to come in under the terms of the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; absolutely not—nothing but a public authority.

Mr. KING. And the States or the counties or the municipalities must initiate all of the organizations that will be comprised within this provision?

Mr. WAGNER. Absolutely. They not only initiate them but they complete them. They do all the work in connection with the matter. The work is absolutely decentralized from that standpoint.

Mr. KING. And if a State should refuse to accept the benefits or evils—whatever view one may have—of this bill, or if the counties within the State or any political subdivision of the State should refuse to come under the terms of the bill, then the bill would be inoperative in that State?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes; because they must initiate it. They must make the application.

Mr. KING. Exactly. That was my understanding. I want it to be definitely understood that private corporations, or, for that matter, public-spirited citizens, philanthropists, may not invoke the provisions of the bill and go forward, seeking to get these bounties and subsidies.

Mr. WAGNER. Or shipbuilders, either.

Mr. KING. Or shipbuilders, or anyone else.

Mr. WAGNER. Although they do get them. I am not complaining about that.

Mr. KING. I complained about that, and voted against that.

Mr. WAGNER. But this is limited to public bodies.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I take it, from the colloquy between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Utah, that the prime purpose of the bill is to demolish slums.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and provide decent living quarters to the lowest-income group, who cannot afford to pay rent sufficient to provide decent living quarters. The Government would aid them to that extent.

Mr. BONE. In other words, demolish the slums and provide decent homes for those who previously lived in the slums?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BONE. The Senator from Utah asked about what agency might come under the bill, and he referred to page 36. On page 37 there are two definitions, the definition of the term "consumers housing society" and "limited-profit housing agency."

Mr. WAGNER. I said those would be eliminated. Those provisions were inserted at the request of certain Senators.

Mr. BONE. They probably would have to be set up in corporate form in order to borrow.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BONE. Are they to go out of the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. I intend to eliminate those provisions from the bill. As I have said, they were inserted at the request of certain Senators, principally from the West—and I do not intend to name them—who were interested in these cooperatives. But I think they ought to be separately treated.

Mr. KING. With that understanding, I did not make any inquiry concerning them.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator heard me say they would be eliminated.

Mr. KING. I intended to move to strike out those provisions, but with the understanding that they would be eliminated, I did not offer the motion.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Massachusetts says I am a little mild; so I was mild in acceding to the request of some of my fellow Senators in this regard. Now, I will be intolerant, and just eliminate the provisions.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Referring to the colloquy in which the Senator engaged with the senior Senator from Massachusetts, it will be true, will it not, whether or not the evils the Senator from Massachusetts foresaw are kept away from, that, whether or not the objectives of the bill are properly carried out will depend to a considerable extent upon the personnel of the authority set up?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; as in the case of any other project.

Mr. BURKE. The question I should like to ask is, Why should any members of the authority be subject to removal from office except for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office?

Mr. WAGNER. That is the provision generally employed in the statute.

Mr. BURKE. I think the Senator misunderstood. I say, Why should any member of this authority be subject to removal from office for any other reason than neglect of duty or malfeasance in office? Is it the Senator's understanding that all members of the authority are subject to removal only for cause?

Mr. WAGNER. What is the Senator leading me into? Is he going to discuss Presidential appointments and Presidential removals, or has he some suggestion to make?

Mr. BURKE. I wish to know what the Senator has in mind. I find in the bill that the authority is to consist of five members, an administrator and four directors, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. By the way, if I may say so, I propose to offer an amendment reducing the number of directors to three.

Mr. BURKE. At any rate, as the bill now reads, four directors are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and in the case of the four directors, but not in the case of the administrator, we find that they are to be "removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office." What I want to know is why should not the administrator as well as the four directors be removable only for cause?

Mr. WAGNER. Are not all five directors removable for cause?

Mr. BURKE. Not as I read the provision on page 38 of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Upon reading the provision, I am inclined to think the Senator is right about that. They certainly ought to be treated equally.

Mr. BURKE. That is what I thought. The provision very clearly limits the removal for cause to the four directors, and does not apply to the administrator, and it seems to me the Senator is correct in saying they ought to be treated equally.

Mr. WAGNER. I think so.

Mr. BURKE. At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to correct that defect.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator does not, I will.

Mr. President, the Senate has been spared a test of patience, because what I intended to say has been brought out by the different questions propounded. I have been on the floor now for 4 hours answering questions, which have been very enlightening.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. For another question? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. I think this is a good way to bring out what is in the bill. I think it is better than a cold presentation. I find no fault.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has been very kind.

Mr. WAGNER. Am I not always kind?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is always kind. This is certainly one of the most important measures that has come before the Congress.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have observed a desire upon the part of the draftsman to comply with principles which we all regard as very important in obtaining a high degree of efficiency of administration. However, I observe that while it is true that under section 4 (a), found on page 39, the administrator is authorized, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, to appoint and fix the compensation of employees, there is included an exemption.

Mr. WAGNER. What section?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Section 4 (a), found on page 39. The section provides for the appointment of employees of the housing authority subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923. There is, however, an exemption, to be found in lines 23, 24, and 25, "except that without regard to such laws", that is, without regard to the civil-service laws and without regard to the Classification Act, which is the act which fixes the salaries of employees, the authority "may appoint and fix the compensation of officers, attorneys, and experts."

What is the definition of an officer? What is the definition of an expert? Why should officers and experts be exempted from the Classification Act which fixes the salaries to be paid Government employees?

Before the Senator answers, may I say that this exemption of officers and experts from the effect of the Classification Act in previous laws has resulted in giving the administrative officials the power to appoint persons as experts at salaries far in excess of those authorized by the Classification Act, and doing exactly the same kind of work.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want that to be possible, of course.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I did not think the Senator wanted it to be possible.

Mr. WAGNER. This is the usual provision in all similar acts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; I will say that this provision in the Senator's bill is far more satisfactory than similar provisions which have been included in other bills and I give the Senator a great deal of credit for that.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator thinks they all ought to come under the Classification Act?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What is an officer?

Mr. WAGNER. I think the courts have pretty definitely settled that. I remember even some opinions on that subject I had to write in our appellate division; I do not recall exactly what I said, and I would have to look up the decisions which were written by the judges, but I remember I had one to write. It is a very definite classification, however. The courts have definitely determined what an officer is, as distinguished from an employee. However, I am not going to quarrel for a moment over it, because I believe in the civil-service system. So that if attorneys should be under the civil service, or at least under the Classification Act——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I agree that attorneys should be outside of it.

Mr. WAGNER. I mean that their salaries should be classified.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Classification Act ought to apply to all these employees.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But it certainly is perfectly obvious that if we provide that experts may be appointed without regard to the civil-service laws, or without regard to the Classification Act, it then becomes possible for the administrative officials to classify anyone they desire to appoint as an expert, and give him any salary.

Mr. WAGNER. Is it not required, even then, that he receive the approval of the Civil Service Commission, before he can be appointed as an expert?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not under this language.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator does not think so?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would think not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to make one observation. My information is that under the commissions and boards which we have recently established, such as the Maritime Commission and other commissions, where attorneys or even experts are exempted from the civil service, they have been appointed and their salaries have been fixed according to the Classification Act, although they are not appointed as a part of the civil-service arrangement. I know that is true with respect to the Maritime Commission, because that Commission was required to limit its salaries to the maximum provided in the Classification Act, although attorneys, especially, were appointed from outside.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator from New York will agree to an amendment which would strike out the exemption from the Classification Act.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course. This provision is less liberal than those contained in many of the laws which have been enacted during my time, but if there is any question about civil-service tests or the fixing of salaries, I certainly do not want to do violence to anything like that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There ought to be a clear definition as to what an expert is.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say that the Senator from Wyoming is an expert.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I doubt whether I can be classified as such. However, on the advice of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], I admit it.

Mr. WAGNER. May I designate the Senator from Wyoming as the one to draft an amendment on that subject?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to suggest language to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator very much. These suggestions are all very helpful.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that in the Social Security Act, which contains about the same language, the Civil Service Commission itself is required to pass upon the qualifications of all the experts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is quite true; but as the result of what went on under the Social Security Act it became necessary for the Congress, in a recent appropriation act, to require the confirmation by the Senate of a large number of these so-called experts; and during the past week the Committee on Appropriations has been resurveying the action of the Civil Service Commission and the Social Security Board in determining what constitutes an expert.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean that he is going to try to overrule the Social Security Board when they have said what an expert is?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; but I am replying to the Senator from Idaho that while it may be true that there is such a provision in the Social Security Act, it has not operated to the satisfaction of the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me ask the Senator a question. In view of the law which requires the President to send in to the Senate the nominations of all those earning $5,000 or more per year, does that not give to the President the right to appoint anybody irrespective of any civil-service provision, or of the Classification Act?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all. I should not say that it does. My understanding of that provision is that it merely provides that if a person within a certain classification is to receive more than a certain salary, he shall also be confirmed by the Senate. That does not do away with the other requirement.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not see how the Commission can send in a name to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It cannot.

Mr. WAGNER. So that would really be doing away with the Civil Service Commission in these particular cases.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is another matter.

Mr. WAGNER. That is not involved here.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the situation, the Civil Service Commission may certify a number of names to any of these Federal organizations, and they may be appointed, but if their salaries are more than $5,000 a year their names must come to the Senate, and we would pass upon the nominations, notwithstanding the fact that the nominees had certificates from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to go into that subject, because I am not sufficiently informed concerning it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is altogether irrelevant to this discussion, of course.

Mr. WAGNER. Does that not mean a Presidential appointment, then? No board has the right to submit names to the Senate for confirmation. However, we are now getting far away from the subject under consideration.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I am interested in having passed the bill which the Senator has advocated. As I made known to the Senator sometime ago, when I was a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, and the matter was before that committee, I was not interested in seeing it pass; in fact, I was against it. I think the reason why the measure failed of passage in the House a year ago was because of the objection that it did not apply to the rural areas. I understand that that particular phase of the question was discussed at considerable length today when I was not here. However, what main differences are there with respect to rural areas between the Wagner bill as presented by the Senator from New York at this session and the Wagner bill as presented a year ago?

Mr. WAGNER. The rural areas are absolutely included, and if there exist any slum conditions, whether they are in rural or urban areas it makes no difference, and the authority within the State has the right to act, because, after all, it must initiate all these projects. There is no distinction between the two.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Are there agencies that may be set up in towns of 2,000 to 5,000 persons that may take care of the situation in these small communities?

Mr. WAGNER. The protection of the safety of its citizens being a State function, a State housing authority may be set up, as it is in my State, which may deal with conditions of ill-housing or slums anywhere in the State, whether they are in rural areas or in the cities. It makes no difference where they are.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Perhaps my viewpoint is a little different than it was previously, because I then represented a rural area, and now I have responsibility for the city of Detroit and other large cities in the State. It seemed to me, however, that particularly with regard to the things that were said by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], this bill can be justified as a city measure. We should do as much as we can for the rural areas; but many, many things have been done for the farm areas, such as resettlement, rural electrification, the farm-tenancy bill, and the soil-conservation bill.

I think the Senator from New York is perfectly justified in making this a city proposition. Let us do as much as we can for the rural areas; but in this bill let us remember that the cities are entitled to it as a city measure. I know that the city Congressmen, and particularly both the Senators from New York, have supported the various farm measures.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course I voted for every one of the measures the Senator has mentioned. I do say, however, that so far as this bill is concerned, if there is a slum area within a rural district—there are some in my State where houses that were built years ago upon farms and occupied by workers ought to be removed, because they are a menace to their health—under this bill a State authority has the same right to deal with that problem as with any problem within a city.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Of course, the great problem is within the large municipalities.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true, of course.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I heard with a good deal of interest the discussion earlier in the day relating to rural communities. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] today addressed himself to the subject of rural communities. Is it not true, as a matter of fact, that if a Senator representing such communities supports this bill, he does so because of his broad interest in all the people of the country—people who need the housing provided under this measure—although it may not benefit his constituents in any way at all? He supports the bill, does he not, because those who need the help provided under it are all citizens of our country together, and whether we live in the city or live in the country it is our problem as much as it is the problem of those who live in the city and represent a large city.

So far as I am concerned, I am approaching the subject from that standpoint. While probably no help of the kind the Senator speaks of would be required in Delaware, certainly not in the lower part of my State, yet it is as much my problem as it is the Senator's problem to house these underprivileged people.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator from Delaware very much. I feel that as a Member of this body during the 11 years I have been in it I should have utterly failed if I had not at least persuaded the Senate of my sincerity and my desire to help people, no matter where they are located in the United States. My objective has always been not provincial, but to give service wherever I can. I thank the Senator from Delaware for his very kind statement.

Mr. President, I think I may take about 5 minutes more, because, as I have said, I have been answering questions since 12 o'clock today. I do not complain about that.

I have touched on the social phases of this question and also on the economic phases so far as unemployment is concerned. There were several witnesses before the committee—some this year but more particularly last year—whom I wish the Senate could have heard on the pure economic question involved—namely, that the clearing of the slums and the housing of unfortunate people now living there in decent, sanitary quarters would be a great economic saving to the country.

I remember that the president of a trust company in the city of Louisville, the trust company having property all over the south, said he was very much interested in the question of taxes; that he did not care to pay upon the property of the trust company any more taxes than it was absolutely necessary to pay; and that, accordingly, he was in favor of a reduction of governmental expenses.

He came before the committee and spoke in favor of this proposed legislation. He said to the committee, in effect, "Mr. Chairman, I do not come here as a philanthropist; I come here purely as a businessman, because the trust company in which I am interested and which owns property throughout the Southern States has made a survey of the cost to the Government of maintaining slum areas, the cost of fire protection, health protection, the building of prisons and hospitals." And he made this very significant remark, "We have discovered that if we could remove these slums, have the people residing there live in decent quarters, and give them a chance, we would save a tremendous amount of money in the city of Louisville." So that, from the purely selfish economic standpoint, this bill should be enacted.

Mr. President, if there are now no more questions to be asked, I shall not, at present, speak further upon the bill, but I hope that overnight Senators who are still in doubt may study the measure, and I shall be prepared again to be the witness upon the stand tomorrow.

APPOINTMENTS OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the Senate resolution submitted today by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

It is as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that an appointment to the Supreme Court should be made only at such a time as the Senate may act upon confirmation prior to the entry of the nominee upon his service.

Mr. President, it is not within the province of the Senate of the United States to tell the President when or how he shall make an appointment. It is within the province of the Senate to reject or confirm an appointment when it is made. I, as a Senator, am as much opposed to the invasion of the Executive function by the Congress as I am to the invasion of the legislative or judicial function by the Executive.

What can such a resolution do except excite comment and get headlines? We have no power to force the President to make an appointment and we ought not to have such a power. The Senator from Michigan in offering a resolution of this kind ought to know that it cannot be adopted; he ought to know that it cannot increase the feeling of cordiality which ought to exist between the three branches of Government. It all kindness and good will, I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that I cannot see that he is rendering his country any real public service in bringing forward a matter of this kind under these circumstances.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Would the Senator be in favor of the appointment being made to the Supreme Court to fill a vacancy occurring while the Congress was in session after a recess or adjournment of Congress had been had? Would the Senator be in favor of such appointee taking a place on the Court and deciding cases before the matter of the confirmation of his nomination had been submitted to the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not a question of what the Senator from Texas would like or what he might desire.

Mr. BURKE. I should like the opinion of the Senator; that is all.

Mr. CONNALLY. My own opinion is that it would be more desirable, of course, that the nomination of every officer should be confirmed before he enters upon his duties; but we are not dealing now with that question here. The Senator from Michigan, through this resolution, if it should be adopted—which it will not [laughter]—is undertaking to suggest to the President how he shall perform his duty. That is not our business. If the President does not submit a nomination until the recess, and he makes the nomination then, it is the duty of the Senate, when the question of confirmation comes before it, to do with that nomination whatever our consciences and the Constitution dictate.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to say, for myself only, that if that occasion should arise and the present session of the Congress should adjourn, and between the time of adjournment and the October term of the Court a Justice should be nominated to the Supreme Court, and the nominee should sit on the Court, he would never have my vote on confirmation when his nomination should come before the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. In reply, I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from Texas would vote on the confirmation of such a nomination when it should come before the Senate just as he would vote had the nomination been confirmed before the appointee entered upon the discharge of his duties on the bench. The fact that he would already be on the Court and would have served for a considerable period would not in any wise cause the Senator from Texas to vote for confirmation, if the Senator from Texas should feel that the nominee should not be confirmed. That is a hazard that the appointee takes, because when he accepts the appointment he takes it under the Constitution subject to being wiped off the Court if the Senate does not confirm his nomination.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator know, from the precedents, whether in the past Presidents have ever appointed Supreme Court Justices while the Senate was not in session?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know what the precedents are with reference to appointments to the Supreme Court, but we all know that Presidents have taken advantage of recesses of the Congress to appoint certain officers, and in a number of cases they have done so even after the question of confirmation has been submitted to the Congress. I am speaking only from memory. But when confirmation was submitted to the Senate and the Senate did not act, and then the Congress recessed, there have been cases where the President then appointed a man who had failed of confirmation, not directly, but because of inaction of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. What has been the general practice in the appointment of officers other than judges—and perhaps of judges? That is why I made the inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not looked up the precedents.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Is the Senator from Massachusetts referring to vacancies that come into being during a session of the Congress or vacancies that happen or come into being while Congress is in session and the nomination is not made?

Mr. WALSH. I am referring to both. What has been the practice in the past?

Mr. BURKE. I could tell the Senator, if the Senator from Texas will yield, what the precedent of the Senate is in reference to the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. In 1899 the Senate had before it the question of seating Senator Matthew S. Quay, of Pennsylvania. His term expired on the 3d of March 1899. The Legislature of Pennsylvania balloted each day, but was unable to agree upon a Senator. On the 19th day of April of that year the Legislature of Pennsylvania adjourned without having chosen a Senator, and shortly thereafter the Governor appointed Mr. Quay. When he presented himself to the Senate—and I call attention to the fact that the provision of the Pennsylvania Constitution vesting in the Governor the authority to make the appointment of a Senator is identical in language with the provision of the Federal Constitution authorizing the President of the United States to make appointments to the Supreme Court—when Mr. Quay presented himself to the Senate, after many days of debate, the Senate rejected him on the ground that the Governor had no authority to make an appointment to fill a vacancy that occurred, happened, came into being while the legislature was in session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Referring to the appointment of Judges of the Supreme Court during recesses of the Senate, my recollection is there have been four such appointments. In one case the Senate rejected the appointee, not because he was appointed during the recess, but for other reasons. In another case the Senate confirmed an appointment made during recess. In two other cases appointments were made but the Justices appointed, one of whom was Justice Holmes and the other Justice Harlan, declined to sit until they were confirmed.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. But in no other case has the Senate rejected a man appointed to the Supreme Court merely because he took his seat during the recess, so far as I have any knowledge, although one man was rejected for other reasons.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I think a very fine precedent was established by Justice Holmes and Justice Harlan, if I am correctly informed. Their appointments having been made while Congress was not in session, they recognized that the filling of vacancies on the Supreme Court is not the single act of the Executive or of the Senate but the joint act of both, and they did not sit in any case until both had acted.

On that point the Senator from Texas said the men appointed under these circumstances would have to take his chances on whether he would be confirmed. He is not the only one who would take a chance. All the litigants who appeared before the Court and whose cases were heard before a Judge appointed under those circumstances and who was later not confirmed might find a weakness in the decisions of the Court; at least it would throw a little cloud on them.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is nothing to that point. He would be a Judge de facto, and his decisions would stand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The appointment to fill vacancies on the Supreme Court comes under the same provision of the Constitution that the appointment to fill other vacancies do. Under the Constitution and the law, the President may make recess appointments. The fact that there is a vacancy on the Supreme Court does not create any difference in the constitutional provision relating to such appointments any more than it would with relation to any other Federal offices to be filled by appointment.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kentucky is eminently correct. I am going to cite the Constitution on that point. Any appointee who should accept recess appointment and resign his circuit judgeship or his law professorship or his secretaryship in one of the departments or his seat in the Senate, and then should fail of confirmation, would be confronted with a trouble which would be all his own. He would just be out of luck.

However, that is not the question here. The question here is a legal, constitutional question. What does the Constitution provide? The provision of the Constitution relating to the appointment of a Supreme Court Judge is just the same as that relating to the appointment of a postmaster or any other Federal official. It is all under the same head.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the eminent and distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. May I for the moment refresh the memory of the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE]? The instance of the rejection of Mr. Quay from Pennsylvania under appointment by the Governor, after there had failed to be an election, was upon the theory and upon the doctrine that there was not a vacancy for the reason that there had not been an election. No one had died and no one's term had expired. The fact that the legislature failed to appoint or elect merely left the place vacant, and there was no Senator; therefore the provision which authorized the Governor to appoint a Senator had not been complied with. He was rejected because under our Constitution there was no condition or circumstance which authorized the Governor to make the appointment.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska for rejoinder.

Mr. BURKE. I have read the debate in the Senate which occurred over the confirmation of Senator Quay, and I did not find that the point urged by the Senator from Illinois was relied upon to any particular extent, though it was referred to by one or two Senators. The point turned on the question of whether the Governor had the right to make an appointment during a recess to fill a vacancy which happened while the legislature was in session. What appeared to be in the mind of practically every Senator was exactly the point in mind in this case and under identical language in the two constitutions.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this is a moot question so far as concerns the issue raised by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], for the simple reason that it can never be tested until an appointment is made. The Senate cannot force the President to make an appointment now. When he does make the appointment, if it is made during the recess of the Senate, all the Senate can do is to confirm or reject. The question then will arise as to whether there was a vacancy. We all know there is a vacancy.

Let us see what the Constitution provides. Speaking of the President, it provides:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but—

And this point was under discussion on the housing bill—

> but the Congress by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

That is where the Congress, under authority to regulate inferior appointments, enacts legislation authorizing a Cabinet officer or housing board to appoint employees, and under that provision we can also require confirmation, because that is one of the conditions of the appointment, I shall say to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who is honoring me by his close attention.

Here is the clause upon which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is relying:

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

The Senator from Michigan is going to claim that, by inference, because a specific authority is given the President to appoint officers during recesses, therefore he cannot appoint one unless the vacancy occurred during the recess. That is not undisputed. That is not clear.

Mr. O'MAHONEY rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield to the Senator from Wyoming in just a moment.

It might be argued, on the other hand, that, the Supreme Court being in recess itself, there were no duties for it to perform, and there was not, in fact, a vacancy. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] contends quite strongly there is not any vacancy at all; that, because of the Retirement Act, we simply allowed a Judge to take a vacation and that he is still a Judge of the Supreme Court.

I yield now to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Texas has been reading from clauses 2 and 3 of section 2, article 2, of the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There are three words there upon which I should like to have him make some comment. In section 2 provision is made for authority to President to "nominate", and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to "appoint"; and in clause 3 authority is provided for the President not to nominate, not to appoint, but to grant a "commission." Does the Senator believe there is any distinction?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to have the Senator develop that distinction.

Mr. CONNALLY. The first section contemplates, of course, that the President shall nominate these parties and that the Senate will confirm or reject as the case may be. The other is a temporary arrangement purely to take care of the exigencies which arise during the recess:

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

The first section does not provide that the President has to make the appointments when the Senate is in session. The Senate is the master of its own destiny. It can go home whenever the two Houses of Congress agree to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has occurred frequently since I have been here that during the last hours of the session of Congress the President has sent nominations to the Senate which were not acted upon to fill vacancies created during the session of the Senate about to adjourn. In those cases frequently the President has made a recess appointment that held over until the end of the next succeeding session of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. That, of course, would be quite a different case from a case in which a vacancy occurs and no name is sent to the Senate.

I do not want to interrupt the Senator and disagree with him, but I think the clear implication of a reading of the Constitution as the Senator has read it is to the effect that the President shall send in a name when a vacancy occurs during the session. Otherwise, the language used that he may do this when a vacancy occurs when the Senate is not in session would not be in the Constitution at all, in my judgment. But if the Senator will permit me a further word, regardless of whether or not there is precedent on the subject and regardless of whether the Senator is right in his construction of the Constitution or I am right, the fact remains that the Senate is in session; that it has been stated that new blood is needed upon the Supreme Court, and needed now; that there is a vacancy, and it has existed since June 2. A nomination ought to be sent in while the Senate is in session; and I do not think any self-respecting lawyer would accept an appointment and serve as a member of the Supreme Court of the United States during the interim before being confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, what the Senator says about a self-respecting lawyer may be all very well, but we are not talking about what suggestion a particular man's conception of ethics might make to him with regard to one of these appointments. We are talking about the power to make the appointment.

There is nothing unusual about vacancies occurring either in recess or during the session of the Senate and not being acted upon. There is now a vacancy in the Federal Reserve Board. Has anyone been complaining about that vacancy not being filled? I have not heard of it. It has been in existence for a considerable period. There are several vacancies in other Federal courts over the United States. There has been some little discussion about the failure to fill those vacancies; but the point I am trying to make is that the Senate has no right to put pressure upon the President, no right to suggest or intimate or make threats. When the issue comes here, it is the duty of the Senate then to stand up and perform its duty under the Constitution.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. The Senate will not get anywhere, it will not promote the public business, it will not preserve the checks and balances in the Constitution, by nagging at the White House with a political resolution of this kind.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Texas is not complaining over the fact that this resolution was submitted today by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG.] So far as I am concerned, to a certain extent I was delighted to have someone on the other side of the body show some recognition of the fact that we have a Supreme Court, and that there is some relationship between the Supreme Court and the Congress.

During the past few months we have had a very serious debate in the country over a very serious problem. We do not need to discuss the merits or demerits of that discussion.

I have been very much surprised, and at times rather bewildered, to think that a great political party in this country, represented in this body and in the other House of Congress not by very many but by very distinguished Members, sat by, mute, while that discussion went on. I do not believe the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] abdicated his leadership of the Republican Party in this body to Mahatma Ghandi, but certainly he did have the Republican Party under a period of silence as long as that discussion was going on. I am glad once more to find out that the representatives of the great minority party in this country know that we have a Supreme Court and are willing to talk about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to the Senator from Washington, but he is introducing a rather irrelevant and immaterial matter. [Laughter.] I want to say that in the matter which has just transpired, and to which the Senator from Washington refers, a number of very eminent and distinguished Republican Senators rendered to the Judiciary Committee and to the country what I regard as a very high and patriotic service; and I am not disposed to make any reflections either upon their political sagacity—and it is always good—their character, their patriotism, or the ability with which they maintained their attitude. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he allow the Republican Party and the Court issue, both of which are dead, to remain dead, and not bring them into this discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I shall conclude in a moment. What the Senator from Texas is undertaking to maintain here is the same position which he undertook to maintain as a member of the Judiciary Committee and as a Senator on the court bill. The Constitution defines the functions of the Supreme Court, it defines the functions of the Senate, it defines the functions of the Executive, and we have to maintain the separation of those functions. I am just as much opposed, for the sake of politics or of holding my seat here, to undertaking to dictate or to suggest to the President of the United States in this public manner as I am opposed to the President's invading the province of the Congress or of the judiciary of the United States.

Why does not the Senator from Michigan go down and see the President? Why does he not go down and have a conference with the President, and say to him, "Mr. President, I think you ought to send in these nominations now, so that I can jump on them and make a lot of fuss over them, and get in the headlines?" That is what the Senator ought to do. He ought not to come up here and seek this forum—a forum where all the world looks on—and introduce his resolution. He will have plenty of time to perform presidential functions after he is elected, and not before.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If a vacancy in any office which is to be filled by an appointment by the President should occur within 24 hours or 48 hours of the adjournment of Congress, let me ask the Senator from Texas whether there is anything in the Constitution to require the President to send up a nomination within the 24 hours or the 48 hours.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why, of course not; and there is nothing in the Constitution which says when the President shall appoint anybody. Evidently the third clause was written for this purpose.

Suppose a member of the Cabinet should die during the recess of Congress, and the President had to have a new member quickly. He could appoint him, and wait until Congress convened, and then we could confirm him or reject his nomination. Suppose any other important functionary whose services were absolutely imperative should die during the recess of Congress; the same thing would be true.

Mr. President, it is a rule of statutory and constitutional construction that the entire instrument must be construed, and an endeavor must be made to harmonize it wherever possible. My own view is that these provisions can be harmonized by suggesting that the third clause is very clearly just for the temporary filling of emergency vacancies, but there is no direct requirement in the second clause as to when the President shall nominate the appointees.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] asked the Senator from Texas what his own thought was. My own thought is that it would be more desirable in any case, of course, if it could be done, to submit nominations while the Senate is in session; but that is not for me to say. I am not President of the United States. We do not know what difficulties the President of the United States is encountering in the matter of selecting appointees; and if he is considering all the names that the newspapers say he is considering, he has a job on his hands. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

Mr. BURKE. The point has been made as between subsection 2 and subsection 3 that under subsection 2 general power is given to the President to nominate these various classes of officers, including Judges of the Supreme Court, and, by and with the consent of the Senate, to appoint them. There is no appointment in that case without the action of the Senate upon the nomination.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. BURKE. Let me make one assumption. Assuming that the Senator from Idaho is not correct, and that there is a vacancy on the Supreme Court at the present time; the Senator from Texas surely will not claim that that vacancy happened during a recess of the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I would not think so. I said, however, it might be contended by some technical and abstruse legalistic mind that there was no vacancy on the Court because it occurred at a time when the Court had itself adjourned, and would not convene again until October.

Mr. BURKE. That line of argument does not appeal to the Senator?

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. BURKE. He rejects it?

Mr. CONNALLY. It does not appeal to me, and I do not have to decide that question.

Mr. BURKE. If there is a vacancy on the Supreme Court—which we are assuming—and if it did not happen during a recess of the Senate, where would the President get any authority to make an appointment to fill the vacancy? I do not understand where such authority comes from at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. If he does not get it under section 2——

Mr. BURKE. He cannot get it under that section.

Mr. CONNALLY. And does not get it under section 3, he would not get it at all, of course.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. The difficulty about the attitude of the Senator from Nebraska is that he is contending that there is a vacancy and that it occurred during a session of the Congress, and that therefore it cannot be filled until the next session of the Congress, if the nomination is not submitted now. Is that correct, that unless it is submitted during this session no appointment can be made until the next session, in the Senator's opinion?

Mr. BURKE. That no appointment could properly be made until the Congress is again in session, absolutely.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought I interpreted the Senator correctly. Let us see what would happen then. Suppose we were in some great emergency, and some high, important officer of the Government should die, as was suggested a moment ago, within 24 hours before the Congress adjourned, and it was not practicable to make the appointment. Under the contention of the Senator from Nebraska it could not be made at all until the next session of the Congress.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I find in the Constitution a clear provision and authority for the calling of a special session in the case of an emergency, and Senators do not even need to leave this Chamber upon the adjournment, but can be called back immediately for a special session, and remain in session, and make all the confirmations necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask the Senator from Nebraska, however, does he regard the filling of one office, one job, as being such an emergency as ought to require a special session of the Congress?

Mr. BURKE. A special session of the Senate only. No; I do not consider that to be true, especially when the Senate is in session day after day after a vacancy occurs. But if for any reason, because of the number of individuals who are being considered, or for any other reason, the President does not care to make the appointment now—and I agree fully with the Senator that that is the sole prerogative of the President, and that we have nothing to do about that—if he does not care to make the appointment now to fill the vacancy, and Congress adjourns, and the President decides before the October term of the Court begins that he wants to fill the vacancy, I think he should by all means call the Senate into special session and submit the nomination.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska and I are practically in agreement. He agrees, of course, that we cannot compel the President to appoint these parties. The discretion—and this is the point I am trying to contend for—the discretion, or judgment, or power, of selection involved in making an appointment is exclusively within the President's province, and is not ours. So, for reasons other than those some of the Senators are attributing to him, the President may not be prepared to make an appointment during a session of the Congress. If he does not do that, but elects to undertake—and I will use that language to please the Senator from Nebraska—if he undertakes to make an appointment during a recess, then the questions which are involved will come before the Senate when the question of confirmation or rejection is acted upon, and if we then believe that the President had no right to make a recess appointment, that would be a cogent argument, one of the arguments, for the rejection of the nomination, and if gentlemen who are looking with wistful eyes upon the Supreme Court want to take the hazard of giving up their own positions to serve for 2 or 3 months and run the risk of rejection, that is the business of the President and the business of the appointee.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I apologize; I did not wish a moment past to continue to interrupt the able Senator from Texas, but I did desire to add to my observation to the Senator from Nebraska to call to his attention, insisting, as I must, on the position I have taken with him, that he will find in the discussion of the case of Senator Allen, of Washington, that the United States Senate there had occasion to consider the Quay case; that in the State of Washington the legislature deadlocked, failed to make an election of anyone, the term of Senator Allen had expired, he was designated by the Governor of the State of Washington as an appointee, came to the Senate, and the able Senator from Nebraska will discover that again it was held, as there was no vacancy within the meaning of the Constitution, that Senator Allen could not be seated, and there the Senator will see, I am quite sure, that the viewpoint I urged before him as the reason for Senator Quay being likewise dismissed from the Senate, on the theory that there was no jurisdiction to appoint him, was confirmed in that case.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in the cases of Senator Quay and Senator Allen we cannot read all the reasons for their rejection in the debate. There were probably other reasons, probably political reasons, probably personal reasons, and the Senate in exercising the power of expulsion, and in exercising the power of confirmation and rejection, is not bound by any law or any rule of evidence. It may reject a man because he has red hair if it should desire to do so.

The Senate can reject a man because he wears black whiskers if it should desire to do so. It can throw a man out of this Chamber because he smokes cubeb cigarettes if it should desire to do so. The Senate does not have to have any reason. It has the power, and it can exercise it. So in the Quay case and in the Allen case the chances are that the Senate then, as it has in some cases in years past, been actuated by motives and reasons in the cases of some Senators that were not absolutely in consonance with the legal precedents, or what was written in the law books.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator would read the Quay case he would find that a very considerable number of Senators, for instance, the able Senator Vest, of Missouri, who were intimate personal friends of Senator Quay, felt bound by the constitutional provisions to vote against his taking his seat in this body. Rather than it being an argument in favor of the Senator's contention to say that they voted for personal reasons, I think he will find that the opposite is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, even if that were true, it is no precedent here. It might be a precedent for the Senate, but we are now talking about the President's power to appoint, his right to appoint, his right to make up his own mind when he is ready, and not to have it made up for him by somebody else. The President has a right to make up his own mind about it just as the Supreme Court has the right to make up its own mind and the Senate has the right to make up its own mind.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the case of Senator Quay there was no vacancy caused by resignation or death, but the legislature of Pennsylvania failed to do its duty and failed to do what it had the power to do in the selection of a Senator, and the Senate held that a vacancy was not created which gave the Governor of the State the power to appoint a Senator.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. What happened was that Senator Quay's term expired of the 3d of March, 1899, and when no one was selected to take office on the 4th of March there was a vacancy there. The vacancy did not occur while the Pennsylvania Legislature was not in session or by reason of death. A week or so after Senator Quay's term expired the legislature adjourned and the Governor then appointed him to the Senate, and when he came to the Senate he was rejected on the ground that the Governor had no authority to fill a vacancy that had occurred while the legislature was in session.

It seems to me that the Senator is overlooking another point. This matter of filling vacancies on the Supreme Court is not the sole prerogative of the President of the United States. It is a joint duty in which this body has a high and solemn part to perform.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is right.

Mr. BURKE. And when we bring the matter up in this body we are acting not only within our constitutional rights but within the clear duty that is imposed upon us to see that we do perform our duty.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Nebraska. It is the duty of the President to appoint. It is the duty of the Senate to confirm or reject—not while we are at home, but when we come back in January. That is the only way we can act as a body. It is the President's duty to appoint when he gets good and ready, when he makes up his mind whom he wants. It is his duty then to appoint, and when the Senate is in session and makes up its mind, it is its duty to confirm or reject as the facts may justify.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the eminent Senator from California.

Mr. McADOO. I have been listening with great interest to the remarks of my distinguished friend from Texas, but I think he causes some confusion when he refers constantly to the power of the President to appoint. The President has no power to appoint in the instance we are discussing. He merely has the power to nominate. The President alone has the power to nominate.

Mr. CONNALLY. When I say "appoint" I mean nominate under the Constitution, subject to confirmation.

Mr. McADOO. He has the power to nominate somebody for this position, but the man he nominates cannot take the office until he is confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. McADOO. Under the Constitution the nominee cannot assume the duties of the office until he is confirmed. The President can only make an appointment by and with the consent of the Senate of the United States. The power of making an interim appointment has always been a disputed power. I myself have not had occasion to study that matter very thoroughly, and I express no opinion about it, but with respect to certain appointments which can become effective only upon the President's nomination to this body and confirmation by this body, the clear intent of the Constitution was and is, I think, to establish that means of finally consummating an appointment to high office in the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from California a question. The Senator says that the President shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint. What is the difference between "nominate" and "appoint"?

Mr. McADOO. The only difference is the action of the Senate, which is essential in order to make the appointment conclusive.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. So the Senator admits that "nominate" and "appoint", are the same thing, except, of course, that the nominee must be confirmed. Of course, he must be confirmed sooner or later.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will look at the last column on the front page of the Evening Star of today he will find that the object sought to be accomplished by the introduction of this resolution has already been accomplished by the publication of the resolution in big headlines on the front page of that evening newspaper. The object of the resolution has been accomplished, and I think probably the incident will soon be at an end.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me answer the Senator. I congratulate the Senator from Michigan. He has presented a resolution of about 20 words, and his resolution has been multiplied until it is about 300 or 400 or 500 words in the Evening Star. I do not know whether it took that many words to explain what the Senator's resolution meant, or whether it was just a fecund multiplication of a political germ.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator from Kentucky feels that with the publication of this resolution in the newspapers and the headlines given to it, that that matter will quickly lose its interest and die out, I venture to make one prediction, and that is that the Senator is very seriously mistaken, because I believe that this matter is fundamental and of very great importance and interest to the people of this country, and I would urge upon the Senator from Kentucky and those who are close to the President to aid him in avoiding the pitfall which I see presently yawning before him. I do not think the proper course to pursue is to attempt to hush up the matter, and pass it over, and make fun of this resolution, and so on, because I believe the people of the country will not look with favor upon this proposal of having the Senate go on after June 2, week after week, and for 2 or 3 weeks yet, leaving a vacancy on the Supreme Court unfilled—a vacancy for which the Members of this body have an equal responsibility with the President—and then after the Congress has adjourned have the President, as apparently is contemplated, exercise the special and limited power given him under subsection 3 of section 2 to fill up that vacancy, put a nominee in office who can sit with the other members of the Court at the October term, and take part in all the high and solemn duties of that office as fully as if his nomination had been sent to the Senate and he had in due course been confirmed by this body. I do not think it is a light matter at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire in any way to hush up any discussion of this proposition. I have no knowledge whatever of the President's intention with respect to this appointment. I have not sought to ascertain what his intention was. I assume, as I think we all have a right to assume, that he will perform that duty in a conscientious way as his judgment may dictate. What I said was that the object sought to be accomplished by the Senator from Michigan had been fulfilled, and I still insist that that is true.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. McADOO. I should like to make it clear that I think the position of the Senator from Texas is absolutely sound; that the President alone has the power to make these nominations, and we have not anything on earth to do with the matter of those nominations, and so long as he does not present the nomination to the Senate we cannot say anything about it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is right.

Mr. McADOO. That is the point I wanted to make clear. On the other hand, as I view it, the appointment under the Constitution cannot be consummated until there is a confirmation by the Senate of the United States. Whether the President wants to send in the nomination now or withhold it, that is absolutely in his own power, and we have no method or manner of interfering with it or making a suggestion officially about it as a body.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from California for his interruption.

I may say, Mr. President, that in the event a nomination should be made in recess, it might very consistently be held to be simply a nomination and not an appointment. Then when the Senate does meet in January we confirm, if it be an appointment; and if we reject, it would be out of the window.

The point, however, I am trying to make is that we cannot force the President to act now. That is his function. We have a remedy. Our remedy will be here in January. If we then feel that the appointment was illegal, if we think it was an improvident appointment, if we find that the appointment is that of a man who is not able to perform the high functions of the Supreme Court, if we find that the appointment is that of a man whose conduct does not come up to the standard we require, we can reject him. That is all we can do. That is what the Constitution meant for us to do.

Much is said concerning the words, "by and with the advice and consent." It was probably contemplated by the makers of the Constitution that the President should call in the Senate and discuss with Senators these appointments and treaties. George Washington tried that. I do not know about appointments, but George Washington tried to come up to the Senate and confer with the whole Senate about some treaties in his first administration, but he never went back any more.

No doubt there were many hecklers there as there are in some other bodies, and they sought to embarrass him by resolutions like this and impertinent questions and political jibes, and so on. George Washington got his hat and went back to the White House, and there is where the Senate gave up its power to advise. It still has the power to consent.

Mr. President, by long usage the "advice" part has practically been abandoned, but the Senate does retain the power to consent or not consent. We have that power. We must cling to it. I should not hesitate to vote to reject a man nominated to the Supreme Court. I voted against the confirmation of Mr. Hughes, because at that time I thought and felt that Mr. Hughes, by long service for the great corporations, having gone off the Supreme Court Bench and then, as I thought, capitalized that fact by appearing before the Supreme Court at every session in great cases involving great fees, running for the Presidency, and getting his mind on politics, was so saturated with economic concepts, so saturated with the views of industries and corporations that no matter how honest he might be he could not divest himself of that outlook and that viewpoint.

I voted against confirming Mr. Hughes; but Chief Justice Hughes has made a good Justice, has made a splended Supreme Court Justice. I said several months ago to him, "Mr. Chief Justice, I voted against confirming you, but you have made a good Judge, and I am not now going to vote to kick you off the Supreme Court."

Before the Judiciary Committee one of the witnesses dug up a speech I had made in the Senate against the confirmation of Mr. Hughes. He said, "Senator CONNALLY, you voted against confirming Judge Hughes because of the economic and other slants of mind he possessed." I said, "Yes, and I have not changed my mind since that time. I voted then against putting one man on the Supreme Court because I thought he had a preconceived notion about how he was going to decide certain questions, and I am now opposed to putting six men on the bench with preconceived opinions, and preconceived notions." That is my position now.

I voted against confirming John J. Parker, of North Carolina, and I shall vote against confirming anyone else of that character. I think such men should not sit on the Supreme Court or any other court.

We shall meet all the questions involved, all these fine-spun theories involved on both sides of the matter, when the question comes before us. There is nothing before us now. We have no right to act until something comes before us in a constitutional way.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] will not press his resolution. It has already served him well. I trust the Senator from Michigan will stand for the integrity of the functions of the Executive just as he has stood for the preservation of the integrity of the Supreme Court in recent months.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The able Senator, in his usual interesting way, has said the resolution has served well the Senator from Michigan. Would the Senator be good enough to enlarge upon that suggestion?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have consumed more of the time of the Senate now than I should. I am sure the Senator from West Virginia, with his power and abilities along that line, could perform that function much more fittingly than the Senator from Texas.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly taking the time of the Senate on this particular subject at this time. I did not start the debate, but I could not allow it to conclude without my observations in reply to both the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

I shall spend no time upon motives. I am indebted to the able Senator from Kentucky and to my friend from Texas for their imputation to my action of something less than a sincere interest in the public welfare. If that is their viewpoint, I am sorry. The fact remains that they are mistaken.

The fact also remains that I personally regret that type of debate. There does happen to be a definite, specific, challenging issue involved in this instance, and no amount of levity and no amount of sarcasm can blind the importance of the issue as it rests at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. President, I concur completely in the fundamental idea that executive and the legislative functions shall remain utterly separate as the Constitution requires; but I am unable to understand how the creation of a Justice of the Supreme Court can be considered exclusively an Executive function so long as it is a partnership function which requires the advice and consent of the Senate. There is no point in the process of the creation of a Justice of the Supreme Court where we can separate the ultimate responsibility of the Senate of the United States acting as an absolutely free and independent agent to pass upon the credentials of the nominee. The Senate is not a free agent to pass upon the credentials of the nominee if the nominee has been appointed during a recess, has taken his seat on October 1, has clothed himself with the robes of office, has participated in Court proceedings, deliberations, and decisions for 3 months, and then comes before the Senate for confirmation.

It is a totally different concept in its atmosphere. It is a totally different concept in respect to the problem which the Senate confronts.

I do not see how anyone can contend that it as simple a matter to reach up and take a Justice from the Supreme Court, as would be the necessity if there were a rejection of a recess appointment, as it is to confront in the first instance the academic question whether the nominee for Justice has the necessary qualifications. I submit that since this is a partnership proposition, and we cannot get away from the fact that it is a partnership proposition, the Senate has a right to speak for itself respecting its view of the manner in which the partnership should be served.

This resolution is no invasion of the Executive portion of the partnership. The President may still do precisely as he pleases. The resolution refers solely to the Senate's portion of the partnership by saying, on behalf of the Senate, that we do not believe we can exercise our function completely and independently if we are not permitted to exercise it until after an appointee has served for 3 months upon the Supreme Court bench.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to continue my presentation, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. President, the question of whether or not the President has the constitutional power to fill in recess a vacancy which occurred prior to recess is one which I shall not undertake to explore. When the able lawyers of the Senate disagree upon the subject it is no place for a layman to attempt to umpire the dispute. But if a layman reads the language of article II, section 2, clause 3, of the Constitution, he confronts this language:

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate.

For 150 years, as I find by reading the notes in the annotated Constitution, there has been an argument as to what the word "happen" means; and that is the crux of the entire dispute respecting the Presidential power. Does "happen" mean "occur", or does it mean "exist"? That is all there is to the question. If "happen" means "occur", then it reads:

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may occur during the recess.

Then there is no doubt about it. This vacancy did not occur during the recess.

If "happen" means "exist", then it reads:

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may exist during the recess.

And manifestly he does have the power.

We are advised that the Attorney General has told the President today that the President has the power. Therefore, I assume the Attorney General has told the President that "happen" means "exist"; and apparently, from the information upon my desk, the Attorney General is supported in that interpretation by a preponderance of the previous opinions rendered by previous Attorneys General. So we will not, so far as I am concerned, quarrel at all about the question whether or not the President has the power, although I repeat that a layman's reading of the article would seem to indicate that he would not have the power to fill a vacancy which existed prior to the recess. But we will pass that. It is not involved at all in the contemplation submitted in the resolution. The resolution simply contemplates the fact that there is now, and has been since the 2d of June, a vacancy upon the Supreme Court of the United States; and we have been told for months and months that the importance of injecting new blood into the Supreme Court is so emphatic that everything else should have given way to the creation of an opportunity to make an appointment.

Well, we will not argue that. We will simply acknowledge that there has been a vacancy since June 2. I think that is the date. Now, the contemplation is that this session of Congress will be allowed to adjourn without that vacancy having been filled. If it should be filled before we adjourn, the name would come to the Senate for confirmation, and there would be action ahead of the October term of Court. If it should be filled after we adjourn, the nominee would sit upon the Court from October 1 on, and when the Senate confronted the problem of confirmation after New Year's Day it would confront a sitting judge in his robes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator from Michigan vote any differently in January on the nomination of a judge whom he thought unworthy than he would if his name were submitted at this time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think not.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's remark implied that the Senator himself would not but somebody else in the Senate would.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I said I think not. I am not clear.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is not clear that he would not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not clear, because I do not know what might happen during that period of 3 months.

Mr. CONNALLY. How could anything happen? If a man were unworthy——

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Texas has had a fine field day. I suggest that he allow me to finish my statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator yielded, and I thank him for it; but I will withdraw my request.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the problem which the Senate would confront in January would be an essentially complicated problem; but I remind the Senator from Texas that that is not the primary difficulty. The difficulty is that if he and I should vote in January precisely as we would have voted otherwise, and if we should unseat a judge appointed during the recess, we should unseat a judge who would have participated for 90 days in the work of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator think any decision rendered by a judge during that 90-day period would be tainted with illegality or with lack of effectiveness?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have not the slightest idea, and I will not enter that legal realm; but I submit as an elementary contemplation in common sense that there ought not to be on the Supreme Court one Justice whose eligibility is questionable and whose authority is doubtful, particularly when it is not necessary.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Michigan may be in difficulty as to what he would do in January, and the Senator from Texas may be in difficulty——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas is not in difficulty.

Mr. BURKE. All right; then we will leave out the Senator from Texas; but I desire to repeat that my position on the matter would be this: If the Senate should adjourn without a nomination being made to fill this vacancy on the Court, and if, prior to the October term of Court, the President should fill up the vacancy with any man who would sit on the Court for the 3 months before we meet in January, regardless of the qualifications of that man, I for one would vote against the confirmation of his nomination, because I think he would have done an unworthy thing.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the precedents which have been referred to seem to indicate that at least in recent years distinguished citizens nominated in recess for places on the Supreme Court have taken precisely the position respecting their own status that the Senator from Nebraska asserts as a rule of conduct for himself, because in each recent instance—and I have Mr. Justice Holmes particularly in mind—they have been appointed in recess, regardless of whether or not the vacancy arose in recess, they have not taken their seats upon the bench until they have been confirmed by the Senate of the United States. That of itself, Mr. President, is a clear ethical demonstration upon the highest authority that there ought not to be upon the Supreme Court any sitting Justices who have not been confirmed.

The only question I have raised in this resolution—and I submit that it is a very fundamental question—does not invade the Executive prerogative at all. It simply seeks to state, on behalf of the Senate, that the Senate believes it can best and most appropriately exercise its function of advice and consent in respect of the nomination of a Justice of the Supreme Court if it has a chance to act before the Justice has entered upon his term of service.

Mr. President, that is all there is to the issue, so far as I am concerned. The timidity about invading the Executive prerogative, however, is far more tender than it was a few years ago when the Senate did not hesitate to tell a President of the United States that he ought not to run for a third term, which was excellent advice then and remains superb advice today.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Michigan stated, in answer to my inquiry, that he would vote exactly in January as he would vote now on the same nomination. But later he indicated some doubt, I believe. Is that correct?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I say that I think I would vote the same, but that I would find the situation greatly complicated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I cannot conceive how a Senator would vote against a man if his name were submitted now, because he thought he was unworthy or not able to fill the job, and then might in January vote for him.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. What could happen?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will tell the Senator, if he will yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Suppose during this 3-month interim the sitting Justice whom we are discussing had participated in some important decisions, and the Senator from Texas were to rise as a lawyer and prove to me as a layman that the validity of those decisions was involved in my attitude. I submit to the Senator that he would have presented a problem which at least would change the sum total of the contemplation, as I understond it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Michigan that neither the Senator from Texas, nor any other lawyer, would be able to demonstrate that to the Senator from Michigan, because it would not be true. I have not looked up the precedents and the law, but I think I know some general principles. If the Justice participated in decisions, the decisions would not be affected. He would be a de-facto judge.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Could any private litigant question in any manner the decision of a de-facto judge?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly not. The Senator from New Mexico is a much better lawyer than is the Senator from Texas, and I thank him for his valuable suggestion and interruption.

Mr. BURKE and Mr. STEIWER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. I wish to hold the turbulent waves of interruption in check just a moment.

Let me pursue just a little further the thought of the Senator from Michigan. There are Senators who are appointed and come with certificates of election and are seated. They vote on important bills and important questions, and then they are rejected from the Senate on final hearing, and are unseated. Does that disturb in any wise their votes on important measures? Suppose a bill should be carried by a single vote; of course it would not be disturbed. There would be no effect on it whatever.

I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I merely wanted to suggest that a person appointed by the President to fill up this vacancy, and appointed some time after the adjournment of the Congress, would not be a de-facto judge at all, if the interpretation which I would place on this section is correct. He would be a mere interloper, without any color or right of authority at all, and while there might be a practical difficulty as to how any private litigant could get into court and question a decision, I would not be so much disturbed about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the objection about it going to hurt someone's lawsuit is not what bothers the Senator from Michigan. He is not worried about some litigant. Of course, as already suggested, it would not affect the decision of the Court at all. No one could raise the question, no one could collaterally attack a judgment of the Supreme Court. If the Supreme Court handed down its decision with the Justice participating I think it would control over the voices of a couple of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I merely wished to say that the Senator from New Mexico raises an important question when he suggests that a litigant cannot question the right of a justice to sit on the bench.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield for a moment?

Mr. STEIWER. Let me finish my question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon until he finishes, and then I shall yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. STEIWER. As I understand, the Senator from Texas is agreeing with the Senator from New Mexico. Both Senators may be right; I pretend to no arrogance of opinion with respect to that question. But there are two State cases in our legal literature in which a litigant was permitted, in a case which was on trial, to question the composition of the court that was to pass upon his case.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know of those authorities, where the question was raised before the case was acted upon. If a litigant finds a judge not a judge, that there was a void appointment, he gets another judge, of course.

Mr. STEIWER. I am not so certain, therefore, that a litigant before the Supreme Court of the United States would be wholly without remedy with respect to the composition of the Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that he will certainly concede that the decision would have to be a 5-to-4 decision, and that the odd judge would have to be the fifth man, would he not?

Mr. STEIWER. Not necessarily. The Court might unanimously decide one way or the other. It would not have to be a 5-to-4 decision.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the fact that this judge had sat on the Court, one judge, invalidate the action of the other eight judges? Does the Senator contend that?

Mr. STEIWER. No; I do not mean that at all. The thing that concerns me is that we might create a situation whereby the Court would be obliged to determine its own composition and the right of its own membership, a most desperate situation so far as the welfare of the Court and the country are concerned.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator can rest in peace on that. I do not think that question will arise.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Senator from Texas has answered the point I had in mind. The Senator from Oregon did not catch the point I raised. Assuming that the man is a de-facto judge, I lay down the proposition that no private litigant can question his decision. That is the statement I made.

Mr. CONNALLY. That sounds the general principle, and by analogy I was undertaking to point out what has happened in the Senate and what has happened in the House of Representatives. Senators sit here for months, and sometimes for over a year, and vote on important questions, and then, when the Senate comes to decide whether they are entitled to their seats or not, the Senate may decide they were never entitled to their seats from the beginning; but that does not affect what a Senator did, and the reason is perfectly apparent. What they were doing, even though it was temporary, they were doing under the Constitution, and every day they sat here on their certificates of election they had a right to sit here, until the Senate, in exercising its constitutional power, finally passed upon their qualifications, and held that they no longer had a right to seats in the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a well-known case, that of John Rutledge, who was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Washington and commissioned on July 1, 1795, while Congress was in recess. He presided at the August term, 1795, and was later not confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The vacancy in the Rutledge case occurred during a recess of the Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. That fact does not appear in the statement before me.

Mr. BURKE. That is the fact.

Mr. CONNALLY. One more thing, and I shall be through. The Senator from Nebraska pointed out that Justice Harlan and Justice Holmes, who had been appointed to the Supreme Court, declined to act until they were confirmed. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that, while I have a very high regard for the eminence and the ethics of both the Justices I have named, each of them was a State judge at the moment, and it might have been that they did not care to resign their State judgeships until they knew they were to be confirmed as Federal judges. I have known men to act under motives of that kind. I do not say that that was the motive in those cases, but they might have acted on it. I think it is a fine thing for a nominee to any judgeship to wait until he is confirmed before entering upon his duties. But that is not for me to determine.

That is not my function. We will determine these things when it is our duty to determine them, and the first time that it becomes our duty to determine them is when a nomination is sent here to the Senate. It then becomes our duty to act upon it by confirmation or rejection.

I voted against the seating of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], not because I had any personal objection to his being seated here. I was of the opinion that he was not entitled to his seat under the Constitution, because I contended that when he came to this body with the certificate and he was under 30 years of age he could not take a seat under the Constitution; that immediately a vacancy was created from the State of West Virginia, and it could only be filled by an appointment made by the Governor or by an election of the people, but could not be filled by mere expiration of time by reason of the Senator-elect becoming 30 years of age.

Mr. President, I simply cite these things to show that in the case of Senators who are afterwards rejected by this body, they have a perfect right to act, their right to a permanent seat is simply suspended, and their votes in nowise can be disturbed, and can have no prejudicial effect upon legislation they enacted.

By analogy I hold that the same is true of a judge. If he holds his office legally, if he even holds it under legal color of right, his decisions cannot be attacked later and they cannot be overturned, because he is a de-facto judge just like a Senator who is afterward ousted is a de-facto Senator until he is ousted.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask a question of the Senator from Michigan through the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to answer the Senator if I can answer his question.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to ask the Senator if he agrees with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] that if a man is appointed judge in vacation by the President and takes his seat, he would consider that ground for not voting to confirm him when his name came up to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will answer the Senator that the Senator from Texas would not consider it ground for not voting to confirm him.

Mr. HUGHES. I asked the question of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is certainly appropriate and right for the Senator from Nebraska to vote as he chooses. His vote is his own vote. He judges his own conduct and action by his own standards. He would have a perfect right to vote against confirmation on the ground that the judge by accepting the appointment under the circumstances had committed an act that was unworthy of the high judicial station of a judge.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the Senator states my position exactly.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to have the answer of the Senator from Michigan also.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is not the position of the Senator from Texas, I will say. If the Senator from Texas is here in January and the nomination comes here for action, so far as the Senator from Texas is concerned that will be the first official notification that he will have received that the nomination was made, and the Senator from Texas will then vote on that nomination according to his concepts of what the character, qualifications, and experience of the candidate ought to be, and he would be guided by the same standards as those which would guide him if he were voting on the nomination today. That is the attitude of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I was sure that would be the position of the Senator from Texas. It is my position.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his good will and commendation.

Mr. HUGHES. But I still have not received an answer to my question from the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sorry I could not hear the Senator from Delaware. I have not the slightest idea what he was talking about. Will the Senator repeat his question?

Mr. HUGHES. I will repeat my question, or perhaps the Senator from Texas will do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Delaware asked the question of the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Michigan—and the Senator from Texas highly appreciates that association.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is mutual.

Mr. CONNALLY. The question was whether or not the mere fact that the appointee accepted the position and served from October, we will say, to January, would be sufficient in our minds to vote to reject him. The Senator from Texas said that in his case it would not, but the Senator from Delaware wants the answer of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very happy to answer. I would not say now that it would be finally conclusive, but I will say that it would seriously reflect upon the ethical standard of the nominee so far as my opinion is concerned.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, having heard all parties concerned, I want to submit as a final suggestion to the Senator from Michigan that it is the duty of the Senate to act on this matter. It is the duty of the Senate to act on it only when it comes here before us in a constitutional manner in the way of a nomination. It is not the duty of the Senate to anticipate. It is not the duty of the Senate to preconceive. It is not the duty of the Senate to see ghosts behind bushes and to fear that the President of the United States is not going to do his duty. So far as the executive function and the legislative function are concerned, we can best preserve our function unimpaired from executive influence by observing a similar attitude toward the Executive. The longer we refrain from invading the executive function the more strength and the more resistance we may justly claim against the invasion of the legislative function by the Executive.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Everett M. Grantham, of New Mexico, to be United States attorney for the district of New Mexico, vice William J. Barker, resigned, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. In order that we may look forward with some confidence to a real recess later, I now move that we take one until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, August 3, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate August 2 (legislative day of July 22), 1937

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Everett M. Grantham, of New Mexico, to be United States attorney for the district of New Mexico, vice Hon. William J. Barker, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

G. Ellis Williams, district superintendent, Washington district, Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Father in Heaven, we call upon Thee, believing that they who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength.

Look upon our troubled world with compassion and love. Forgive our sins and restore unto us the consciousness of our sonship with Thee.

Give us teachable minds and hearts, so that we may deal justly with our fellow man, love mercy, and walk humbly with Thee.

May Thy richest blessings rest upon our Government in all its branches. Impart unto our leaders divine wisdom and understanding that Thy will may be done in our Nation and in our relationship with other nations. We ask it with the forgiveness of our sins in the name of Him who is our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 30, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1881. An act for the relief of the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation; and

S. 2475. An act to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 57. Joint resolution to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes.

SERVICE-CONNECTED BENEFITS FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, filed the following privileged report (No. 1411), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 292

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6384, a bill liberalizing the provisions of existing laws governing service-connected benefits for World War veterans and their dependents. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a letter I have just received from Hon. Mitchell Hepburn, Prime Minister and President of the Council of Ontario, Canada.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object to the gentleman's request, can the majority leader advise us what we may expect in the way of a legislative program today and tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Consent Calendar will be called today. I am informed by the Speaker that the Committee on Agriculture has reported an omnibus bill carrying amendments to various acts affecting agriculture. It is my further understanding that the bill comes with the unanimous report of the committee. There is a probability that the Speaker may recognize the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to suspend the rules and pass that bill this afternoon.

Tomorrow, of course, the Private Calendar will be called, and after that we will take up the conference report on the so-called District tax bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is the program, so far as the gentleman knows with certainty, for the week, is it?

Mr. RAYBURN. On Wednesday, of course, the calendar of committees will be called.

Thursday and Friday bills will be considered under special rules. The order in which they will be taken up has not been exactly determined. I do not think the rules have been reported yet.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As far as the gentleman knows, there will be but one suspension today?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state, after consultation with the majority leader, that the Chair may recognize the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to suspend the rules and pass a bill making appropriations for the New York World's Fair. This, however, has not been finally determined.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the matter indicated?

There was no objection.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD LASHES ILLINOIS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, in one of the most scathing indictments ever directed at a State agency by the Federal Government, the Social Security Board on July 27, 1937, over the signature of A. J. Altmeyer, Chairman of the Board, released its decision with reference to the hearings held on old-age assistance in the State of Illinois. The decision covers 11 pages, and in its findings of fact administers a verbal lashing of the Illinois old-age assistance division, which is a revelation. It will be a revealing eye opener to the hundreds of thousands of aged Illinois citizens who have not been able to secure approval of their old-age pension applications or who have not been able to secure action on their requests for increased pensions. It is unnecessary for me to point the finger of blame or reproach at any person or agency. The report speaks for itself.

In July of 1936 the Social Security Board approved the Illinois Old Age Assistance Act. From time to time the Social Security Board made specific recommendations to the State agency of Illinois to the effect that it was not conforming to the requirements of the Board. In December of 1936 and again in January of 1937 the Board made a study of the set-up in Illinois. On June 15, 1936, the Board notified the Illinois agency of a hearing to be held on this whole matter, involving the suspension of Federal payments to the State. On July 16, 1937, the hearings were held. Mr. A. L. Bowen, director of public welfare; Mr. J. H. Andrews, superintendent of the division of social assistance; and Mr. John C. Weigel, fiscal supervisor, all from Illinois, were present. As a result of the hearings and its own investigations here is what the Board found as reported in its decision:

First. Ending June 30, 1937, total payments of about $16,000,000 have been made to about 115,000 aged persons in Illinois, representing about 1,065,000 payments. The administrative expenses were $1,317,111.39. Expenses of operation therefore are about 8½ percent of the total payments made.

Second. In 40 percent of all down-State cases and in 32 percent of all Cook County cases the State agency modified the decisions of the county boards and usually modified them downward. These reductions in pensions were made by the State agency without additional data or investigations. The factual basis for such reductions and modifications was inadequate according to the findings.

Third. The percentage of persons over 65 years of age receiving pensions varied from 13.5 percent in Jo Daviess County to 70.9 percent in Alexander County. In other words, 13½ out of every 100 persons in Jo Daviess County over 65 were receiving pensions whereas in Alexander nearly 71 out of every 100 persons over 65 were receiving pensions. Can it be that the old folks have gravitated toward certain counties in the State, or is there something wrong with this picture?

Fourth. The average grant per aged person varied from $9.96 per month in Washington County to $17.96 per person in Rock Island County and $20.90 per person in Cook County. This represents a spread of 80 percent between the high and the low. Perhaps this is a gentle hint to the aged folks in other counties to move to Cook or Rock Island County because pensions are higher there. However, was such inequity intended by the Social Security Act or the Illinois old-age assistance law?

Fifth. In November of 1936, 13,599 applications were pending in the State agency for which no certificates had been written. On January 20, 1937, the number was 11,000. On May 21, 1937, it was 10,901. On June 23, 1937, it was 13,389. On June 30, 1937, it was 12,485. All these had been recommended for grants by the county boards. There were, therefore, 12,485 aged folks in Illinois waiting for their pensions, but the applications were languishing in the Springfield office.

Sixth. The Social Security Board found that it was 3 months from the time an application reached the office in Springfield before it came to a decision. This does not include the time taken in the county boards. Here, then, is high testimony to why pensions are delayed. Ninety days in the State office before it is decided.

Seventh. There were 15,934 requests for increases in awards that were not acted on on June 30, 1937. What cheerful news this will be to those fine aged folks who were given a small award and then applied for an increase. Now you know why it is being delayed. There are 15,934 of those old folks who made such requests, but the requests have not come up for action.

Eighth. There were 13,449 applications pending in the county boards on June 30, 1937.

Ninth. But here is the "most unkindest cut of all." The State board sent a bulletin to the county board suggesting that they decrease the awards where such decreases were justified in leveling out the pensions to conform to available funds, and, despite this, there were on May 21, 1937, 10,187 cases recommended by the county boards which were unacted upon by the State agency. On June 23, 1937, the number of such cases was 14,221. On June 30, there were 15,934 cases. It is apparent, therefore, that in more than 15,000 cases which the county boards recommended for changes in awards, no action has been taken by the State agency. Those old folks who have been patiently waiting for their pensions to be increased will now know that their requests are gathering dust in the State office without action.

Tenth. With further reference to requests for increased pensions, the findings indicate that on June 14, 1937, the State agency sent out Bulletin No. 44, instructing the county boards not to consider requests for increases and not to reinvestigate the need for assistance for the purpose of adjusting awards oftener than once in each 6 months, except in cases of emergency. Even in emergency cases the State agency has failed to act promptly and the county boards have had to make complaint about such failure. Can you imagine such formalistic and indifferent treatment of the aged people of Illinois whose hopes were set upon an enlightened and sympathetic administration of the Old Age Pension Act?

Eleventh. The Social Security Board found that there is no uniform policy in the State agency for making decisions and that the county boards were not regularly notified of State decisions. The county boards have specifically complained of this lack of information. This is tantamount to a criticism that there is no coordination between State and county boards and that the fault lies with the State agency and not with the counties.

Twelfth. The Board found that the State agency had made no surveys of changes in living costs and therefore had no factual basis for making a change of awards. Despite this, as indicated above, the State agency assumed to change the recommendations of the county boards, usually downward. In fact, as the findings show, it changed 40 percent of the applications downstate and 32 percent of those from Cook County, and usually scaled them downward. Could anything be more arbitrary than this, when the State agency had no facts or figures as a basis for making such changes?

Thirteenth. The findings show that the State agency had no manual of procedure. How could any efficiency and cooperation be brought about unless there be a detailed manual of procedure so that the county boards might be advised as to procedure?

Fourteenth. Now, look at this finding: In Grundy County the number of completed cases per investigator was 178. In Jackson County the number of completed cases per investigator was 1,182. Grundy County has a population of 19,000 and Jackson has a population of about 36,000. Both are small counties with no large towns. Why this amazing difference of almost 700 percent?

Fifteenth. The Board found that the number of cases per employee in the county offices varied from 85 cases per employee in Jo Daviess County to 624 cases per employee in Saline County. Saline, of which Harrisburg is the county seat, has a population of 37,000; and Jo Daviess, of which Galena is the county seat, has a 20,000 population. In other words, is it a case of Saline County being 700 percent more efficient than Jo Daviess County or was the Jo Daviess County Board filled with persons who were not needed; all of which would contribute to the expense of administration?

Sixteenth. The findings place the responsibility directly upon the State administration because the State agency has control, it controls the number of employees, and pays the entire cost of administration. There can therefore be no shifting of the blame for whatever maladministration of old-age pensions.

Seventeenth. The findings show that there has been only a limited investigation by the field staff of the State agency and that the percentage of cases reviewed by such staff in which awards were canceled varied from 1.1 percent in Tazewell County to 79.8 percent in Saline County. This spread of percentage is so wide and so amazing as to baffle all understanding of the reasons.

Eighteenth. The Board found that the State agency has not studied and therefore could not judge the staff needs of the various counties.

Nineteenth. The Board found that while personnel of the county boards was to be based on population and upon the number of people in the county over age 65, that such a standard had never been applied.

Twentieth. The Board found that while the Pension Act has been in operation since early in 1936 and that the Illinois law provided for civil-service examinations, no examinations were held until June 26, 1937, and that prior to this time, the State had made no effort to select employees on the basis of recognized personnel standards. Is this not a polite way of saying that politics and not merit was the determining factor in selecting employees for this important work?

Twenty-first. Of the 39 persons on the State staff to administer this act, the Board found that only 10 had any previous experience in work of this type and only 2 had as much as 3 years' experience in a supervisory or executive capacity. Only 2 persons had special training in this field. Once more, the Social Security Board in so many words indicates that this work has been handled by persons who had no special fitness for the job. Considering that $16,000,000 has been expended, of which $1,317,111 was for administrative expenses, is it not apparent that the old folks of Illinois have been and are being sacrificed upon the altar of politics?

Twenty-second. Regulation no. 24, which was adopted by the State agency on June 30, 1936, provided for a fair hearing to any person in any case where the State agency reviewed the decision of a county board and then reversed the county board's decision or changed the amount of the pension. On January 26, 1937, the State agency adopted a revised regulation which, according to the findings of the Social Security Board, does not offer an opportunity for a fair hearing. Was the original regulation no. 24 adopted to get by the Social Security Board at Washington and then changed to fool the old folks and deny them a fair hearing? What other interpretation can be placed upon this finding? Since there were 12,485 original applications pending for pensions in the State agency as of June 30, 1937, together with 15,934 requests for changes of awards, the Social Security Board concludes that 28,419 aged persons in Illinois under the present practice will not be entitled to a fair hearing. This is a most startling finding. In so many words, in this land of the free and the home of the brave, under an act that was meant for their welfare more than 28,000 aged persons cannot receive a fair hearing on review. They will be interested to know it.

Twenty-third. In the matter of keeping records, the Social Security Board found that in 2,000 cases awards have been paid regularly since July 1, 1936, in amounts which are not authorized by the certificate of award.

There are many other criticisms in the findings, and in pursuance of these criticisms the Social Security Board concludes that there has been substantial failure in the administration and supervision of the law by the State agency, that there has been substantial failure in providing a fair hearing where a claim for a pension was denied, there has been substantial failure in keeping the kind of records required by the Social Security Act, and that as a result of such substantial failure to comply with the terms of the Social Security Act, no further Federal payments will be made to the State of Illinois until the Social Security Board is satisfied that the State agency is complying with the law.

Thus are the aged people of Illinois sacrificed upon the altar of maladministration of an act that was intended for them and for their benefit. Incidentally, the State of Illinois is the only one that enjoys this distinction of such complete failure to abide by the provisions of the Social Security Act. From this courageous action on the part of the Social Security Board will come a revision of methods, and a forthright compliance with the Federal act as will redound to the welfare of the aged people of the State. If not, there will be no more Federal funds, and then the people of Illinois will do something about it.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 4 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object this time, but a few days ago Members got in the habit of asking unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute; then it was 2, then 3, then 4, and now it is 5. There is not a great deal of difference between 5, 6, 7, or 10. I may say that hereafter to requests to address the House for more than 1 minute before the legislative business of the day has been concluded I shall object. I shall not, however, object to this request by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to a remark made on Friday by the gentleman from New York [Mr.

O'CONNOR], when he said that he had no objection to the gentleman's speaking out of order unless he is going to refer to the daily statement of the Treasury Department.

He was referring to me, Mr. Speaker, of calling to the attention of the House of Representatives the perilous condition we are finding ourselves each day, and each succeeding day it is getting worse. It is a serious condition we find the Federal Treasury. O Mr. Speaker, it is more than serious, it is a perilous situation.

I want to say to the Members of the House of Representatives I appreciate the statement that has been made by the chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. O'CONNOR of New York]. He realizes the predicament that the Federal Treasury is in. The gentleman understands a Treasury statement and he knows the sad plight in which we find ourselves at this time. I want to congratulate him on being one of the first on the Democratic side to recognize the position we are placing ourselves in through the report given out by the Treasury of the United States on account of laws passed by this administration and the unbusinesslike manner of spending these fabulous sums—the waste and extravagance that is apparent.

You will find on looking at the July 28 statement that the national debt is $36,707,757,744.94. Since July 28, 1936, we have increased our debt $3,245,000,000. That means that we are in debt $10,111,000,000 more than we were during the wartime high of 1929 and that we have increased our debt over $20,512,000,000 more than we were in 1930.

The statement is made that the depression is over, but you are increasing your average daily expense over $5,000,000 a day more than last year. This is an appalling situation that we find ourselves in, and if we had more Members of the House of Representatives like this genial chairman of the Rules Committee we would be better off. That is what we need in the House of Representatives. He did not want to hear me talk about that, because it is a nightmare to him, but I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you feel we are in danger, and, Mr. Majority Leader, I hope you will get this into your system and realize the predicament on account of an empty Treasury we find ourselves.

The depression is over, it is said, but still we find ourselves in a very perilous situation. Why do you not take means to stop this ruthless expenditure of money? Why do you not do something to protect the Federal Treasury? Why do you not do something to put this Government on a sound financial basis? The first thing you know the greatest wreck will happen to this Nation of any in the world. Mr. Speaker, we must be vigilant and we must stop this ruthless expenditure of money. Mr. Morgenthau, why do you carry a cash balance in the banks of $2,652,595,255 on July 28? If you are not worried about the Treasury, why keep this money in the banks, paying interest on it, when the taxpayers are now overburdened by taxes? This may be the last straw that broke the camel's back. Laws, laws, laws, every law passed carries the expense of administration, bringing more burdens to the overburdened taxpayers. O Mr. Speaker, you should see that this Congress is adjourned sine die at once if the Treasury and the country is to be saved.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PETITION TO DISCHARGE THE RULES COMMITTEE AND THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this session I presented a bill (H. R. 6092) to reduce the rate of interest on home-loan mortgages from 5 and 6 percent now being charged to 3½ percent and to spread the time of payment over 25 years. The Committee on Banking and Currency has given no consideration to this bill.

EVERY MEMBER SHOULD SIGN THE PETITION TO DISCHARGE

I also present House Resolution 266 to make my H. O. L. C. bill a special order of business. This resolution was filed sometime ago, but so far the Rules Committee has not held a hearing on it. It is clear that it is impossible to get any action on my bill or on the resolution making it a special order of business, and therefore this morning I filed a petition to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of House Resolution 266. If this petition is signed by 218 Members of the House, H. R. 6092 will be made a special order of business and the home owner will have a day in court.

The time has come when we must rescue the home owner, and I am asking every Member of Congress to sign the petition which I have filed. It bears no. 26.

CONGRESS SHOULD NOT ADJOURN UNTIL WE HAVE HELPED THE HOME OWNER

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members of Congress will not find it in their hearts to adjourn until they have protected the home owner against the foreclosures now going on. The home is the foundation of this Nation, and it is the duty of Congress to protect the home owner, particularly since the foreclosures are being made by a Government agency.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remarks just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and the remarks he has made on various other occasions, the significance of which we all appreciate, it must be borne in mind, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to bear in mind, that in 1931, under the last Republican administration there was a deficit of $903,000,000. In 1932, which was under the last Republican administration, there was a deficit of $3,153,000,000. In 1933, under the last Republican administration there was a deficit of $3,059,000,000, and the gross national debt increased in the last 3 years of President Hoover's administration from approximately $15,900,000,000 to $22,500,000,000, an increase of over $6,000,000,000, and without one penny being appropriated during those years to relieve human suffering and distress.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and the gentleman knows I must object—I should be very glad if he would change the request.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. To Wednesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; until after the business of the day has been disposed of. All requests for permission to address the House have been based upon that consideration.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That will be entirely agreeable.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and after the disposition of the legislative program in order for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's desk and the completion of the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand this request to mean after the business of Calendar Wednesday is completed?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL TO WILL ROGERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6482, providing for cooperation with the State of Oklahoma in constructing a permanent memorial to Will Rogers.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the Federal Will Rogers Memorial Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), and to be composed of three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States. The members of the Commission shall serve without compensation, but traveling, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in connection with the work of the Commission may be paid from any funds available for expenditure by the Commission. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Commission shall be filled by the President.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000, to be expended by the Commission, in cooperation with the Will Rogers Memorial Commission established by an act of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, and such other agencies, public and private, as the Commission may determine, for the purpose of designing and constructing on a site to be donated by Mrs. Will Rogers, in or near Claremore, Okla., a suitable permanent memorial to the memory of Will Rogers; but no part of the sum herein authorized to be appropriated shall be made available for expenditure until adequate provision has been made for the perpetual care and maintenance, without expense to the United States, of such site and the memorial constructed thereon.

SEC. 7. The Commission shall cease and terminate upon the completion and acceptance by the said Joint Commission of the Will Rogers Memorial as herein provided and the submission to the President of a final report, including an audit of the expenditures of the funds expended as provided herein.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "States", insert "one of whom shall be Mrs. Will Rogers."

Page 2, after line 17, insert the following:

"(a) The Commission named hereunder shall have full power to accept gifts, grants, and donations from whatever source, and such gifts, grants, and donations shall be applied on and reduce the amount of the $500,000 authorized herein to the extent of such gifts, grants, and donations."

Page 3, line 16, strike out "Mrs. Will Rogers" and insert "the Commission."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES BOARD OF AWARDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 171, to create a United States Board of Awards and to provide for the presentation of certain medals.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES GEORGE WASHINGTON INAUGURATION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 366, providing for the preparation and completion of plans for a comprehensive observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate therein.

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. ENGEL, and Mr. HOLMES objected.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4407, authorizing the Five Civilized Tribes, in suits heretofore filed under their original Jurisdictional Acts, to present claims to the United States Court of Claims by amended petitions to conform to the evidence; and authorizing said court to adjudicate such claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original Jurisdictional Acts.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reservng the right to object, I have had this bill up with the General Accounting Office and also the Attorney General. There is considerable merit to the measure, in view of the fact the petitions could not all be filed within the time limit because the General Accounting Office had not submitted its full report to the Attorney General within the time limit.

The bill in its present form, however, is highly objectionable. The Attorney General has prepared a substitute. This substitute is satisfactory, as far as I am concerned. If the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] will agree to substitute the entire bill prepared by the Attorney General, and will also promise that so far as he can control the situation he will insist the Senate not amend the bill when it goes to the Senate, and that if it comes back here with an amendment he will not accept the amendment, I am willing to let the bill be considered.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. To which I agree, and I shall offer such an amendment to conform thereto.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the amendment to which the gentleman has reference provide that set-offs may be taken into consideration?

Mr. COCHRAN. Absolutely. It protects the Government in every way. I want it distinctly understood that if the Senate, as it usually does, strikes out those provisions, when this bill comes back to the House I shall certainly oppose it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Do the claims covered by this bill amount to approximately $20,000,000?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not this bill. This is a different one. This covers a small amount, but the Attorney General has drawn the bill and states he is willing that it be passed, as the Indians could not get their petitions filed within the time limit as prescribed by the original jurisdictional act.

Mr. RICH. Then this is not the same bill for the Five Civilized Tribes that we had up here a couple of weeks ago?

Mr. COCHRAN. No. May I also state to the gentleman that this bill is not going to be amended in the Senate to do the same for all Indian tribes, because the Attorney General specifically states that all cases must stand on their own bottom.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I will agree to that. This is not satisfactory all around, but I will agree to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the consideration of the bill with our present understanding.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object—and, of course, I do not intend to object—I simply want to say that the amendment is reluctantly accepted. I think this is much better than nothing at all, and I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] for cooperating with us.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 1379) authorizing any nation, tribe, or band of Indians, in suits heretofore filed under their original jurisdictional acts, to present claims to the United States Court of Claims by amended petitions at any time before final submission of said suit to conform to the evidence and authorizing the said court to adjudicate such claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts, be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] to offer the substitute amendment to the Senate bill to which the gentleman from Missouri has referred?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Yes; just as soon as given the opportunity.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any suits heretofore filed in the United States Court of Claims by any nation, tribe, or band of Indians, plaintiffs therein, at any time before the final submission of said suits, shall have the right to amend their petitions to conform to any evidence filed in said suits, whether such amended petitions develop original claims or present new claims based upon said evidence; and jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon said Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims which may have been presented by said Indian nations, tribes, or bands in any amended petitions heretofore filed, or which may be filed under the terms of this act; and claims so presented shall be adjudicated by said court upon their merits as though presented by petitions filed within the time limited by said respective original jurisdictional acts, as amended; and any case presenting claims which may have been dismissed upon the ground that new claims were set up by amended petition, after the expiration of the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts, as amended, shall be reinstated and retried by said court on their merits, upon the same pleadings, findings of fact, and under the same law in force when originally tried.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTWRIGHT: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That in suits heretofore filed in the United States Court of Claims by the Five Civilized Tribes under their respective Jurisdictional Acts (Cherokee Nation, act approved Mar. 19, 1924, 43 Stat. 27; Seminole Nation, act approved May 20, 1924, 43 Stat. 133; Creek Nation, act approved May 24, 1924, 43 Stat. 139; Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, act approved June 7, 1924, 43 Stat. 537, as amended by joint resolutions approved May 19, 1926, 44 Stat. 568, and Feb. 19, 1929, 45 Stat. 1229), plaintiffs therein shall have the right, prior to January 1, 1938, to amend their petitions to conform to any evidence heretofore filed in said suits, whether such amended petitions develop original claims or present new claims based upon said evidence; and jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon said Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims which may have been presented by said Indian nations in any amended petitions heretofore filed, or which may be filed under the terms of this act; and claims so presented shall be adjudicated by said court upon their merits as though presented by petition filed within the time limited by said respective original Judisdictional Acts, as amended; and any case presenting claims which may have been dismissed upon the ground that new claims were set up by amended petition, after the expiration of the time limitation fixed in said original Jurisdictional Acts, as amended, shall be reinstated and retried by said court on their merits."

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 4407, introduced by me, and S. 1379, introduced by Senator ELMER THOMAS, have been favorably reported by the unanimous action of both the House and Senate Indian Affairs Committees. The Interior Department has also recommended that the proposed legislation be passed. I feel, however, that I should make a brief synopsis of the report of the Interior Department:

First. The Five Civilized Tribes filed general petitions under jurisdictional acts of 1924 and prayed for a general accounting to be followed by amended petitions.

Second. The time for filing amended petitions expired in 1930, and the reports of the General Accounting Office were not completed and filed until 1934, and amended petitions were filed thereafter.

Third. The Supreme Court has held in the Seminole case (L. 172) that claims set up by amended petitions after 1930 should be dismissed.

Fourth. The proposed legislation authorizes the adjudication of claims set up by amended petitions to conform to the evidence. (General Accounting Office reports filed by the United States.)

The Department of Justice has recommended the legislation with the proposed amendment.

No appropriation of moneys is involved, nor any obligations undertaken by the United States beyond original jurisdictional acts. The Indians are merely guaranteed adjudication of claims, upon their merits, of claims contemplated by original jurisdictional acts.

Permission for amended petitions has been granted in other Indian claims.

Passage of the proposed legislation is fair and just to the Indians because of the long and unavoidable delay in preparation and filing of reports of General Accounting Office, and is in complete harmony with the plans and policies of the United States for an early and final settlement of Indian claims, upon their merits, under original jurisdictional acts.

I sincerely hope no one sees fit to oppose the amendment, and that the bill will then be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the Senate bill (S. 1379) was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the Five Civilized Tribes in suits heretofore filed under their original jurisdictional acts.

to present claims to the United States Court of Claims by amended petitions to conform to the evidence; and to authorize said court to adjudicate said claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts."

PAYMENTS FOR LANDS TAKEN FROM UTE INDIANS, UTAH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4399, authorizing payment for certain lands appropriated by the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF UTE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3162, conferring jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment on any and all claims which the Uncompahgre (Tabegauche), Uintah (Uinta), and White River (Yampa and Grand River) Bands of the Ute Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a substitute for a direct payment from the Treasury.

I have a report from the General Accounting Office stating the bill is in proper form and contains provisions to protect the Government in the way of granting the Government the right to offset the claims by showing the gratuities and advances we have made to the Indians. With this provision in the bill, there is no objection to its consideration so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman will inform us whether provision has been made in the bill to allow set-offs for gratuities previously advanced to the tribe.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes. The General Accounting Office advises me that that is in the bill, but, of course, we will have to watch the bill when it goes to the Senate to see that is not stricken out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If we can get assurance that the bill does not waive the defense of set-offs, I have no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman's attention to section 5 of the bill, which specifically provides for set-offs under the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That brings it within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. And provides for such set-offs; and I will guarantee the gentleman from Missouri there will be no amendments in the Senate.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the United States Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment on all legal and equitable claims of whatsoever nature which the Uncompahgre (Tabegauche), Uintah (Uinta), and White River (Yampa and Grand River) Bands of Ute Indians, or any of said bands, or any constituent band thereof, may have against the United States, including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, claims arising under or growing out of any treaty or agreement of the United States, law of Congress, Executive order, or by reason of any lands taken from them (as to which any of said bands had the possessory right of use and occupancy), without just and full compensation, or for the failure or refusal of the United States to protect the interest of any of said bands in lands (as to which any of said bands had the possessory right of use and occupancy), or because of any mismanagement or wrongful handling of any of the funds, land, property, or business enterprises belonging to or held in trust for any of said bands by the United States, or any misfeasance or nonfeasance on the part of the United States with respect thereto, or otherwise.

SEC. 2. Suit or suits under this act may be instituted by any of the aforesaid bands of Indians (each band to have the right to sue for constituent bands comprising said band), either separately or jointly, as party or parties plaintiff against the United States as party defendant, by filing within 5 years of the enactment of this act its or their petition or petitions in the Court of Claims and serving with respect to each suit, a copy thereof on the Attorney General of the United States who, either in person or by some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, shall appear and defend the interests of the United States. Such petition or petitions shall set forth the facts on which the claim or claims for recovery is or are based and shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said band or bands of Ute Indians, under contracts approved in accordance with existing law, to prosecute said claims, which may be made upon information and belief, and no other verification shall be necessary. Such petition or petitions may, in addition to alleging specific claims, demand a general accounting of all funds and property expended or used by the United States for it or their account, in which event the General Accounting Office or its successor shall within 1 year from the time of filing said petition make a complete audit of said accounts and deliver a copy thereof to each plaintiff and each member of the court, and the court, after full hearing, shall state the account, and render judgment in accordance therewith.

SEC. 3. At the trial of any suit instituted hereunder the court shall apply as respects the United States the same principles of law as would be applied to an ordinary fiduciary and shall settle and determine the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of said bands of Ute Indians against the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time, statutes of limitation, releases prompted by fraudulent representations or not predicated on fair and just compensation, or the nonpresentment of any claim to any tribunal, including the commission created by the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. 631).

SEC. 4. The court shall have authority, by proper orders and process, to make parties to any suit or suits instituted hereunder any other tribe, band, or group of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to a final determination of the matters in controversy.

SEC. 5. No payment or payments which have been made by the United States upon any claim or claims asserted in any suit brought hereunder or expended for any of the aforesaid bands of Ute Indians or members thereof shall apply as an estoppel against any suit brought hereunder, but there shall be set off against any recovery obtained by any band of said Indians hereunder, any payment made by the United States or any claim asserted by said band and such gratuity expenditures made by the United States for the benefit of said band as are directed to be set off by the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935 (Public, No. 270, 74th Cong.)

SEC. 6. If the court shall find that any lands formerly belonging to the said bands of Ute Indians or any of them, or as to which they or any of them had the possessory right of use and occupancy, have been taken by the United States without compensation therefor and set apart and reserved as national reservations or for other public uses or otherwise classified, reserved, or withdrawn from entry and sale under the public land laws or disposed of in any manner whereby the said Indians have been deprived of the use or benefits of such lands and the natural resources thereof, it is hereby declared that such action shall be sufficient grounds for equitable relief and the court shall render judgment in favor of said Indians, and shall award to them, as for a taking under the power of eminent domain, just and full compensation for all such lands and natural resources.

SEC. 7. In any suit instituted hereunder, any letter, paper, document, map, or record in the possession of any officer or department of the United States (or certified copy thereof) may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government of the United States shall give full and free access to the attorneys for any of said bands of Indians to such letters, papers, documents, or records as may be useful to said attorney or attorneys in the preparation for trial or trials of such suits and shall afford facilities for the examination of the same and the making of copies thereof.

SEC. 8. Upon the final determination of any suit, cause, or action instituted hereunder, whether by judgment, compromise, or otherwise, the Court of Claims, in the event of success by any plaintiff, or in the event any claim asserted by any of said bands of Indians shall be compromised or settled without the institution of any suit hereunder, the Secretary of the Interior, shall decree that there shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said plaintiff under contracts negotiated or entered into as provided by existing law, such fees as, based upon a quantum meruit, and taking into consideration the fact that no fees are to be paid unless the result is successful to the plaintiff, it or he shall find reasonable. In no case shall the fees decreed by said Court of Claims and/or by the Secretary of the Interior be in excess of the amount stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be paid upon money being appropriated for the benefit of any bands of Ute Indians pursuant to any judgment or settlement hereunder whether distributable thereto or not. All necessary and actual expenses incurred by the attorney or attorneys so employed, including court costs, bills for printing required by law or court rules, the surveying and appraisal of lands, the auditing and tabulation of accounts, the travel and subsistence of said attorney or attorneys and his or their employees while engaged in the preparation and prosecution of said suit or suits, securing and taking evidence deemed material therein, the compensation of stenographers and such clerical assistance as shall be reasonably employed solely upon work in connection therewith, fees or commissions of notaries public or commissioners, and any other expenses reasonably necessary for the preparation of trial or prosecution of any suit or suits shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, when approved by him, from time to time, as the same shall accrue, out of the funds standing to the credit of any of said bands for whose account said expenditures are made, upon verified accounts submitted in such form as may be required by the Secretary of the Interior and without regard to the outcome or success of said suit or action against the United States.

SEC. 9. The net amount of any judgment recovered shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from date of judgment or settlement and shall, thereafter, be subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building homes, and no part of said judgment, without further legislation, shall be paid out in per-capita payments to said Indians.

SAFETY OF EMPLOYEES ON RAILROADS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 29) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to install, inspect, test, repair, and maintain block-signal systems, interlocking, automatic train-stop, train-control, cab-signal devices, and other appliances, methods, and systems intended to promote the safety of railroad operation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. When this bill came up on the 19th, owing to the absence of the author of the bill, it was passed over without prejudice. A number of us in the House believe that this bill is of such a serious nature that it ought not to be taken up on the Consent Calendar. I notice that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] is present, and I shall object to it or ask that it go over without prejudice, just as he says.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HARLAN. I am.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the other body has not only passed this bill, but has passed the train-limit bill. The House Committee on Interstate Commerce has held hearings and favorably reported the signal bill. I would like to see favorable action on at least one of these bills. Both of them ought to be passed. I get rather restive under the situation existing that the other body has to take the initiative in all of this legislation. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman whether he knows of anyone who can tell us what the cost of this is going to be? There is nothing in the evidence that would show what the cost of this new equipment is going to be to the railroad. The chairman has asked that the bill go over without prejudice. I hope when he brings it up next he will be able to give us something definite on that matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to pass the bill over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT TAXES

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement upon the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

CONSENT CALENDAR

ASSIGNMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS TO THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7216) to provide for the assignment of officers of the Navy for duty under the Department of Commerce and appointment to positions therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PAYMENT TO OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 670) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of their lands sold by the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL MARKETING AGREEMENT ACT OF 1937

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2147) to amend provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(k) Section 8c (2) is amended by inserting after the words 'except the products of naval stores' the words 'and the products of honeybees' and after 'soybeans' the following: ', honeybees' ".

"(l) Section 8c (6) is amended by inserting after 'soybeans and their products', the following: 'honeybees,'."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PAYMENT TO SAN CARLOS APACHE INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1231) authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to call attention to the fact that this bill has twice passed the Senate, has twice been reported out favorably by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and has failed in the House last year because of lack of opportunity to have it considered. It is a meritorious bill, and I fear the same fate will now wipe it out. Further than that, I am glad to have it come up at the next call of the calendar. Let me call attention to this fact that any money appropriated in this bill will be justice to these Indians, while at the same time this sum will decrease the annual appropriation for these Indians next year by that same amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2014) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes", approved May 30, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We passed this bill over without prejudice 2 weeks ago on the assumption that there might be a waiver of the prohibition in the original act against the spending of money for the development of the Everglades National Park for 5 years.

I understand that the only purpose of this bill is to allow a Civilian Conservation Corps camp to be maintained in the Everglades, because the Comptroller General has found that the expenditure of money in the maintenance of the C. C. C. camps comes within the prohibition of the original act.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman is right.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say I have no objection to the bill if that is the sole purpose, but if it is a total waiver of the prohibition against the use of Federal moneys for the development of the park otherwise, I think we should object to it, because it is just a matter of getting the camel's nose under the tent.

Mr. WILCOX. May I point out to the gentleman, I want to be perfectly fair about it, the primary object, of course, is to permit the immediate establishment of C. C. C. camps in this area. This is quite a large area, as the gentleman will recall. At the time the bill was passed considerable fear was expressed that I might come back and ask for a large appropriation immediately for the development of this area. I assured the House that I had no such intention, and this provision was put into the bill that no Federal funds should be spent within that area for a period of 5 years. Three years and 2 months of that time have now expired. The ruling of the Comptroller General is that the Federal Government may not spend any money whatsoever in that area either for the maintenance of C. C. C. camps or otherwise.

It happens that the Federal Government itself owns quite a large area in this proposed park area. That land has been subject to fires—muck fires and forest fires—and under the ruling of the Comptroller General, the Federal Government cannot take any steps to prevent the destruction of its own property in this area. In addition to that, the Bureau of Fisheries has desired to carry on certain propagation work in connection with fish and other marine life. Under this prohibition in the bill that may not be done. I can say to the gentleman that there is no intention whatsoever to ask for a Federal appropriation insofar as this area is concerned. The bill provides that the people of Florida must give the area to the Government free of charge. That has not yet been done, and, of course, the Federal Government could not make an appropriation for that area until after it had been accepted, which undoubtedly will be more than the 5-year period specified in the bill. But I would not limit it to a C. C. C. camp. There are other activities, such as the mapping of the Government's own land. There are certain fire-prevention measures and certain conservation measures. The Department of the Interior is very anxious to have the bill in order that the Government may carry on these necessary activities in the area. There is no appropriation contemplated or asked for at this time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Secretary of the Interior, in reporting on the bill, has this to say, quoting from a letter to him by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget:

> I understand that the purpose of this amendment to the Everglades National Park Act is to permit the location of Civilian Conservation camps in this area and that it does not contemplate the expenditure in the area within the 5-year period of any other Federal funds for any other purpose.

Mr. WILCOX. The Secretary did not go quite far enough. The reason I mentioned these other activities is that I do not want to be guilty of a breach of faith with the gentleman.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And I want to be fair with the gentleman, and we all do. We do not want to prevent protection of the park——

Mr. WILCOX. Well, that is the object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And keeping it in status quo until the Government or the Congress determines that it can start upon a program of development.

Mr. WILCOX. That is the object. May I interrupt the gentleman to say this: That I will assure the House that no appropriation of Federal funds is in contemplation and that none will be asked for prior to May 30, 1939, the date when the 5-year period expires.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I suggest to the gentleman that he might amend the act? Where the act reads "that the United States shall not expend any public moneys for the administration, protection, or development of the foresaid park within a period of 5 years from the date of the approval of this act" the gentleman might offer an amendment striking out the word "protection."

Mr. WILCOX. No; "protection" is necessary.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then it might read:

> That nothing in this act contained shall prevent the establishment of C. C. C. camps or the expenditure by the Bureau of Fisheries under annual appropriation for the maintenance of that Bureau within this park area.

I think it would accomplish the gentleman's purpose and give the Congress assurance that there was not going to be any demand made to develop the park at a large expense until 1939.

Mr. WILCOX. May I say to the gentleman that no money could be spent for its development, except by appropriation by Congress. The trouble about trying to limit it is that we might leave out some necessary activity of the Government on its own land.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let us have this definite understanding, that it is not the gentleman's intention to ask this Congress for any appropriation for the development of the park, other than through the C. C. C., and the maintenance of the park in status quo until the expiration of the 5-year period.

Mr. WILCOX. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. With that understanding, I will have no objection to the bill.

Mr. WILCOX. That is absolutely correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes", approved May 30, 1934, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking therefrom the following words: "And provided further, That the United States shall not expend any public moneys for the administration, protection, or development of the aforesaid park within a period of 5 years from the date of approval of this act."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN NATIONAL PARK AND FORT M'HENRY NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4070, to change the designations of the Abraham Lincoln National Park, in the State of Kentucky, and the Fort McHenry National Park, in the State of Maryland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would someone on the committee enlighten the House as to what names it is proposed to change the present names of these parks?

Mr. COSTELLO. I may state to the gentleman from Michigan that it is my understanding they wish to change these parks to national monuments; in other words, the area in the existing Fort McHenry National Park is very small. It is merely a memorial. It is simply to change these from national parks to national monuments. A national monument simply denotes a limited area.

Mr. DONDERO. The bill does not have for its purpose changing the name Lincoln in Lincoln National Park?

Mr. COSTELLO. I am not a member of the committee, but my understanding is that the change in that instance would be merely from Abraham Lincoln National Park to Abraham Lincoln National Monument.

Mr. DONDERO. Had there been any intention to change the name of Lincoln I would object, but I will not object if the change is merely from "park" to "monument."

Mr. PALMISANO. The word "Lincoln" is not in there now.

Mr. DONDERO. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. COSTELLO. The bill reads that these areas shall hereafter be called and known as the Abraham Lincoln National Monument and the Fort McHenry National Monument, respectively. The only change is striking out "National Park" and inserting in lieu thereof "National Monument."

Mr. MAY. In other words, you strike out the word "Park" and insert the word "Monument"?

Mr. COSTELLO. The bill strikes out the words "National Park" and inserts the words "National Monument."

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Fort McHenry National Park consists of 43 acres of land. To call it a monument would be a misnomer. I seriously object to the consideration of the bill. There has been no hearing before the Committee on Public Lands, no opportunity afforded for a hearing. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. May I inquire of the gentleman from California what prompted this change?

Mr. PALMISANO. I do not know. We are objecting to it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. PALMISANO, Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, and Mr. GAMBRILL objected.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Federal Trade Commission, together with a statement of how the Federal Trade Commission has decided certain cases involving the recent amendment to the Clayton Act, known as the Robinson-Patman Act. I have a statement from the United States Government Printing Office to the effect that it amounts to 2½ pages more than I would ordinarily be privileged to place in the RECORD under an extension of remarks, but I ask permission to insert it, notwithstanding the statement from the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

ACCEPTANCE OF CERTAIN UTAH LAND

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4186, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 1129) may be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States a deed of reconveyance from the State of Utah of all of section 2, township 12 south, range 19 east, Salt Lake meridian, Utah, when accompanied by evidence showing unencumbered title in said State, and in exchange therefor the Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to patent to the State of Utah other vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved public land, whether mineral or nonmineral in character, of approximately equal area and value, to be used for the same purpose for which the lands so reconveyed were granted, and to be subject to the same conditions and limitations which applied to said reconveyed lands.

SEC. 2. That upon issuance of patent to the State for the land selected in exchange, the land reconveyed shall become a part of naval oil shale reserve no. 2, Utah no. 1, for the exclusive use or benefit of the United States Navy.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, in order to make the Senate bill identical with the House bill I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 2, line 3, after the word "equal" strike out the words "area and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a House bill (H. R. 4186) were laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD LAWS, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5592, to amend an act entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved May 14, 1898 (30 Stat. 409, 414).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of an act entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes", be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "and may permit such use by churches, hospitals, and charitable institutions in Alaska for firewood, fencing, buildings, and for domestic purposes."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL MONUMENT, CAMP MERRITT, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 71, to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of Camp Merritt, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the author explain the bill to the House? I notice that section 3 reads:

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. KENNEY. We can acquire a considerable amount of land at very little money. It should not exceed thirty to forty thousand dollars.

Mr. RICH. Does that come out of the Treasury right now?

Mr. KENNEY. Not at this time. This bill simply authorizes the Secretary to take as much of the park as in his judgment is reasonable in order to set up this monument.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman know that is the fact? Has the Secretary an option on this property?

Mr. KENNEY. Not exactly that, but there is property which can be purchased at a reasonable amount.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice. The gentleman can in the meantime find out the actual cost before the bill is brought up for consideration again.

Mr. KENNEY. I may say to the gentleman it would not exceed $40,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

SAN JUAN NATIONAL MONUMENT (PUERTO RICO)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7487, to establish the San Juan National Monument, P. R., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXCEPTION OF YACHTS, TUGBOATS, TOWBOATS, AND UNRIGGED VESSELS FROM PROVISIONS OF ACT OF JUNE 25, 1936

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7158, to except yachts, tugs, towboats, and unrigged vessels from certain provisions of the act of June 25, 1936, as amended.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

INCORPORATION OF THE MARINE CORPS LEAGUE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4810, to incorporate the Marine Corps League.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, S. 774, to incorporate the Marine Corps League, may be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the Senate bill identical with the House bill?

Mr. HEALEY. It is identical with the House bill, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, United States Marine Corps, retired, honorary national commandant; Maurice A. Ilich, national commandant; Roy S. Taylor, senior national vice commandant; Kenneth B. Collings, junior national vice commandant; Alexander F. Ormsby, national judge advocate; Rev. John H. Clifford, national chaplain; Edward A. Walker, national sergeant at arms; John B. Hinckley, Jr., national adjutant and paymaster; John E. Brock, national chief of staff, are hereby created a body corporate of the name "Marine Corps League."

SEC. 2. That the purposes of this corporation shall be (a) to preserve the traditions and to promote the interests of the United States Marine Corps; (b) to band those who are now serving in the United States Marine Corps and those who have been honorably discharged from that service together in fellowship that they may effectively promote the ideals of American freedom and democracy; (c) to fit its members for the duties of citizenship and to encourage them to serve as ably as citizens as they have served the Nation under arms; (d) to hold sacred the history and memory of the men who have given their lives to the Nation; (e) to foster love for the principles which they have supported by blood and valor since the founding of the Republic; (f) to maintain true allegiance to American institutions; (g) to create a bond of comradeship between those in service and those who have returned to civil life; (h) to aid voluntarily and to render assistance to all marines and former marines as well as to their widows and orphans; (i) to perpetuate the history of the United States Marine Corps and by fitting acts to observe the anniversaries of historical occasions of peculiar interest to marines.

SEC. 3. That the corporation (a) shall have perpetual succession; (b) may charge and collect membership dues and receive contributions of money or property to be devoted to carrying out the purposes of the organization; (c) may sue or may be sued; (d) may adopt a corporate seal and alter it at pleasure; (e) may adopt and alter bylaws not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States or of any State; (f) may establish and maintain offices for the conduct of its business; (g) may appoint or elect officers and agents; (h) may choose a board of trustees, consisting of not more than 15 persons nor less than 5 persons, to conduct the business and exercise the powers of the corporation; (i) may acquire, by purchase, devise, bequest, gift, or otherwise, and hold, encumber, convey, or otherwise dispose of such real and personal property as may be necessary or appropriate for its corporate purposes; and (j) generally may do any and all lawful acts necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes for which the corporation is created.

SEC. 4. That the corporation shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, transmit to Congress a report of its proceedings and activities for the preceding calendar year, including the full and complete statement of its receipts and expenditures. Such reports shall not be printed as public documents.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 4810) was laid on the table.

EXPERIMENTAL AIR-MAIL SERVICES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7448, to provide for experimental air-mail services to further develop safety, efficiency, and economy, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from New York inform the Members of the House how these experiments are going to be financed? Is the cost going to be paid out of the annual Post Office appropriation?

Mr. MEAD. That is the only method whereby they can be financed, but the revenue derived from these services will enable them to meet all of the costs. For instance, under the terms of this legislation night flying could be initiated between New York and Chicago, carrying only mail and express, with a view to trying out new instruments and equipment for the improvement of night and blind flying. A smaller and more economically operated plane than our regular air-mail ships could be used for this purpose, and perhaps it would entail only one schedule nightly or one schedule weekly. Such an operation could be carried on within the revenues received from the mail and express carried on the flight.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The contract for carrying the mail would cover the cost of the experiments in those cases?

Mr. MEAD. I think so, in every case. For example, the United Air Lines might make a request for one schedule between Chicago and San Francisco to fly the stratosphere in order that they may develop that sort of flying. The carriage of mail and express on that particular schedule might more than cover the cost. If it should not cover the cost, the Department could refuse to permit the operation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am heartily in accord with the purposes of the bill. One of the things I had in mind was that we have constantly loaded up the Post Office Department with subsidies and charged it against the operation of that Department. Air development, marine development, as well as railroad development, have been charged against the Post Office Department, and sometimes the deficit of the Post Office Department is largely made up of these subsidies; so that we are never able to get an accurate estimate of the actual cost of carrying the mail, yet we are constantly striving to balance the budget of the Post Office Department. It was brought out by statements made by the Postmaster General a year or so ago that the budget of the Department was balanced, when all of us knew it was not balanced. We should be able to get an accurate check on it. I would be in favor of making direct appropriation for this purpose, and that is why I asked for the information. I think the gentleman has given it to me. I do not think this bill would cost the Post Office Department enough to justify an objection, if the major cost of this experimental work is to be paid out of the pay given to contractors for carrying the mail.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that the revenues from air mail now approach the cost of the service. The revenues from air mail increased 50 percent in the calendar year 1935 and increased 30 percent again in the calendar year 1936, so we anticipate the revenues this year will approximate the cost of the service.

This bill is merely in the interest of safety and efficiency of operation. In other words, we want to try out new equipment on schedules where passengers are not carried. If the equipment proves its value, then it will be used on passenger-carrying ships. We want to develop aids to safeguard human life by operating a schedule here and there to develop aviation rather than to produce charges against the Treasury.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am pleased the gentleman has brought the bill up. I believe this is a desirable bill, and I think the Congress should grant the au'hority contained in the bill. The only question in my mind is whether it would not be advisable for us to make a direct appropriation for this purpose instead of charging it to the Post Office Department.

Mr. MEAD. That would probably be the better way, but in order to do so we would have to amend the general law and set up the particular agency.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does this bill have anything to do with the companies which bid in air-mail contracts for 1 mill an ounce? Would this bill have the Post Office Department spend a lot of money with the air lines for experimental purposes?

Mr. MEAD. Not at all.

Mr. RICH. Can the gentleman give us any reason why these contracts for carrying the air mail were bid in at 1 mill an ounce?

Mr. MEAD. Those low bids were for the purpose of making it a certainty that the new lines should be captured by companies who foresee a field of future attractive development. In other words, the lines the gentleman has in mind were bid in at ridiculously low prices because the companies realize that after the initial period is over those routes will be part of our permanent system and profitable.

Mr. RICH. When it comes to letting the next contract, how do they know they will be the successful bidders?

Mr. MEAD. There need be no next contract. After the initial 3-year period is over the contract will be extended indefinitely at a rate set by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This compensation is merely for the initial period of operation.

Mr. RICH. If you are not going to have any competition, then is it not a fact that eventually we are going to pay more for our air-mail service simply because we are making contracts in this manner? You and I and everybody knows that it is impossible for the fellow who bids 1 mill an ounce to carry the mail without loss. If he is assured that he is going to have the contracts for a period of years, then eventually the Federal Government is going to lose because of the fact you are making contracts of this character.

Mr. MEAD. Under the existing law the rate is set by the Interstate Commerce Commission after the initial period has expired, only upon a complete audit of the books of the company and a consideration of its revenues from all other sources. Therefore, in no case are the payments to these air-mail contractors really excessive.

Mr. RICH. Then you are trying under the laws to eliminate all competition for air-mail contracts?

Mr. MEAD. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. RICH. That is what you are doing here. You are giving an extension for an unlimited period of time.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. Does not the Department have under general law all the authority necessary to conduct experimental flights or transport mail exclusively by plane?

Mr. MEAD. Under a strict interpretation, no; but perhaps under a liberal interpretation of the law they would have such authority.

Mr. HOLMES. As a matter of fact, we have pending here general legislation which covers the entire field of aviation.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOLMES. This proposed legislation covers the carriage of passengers, mail, and express. Pending the passage of such legislation, does the gentleman think it is advisable to set up additional boards or bureaus within the Post Office Department to continue further experimentation?

Mr. MEAD. No; we are not going to do that.

Mr. HOLMES. When the Department of Commerce under the proposed legislation will have the administration of all the safety devices, and so forth, in connection with such operations?

Mr. MEAD. They will under this bill also.

Mr. HOLMES. It seems to me we should not take this step today before we consider the general aviation control bill placing jurisdiction in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which, after the enactment of the bill, in connection with the Post Office Department and the Department of Commerce, can lay out a comprehensive and well-thought-out program covering all of our future aviation operations, including passenger, express, and mail services.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman I have my doubts that the Congress of the United States will ever pass that bill, because if it is passed it will break down every restriction in existing air-mail legislation. It will wipe out the restrictions with regard to holding companies and interlocking directorates as well as the ownership by certain lines of other lines, and it will give to a commission in the Government more power than I am willing to delegate. I think if that bill comes to a vote in this Chamber and in the other Chamber it will be overwhelmingly defeated, because it will create a condition similar to that which led to cancelation of the air-mail contracts, and we do not want a condition like that to exist again. There is no possibility of our anticipating that law, however, and the bill before us will merely allow experiments in aviation which may save human life, without any cost to the Government.

Mr. HOLMES. I appreciate the gentleman's views on the pending legislation.

Mr. MEAD. If this bill passes and the gentleman's bill becomes law, this bill will become a part of that law, and we will have the experience resulting from the operations authorized hereunder.

Mr. HOLMES. May I say to the gentleman I am not opposed to this measure, because I believe that in all probability it is good legislation, but at the same time there is a question in my mind whether, pending the consideration of the general legislation, we should set up further bureaus or boards to do any experimental work in the aviation field.

Mr. MEAD. There will be no bureau or anything of that kind set up under this bill.

Mr. HOLMES. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized, under such appropriate rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for and supervise experimental services in connection with the transportation of mail by air, with the object of further developing safety, efficiency, and economy in air-mail transportation, collection, and delivery. The Postmaster General shall procure any such proposed service by contract with the lowest acceptable and responsible bidder. The provisions of section 13 (relating to pay and working conditions and relations of pilots and other employees) of the Air Mail Act of 1934, approved June 12, 1934, as amended, shall apply to all contracts awarded under this act.

SEC. 2. (a) The Postmaster General shall report to Congress as soon as practicable the final results of experimental services conducted under this act, together with his recommendations for legislation to establish on a permanent basis any such services ascertained to be essential or useful in carrying out the object of this act. He may from time to time make preliminary reports and recommendations to Congress whenever definite conclusions are reached in respect of any such service.

(b) A sum not to exceed $100,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the provisions of this act.

(c) The authority conferred by this act shall terminate on June 30, 1938.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "air", insert "including the transportation of mail by autogiro aircraft shuttle service between outlying airports and central city areas."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "bidder", insert the following: "Such contracts and operations thereunder shall be subject to such requirements relating to safety, technical functions, qualifications of aircraft and airmen, and matters connected therewith as the Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe in accordance with the authority vested in him under the Air Commerce Act of 1926, as amended."

Page 2, line 12, strike out "(a)."

Page 2, beginning in line 21, strike out down to and including line 25.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF ALLOTMENTS TO KLAMATH INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5974, to authorize payments in lieu of allotments to certain Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon, and to regulate inheritance of restricted property within the Klamath Reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this act, the term "Klamath Tribe" includes the members of the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and the Yahooskin Band of Snakes and all other Indians having rights on the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon.

SEC. 2. Each enrolled member of the Klamath Tribe living on the date of the enactment of this act who has not received an allotment of land shall be paid the sum of $1,500 from unobligated Klamath tribal funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, in installments of not to exceed $300 per annum: Provided, That no member of the Klamath Tribe having rights on the Klamath Indian Reservation, but not enrolled, living on the date of the enactment of this act who shall be enrolled after 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act shall receive a payment in lieu of allotment. No member of the Klamath Tribe born after the date of the enactment of this act shall be entitled to receive any allotment of land or money payment in lieu thereof.

SEC. 3. The payments herein authorized shall be deposited to the credit of the individual Indian money accounts of such Indians subject to expenditure by such Indians, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for (1) industrial and agricultural assistance, and the construction and improvement of homes, including the purchase of land and interests in land, building material, farming equipment, industrial equipment, trucks, livestock, feed, food, seed, tools, machinery, implements, household goods, bedding, clothing, and any other equipment or supplies necessary to enable the Indians to fit themselves for or to engage in the farming, livestock industry, or such other industrial or agricultural pursuits or avocations as will enable them to become self-supporting; (2) the educational advancement of such Indians; (3) financial assistance in cases of illness, death, or other emergency; (4) the repayment of reimbursable debts previously contracted; or (5) security for or the repayment of loans made to such Indians from any Klamath revolving loan fund now existent or which shall hereafter be created.

SEC. 4. In the event of the death of any such Indian entitled to receive a payment in lieu of allotment after the date of the enactment of this act, the unexpended balance of such payment remaining to the credit of such Indian shall first be applied to the repayment of any loans received by such Indian from the United States or from the Klamath tribal funds, and the balance thereafter shall be distributed as personal property.

SEC. 5. Hereafter only enrolled members of the Klamath Tribe of not less than one-sixteenth degree Indian blood of the Klamath Tribe shall inherit or take by devise any restricted or trust property within the Klamath Reservation: Provided, That the surviving spouse shall be entitled to the use of one-half part during his or her natural life of all the land included in any such property whereof the decedent was seized of an estate of inheritance at any time during coverture.

SEC. 6. If any enrolled member of the Klamath Tribe dies without lawful heirs or devisees, all interest which such member has in any restricted or trust property within the Klamath Reservation shall revert to and become part of the common tribal property.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 2, line 6, strike the sentence beginning with the word "That", on said line, all of lines 7, 8, 9, down to and including the word "allotment", in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That no member of the Klamath Tribe who shall not be enrolled within 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act shall receive a payment in lieu of allotment."

On page 3, lines 11 and 12, strike the words "the unexpended balance of such payment remaining to the credit of such Indian" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "any unexpended balance of said $1,500 still due the decedent."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REVOLVING LOAN FUND FOR KLAMATH INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5976, authorizing the establishment of a revolving loan fund for the Klamath Indians, Oregon, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to establish, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Klamath Reservation in Oregon, a capital reserve fund for such Klamath Indians, and to set aside each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year 1937, the sum of $50,000, said capital reserve fund to be held in the Treasury of the United States and to bear interest in accordance with existing law: Provided, That the interest accruing annually upon said fund shall be used, insofar as it is sufficient, for the payment of the expenses of administration of the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to establish a reimbursable loan fund, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon, from which loans may be made to enrolled Indians of the said reservation for industrial and agricultural assistance, or for the construction and improvement of homes, including the purchase of land and interests in land, building material, farming equipment, industrial equipment, trucks, livestock, feed, food, seed, tools, machinery, implements, household goods, bedding, clothing, or any other equipment or supplies necessary to enable such Indians to fit themselves for or to engage in farming, livestock industry, or such other industrial or agricultural pursuits or avocations as will enable them to become self-supporting; for the educational advancement of such Indians; for financial assistance in cases of illness, death, or other emergency; for the maintenance and support of the aged, infirm, or incapacitated members of said Klamath Indian Reservation; or for the repayment of reimbursable loans previously had by such Indians from tribal funds: Provided, That $100,000 shall be set aside for such purpose during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and that $50,000 additional shall be set aside for said purpose during each of the next three succeeding fiscal years: Provided further, That in addition to the foregoing the Secretary of the Interior shall immediately set aside for such purpose the unexpended balance of any funds heretofore appropriated or authorized to be used for the establishment of reimbursable loan funds for industrial assistance, or for any other purpose, out of the Klamath tribal funds.

SEC. 3. The reimbursable loan fund provided for in section 2 hereof shall be administered by a loan board composed of enrolled members of the Klamath Reservation, of not to exceed five members, under and subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the expense of administering this fund, including a per diem for members of the loan board as authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid from said loan fund. After the fiscal year 1939 the aforesaid expenses of administration shall not exceed the amount annually received from service fees, surcharges, and interest paid in on loans.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of providing adequate security for any loans made from the revolving reimbursable loan fund provided for in section 2 hereof, the Indians of the Klamath Reservation are hereby authorized, in addition to any unrestricted real or personal property owned by them, to include in the securities offered therefor any lands, interest in lands, rights, funds, future per-capita payments or other distributions of tribal assets, or other property, real, personal, or mixed, of any nature belonging to individual Indians of said Klamath Reservation, whatsoever, heretofore regarded or classed as trust or restricted Indian property.

SEC. 5. All repayments made upon any loans made from the reimbursable loan fund herein provided for and all repayments made upon any loans made from reimbursable loan funds for industrial assistance or for other purposes heretofore established out of Klamath tribal funds, and all interest, surcharges, and service fees paid upon such described loans, shall be credited to the reimbursable loan fund herein provided for and shall become available for the purposes herein authorized.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be established on the books of the Treasury, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Indians of the Klamath Reservation in Oregon (hereinafter referred to as the "Klamath Indians") on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, a capital reserve fund for said Klamath Indians. Such fund shall be created by setting aside the sum of $50,000 for the fiscal year 1937, and shall be augumented by additions of $50,000 for each fiscal year hereafter. Such fund shall be held in the Treasury of the United States and shall bear interest as provided by law. The interest upon such fund shall be used, insofar as it is sufficient, for the payment of the expenses of administration of the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be established on the books of the Treasury, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Klamath Indians on deposit in the Treasury, a reimbursable loan fund from which loans may be made to enrolled Klamath Indians for industrial and agricultural assistance and the construction and improvement of homes (including the purchase of land and interests in land, building material, farming equipment, industrial equipment, trucks, livestock, feed, food, seed, tools, machinery, implements, household goods, bedding, clothing, or any other equipment or supplies necessary to enable such Indians to fit themselves for or to engage in farming, the livestock industry, or such other industrial or agricultural pursuits or avocations as will enable them to become self-supporting); for the educational advancement of such Indians; for financial assistance in cases of illness, death, or other emergency; for the maintenance and support of the aged, infirm, and incapacitated Klamath Indians; and for the repayment of reimbursable loans previously made to such Indians from tribal funds. For the establishment of such loan fund, the Secretary of the Interior shall immediately set aside the unexpended balance of any funds heretofore appropriated or authorized to be used out of the tribal funds of the Klamath Indians for the establishment of reimbursable loan funds for industrial assistance or for any other purpose; and in addition thereto, out of any unobligated tribal funds, $100,000 shall be set aside for the fiscal year 1938 and $50,000 for each of the next 3 fiscal years.

"SEC. 3. The reimbursable loan fund provided for in section 2 hereof shall be administered under and subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, by a loan board composed of Klamath Indians of not to exceed five members: Provided, That the expenses of administering such fund, including such per diem for members of the loan board as may be authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid from such loan fund. After the fiscal year 1939 the aforesaid expenses of administration shall not exceed the amount received from service fees, surcharges, and interest paid in on loans.

"SEC. 4. For the purpose of providing adequate security for any loans made from the revolving reimbursable loan fund provided for in section 2 hereof, the Klamath Indians are hereby authorized to include in the securities offered therefor, in addition to any unrestricted real or personal property owned by them, any lands, interest in lands, rights, funds, future per-capita payments and other distributions of tribal assets, and other property, real, personal, or mixed, of any nature whatsoever, belonging to individual Klamath Indians, heretofore regarded or classed as trust or restricted Indian property.

"SEC. 5. All repayments made upon any loans made from the reimbursable loan fund herein provided for, all repayments made upon any loans made from reimbursable loan funds for industrial assistance or for other purposes heretofore established out of Klamath tribal funds, and all interest, surcharges, and service fees paid upon any such loans, shall be credited to the reimbursable loan fund herein provided for and shall become available for the purposes herein authorized.

"SEC. 6. The amounts which the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be added to the capital and loan funds established at his direction under the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act during each fiscal year shall not exceed the amount of unobligated Klamath tribal funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States available for that purpose."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PER-DIEM PAYMENTS FOR KLAMATH DELEGATES

The clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5975, establishing per-diem payments in lieu of compensation and expenses for members of Klamath business committee and official Klamath delegates to Washington.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like for some one to explain this bill.

In the Interior Department appropriation bill we appropriated money to the Indian Bureau for purposes similar to this, and I cannot understand why we should have a bill of this kind before us at the present time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This money comes out of the tribal funds and is used to have their representatives protect their interests down here.

Mr. RICH. But you have an Indian Bureau to look after the Indians, and now you are going to pass a bill permitting the Indians to spend their own money to come down here and fight their own Indian Bureau.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I feel sure the gentleman knows enough about the Indian Bureau to know that this Indian tribe ought to have a few representatives here, does he not?

Mr. RICH. That may be true, but that is something that should be done in connection with the Indian Bureau. If you do not like your own Indian Bureau you ought to change it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Some of us are trying to do that. I think the gentleman ought to let this bill pass because it is to protect the Indians.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. This bill simply allows the Klamath Indians to pay their own men who come here to represent them and this is not paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. RICH. But the gentleman understands that all of these Indian tribes are pretty soon going to be bankrupt. You are now permitting them to spend their own money and then when they have spent all of their money you are going to ask the Federal Government to meet these expenses.

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, no; this is one of the richest tribes of Indians in the United States. They own one of the finest bodies of timber in the United States. It is a large body of Ponderosa pine, and they have ample money.

Mr. RICH. Is it not the purpose of the Indian Bureau now to have the Indians preserve the things that belong to them?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; and I think they are doing exactly that.

Mr. RICH. Then why do you want these Indians to come down here and fight the Indian Bureau?

Mr. PIERCE. We are not fighting the Indian Bureau. The two bills just passed by the House are bills looking to the preservation of their property. One bill was for the creation of a revolving fund and the one just passed provides for an allotment to certain of these Indians. This is all with the purpose of taking care of their property.

Mr. RICH. You gentlemen know more about Indian affairs than I do, but I believe that if you keep on permitting them to spend their money, the time will come when they will be asking to have the money come from the Federal Treasury.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Klamath Indians in the Treasury of the United States, to official delegates of that tribe, whenever on business at the seat of government, and to members of the business committee and officers of the general council of said tribe when ever actually engaged upon tribal business, a per diem to be approved by the tribal council of said tribe, or its authorized business committee, not however to exceed $8, in lieu of all other compensation and expenses: Provided, That official delegates of the tribe on business at the seat of government shall also receive the usual railroad transportation to and from the seat of government, which the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized and directed to pay, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Klamath Indians in the Treasury of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior or such official as may be designated by him is hereby authorized beginning July 1, 1937, to pay, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Klamath Indians in the Treasury of the United States, to members of the business committee, and to officers of the general council when engaged on business of the tribe, and to such official delegates who may carry on the business of the tribe at the seat of government, a per diem not to exceed $8 in lieu of all other compensation and expenses: Provided, That the official delegates of the tribe on business at the seat of government shall also receive the usual railroad and sleeping-car transportation to and from the seat of government: Provided further, That the rate of per diem paid not to exceed $8 shall be approved in advance by the tribal council of said tribe or its authorized business committee: Provided further, That the length of stay of the official delegates at the seat of government shall be determined and fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Washington to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 23, strike out "$8" and insert in lieu thereof "$5 for expenses and $3 for salary."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3149) for the relief of the postal employees.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter when a substitute in any branch of the Postal Service is injured while engaged in the performance of official duties the number of days he may be disabled from performing substitute service as a result of such injury shall be regarded, in computing his time credit for promotion purposes, as having been employed in the performance of official duties.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ALASKAN AIR-MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6167) to provide a surcharge on certain air mail carried in Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman from Alaska please tell us about this surcharge? Is this going to bring money back into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes. If this bill is passed it will result in increment to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. RICH. Then, for goodness sake, let us pass the bill.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, as will be observed from the committee report, the only change proposed to be made by the bill in the law as it exists at present, is contained in the last proviso of the bill wherein the Postmaster General in his discretion is given the authority to fix the postage for mail carried by aircraft to, from, or within Alaska, the rates not exceeding 30 cents per ounce and 15 cents per half ounce.

At the present time Alaska has no air mail in the true sense of the term, although mail is carried by air over a number of star routes in the Territory. The mail is so carried by air because that is the cheapest mode of transporting it during the winter season. On this mail no extra postage is paid, nor should any be paid.

But the people of Alaska are keenly desirous of a true air-mail service, not only between the States and Alaska, but within the Territory. Air mail is needed in Alaska and between Alaska and the States, to an extent that can scarcely be realized by citizens who reside in the States. The lack of roads and railroads in Alaska makes imperative the furnishing of additional facilities for the transportation of mail by air.

The people realize that, on account of limitations of cost, it is not possible to carry all of the mail of all classes between the States and Alaska, and within Alaska through the air. But we urge that the air-mail service be established with a reasonable surcharge for the mail so transported. This would not only give us the advantages of air-mail service but would also give us the facilities of regular scheduled air transport for passengers and express and freight at prices which people could afford to pay. The extension of air mail between the States and Alaska and within Alaska would also inevitably lead to the enlargement of our present air fields and the construction of many new fields in accordance with the plan approved by the Interdepartmental Committee. The citizens of Alaska are fairly and justly entitled to this additional service, and they are quite willing to pay a reasonable amount for the service, thus bringing money into the Federal Treasury.

It is to be observed that the additional power envisaged by the bill will be exercised by the Post Office Department. Knowing the attitude of the officials of that Department with respect to the development of Alaska and their concern to do all within their power to aid in such development, I have not the slightest apprehension in granting to the Department the authority to impose a surcharge in proper cases on mail carried by air, for I am convinced that the authority will be wisely and fairly exercised.

This bill is really a Department bill. As will be observed from the report, it was prepared in the Post Office Department with a recommendation for its enactment. It contemplates that the additional air-mail service will be established at an early date. During the current session of Congress, Mr. Speaker, authorization has been given for the establishment of foreign air-mail service between Juneau, Alaska, White Horse, Yukon Territory, and Fairbanks, Alaska. I much hope that in the next session of Congress, air-mail service will be set up between the United States and Alaska and also within the Territory, so as to serve with air mail every substantial town and city in Alaska.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of February 21, 1925, as amended by the act approved August 24, 1935 (39 U. S. C., 488, 1934 edition), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may provide difficult or emergency mail service in Alaska, at a total annual cost of not exceeding $25,000, including the establishment and equipment of relay stations, in such manner as he may think advisable, without advertising therefor; and he is authorized, in his discretion, to contract, after advertisement in accordance with law, for the carriage of all classes of mail to, from, or within the Territory of Alaska, by airplane, payment therefor to be made from the appropriation for star-route service in Alaska: Provided, That the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may fix the postage for the mails carried, or any part thereof, by aircraft to, from, or within Alaska, at rates not exceeding in any case 30 cents per ounce or 15 cents per half ounce, notwithstanding the domestic air-mail rate authorized by the act of June 12, 1934 (39 U. S. C., 463, 1934 edition)."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out the matter in the parentheses and insert "U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 39, sec. 488."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION, STAR-ROUTE CARRIERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7879) to provide additional compensation to star-route carriers for necessary increased mileage, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire of the genial gentleman from Buffalo [Mr. MEAD], who has charge of all of the mail in this country, for a little more information about this bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that the veto of the President on the original star-route bill was referred to our committee, and we decided it would be better to rewrite the bill rather than to attempt to override the veto of the President. In reporting this new bill we have met the President's objection, because we have retained the competitive bidding features of existing law, whereby the various contractors will have to bid for this service. We have inserted a residential requirement so as to keep out interlopers and carpetbaggers. In addition to that we have provided that if the mileage is increased by reason of a detour, the Post Office Department has the right to raise the compensation in accordance with the terms of the original bid. We also permit the readvertising of routes when changes in schedule are not satisfactory to the contractor.

Mr. RICH. One thing I will say to the gentleman is that he knows they have 3-cent postage. The gentleman says they are trying to balance the budget in the Post Office Department. The gentleman must know that they went in the red in the Post Office Department $88,000,000 last year, and if it were not for the 3-cent postage it would go in the red $188,000,000. If they do not economize soon in the Post Office Department it will be continually coming back here for an increase in money to be had from the United States Treasury, and the gentleman knows that they will never do away with the 3-cent postage without coming back to the Treasury and asking the Treasury to pay the bill. The Post Office Department will not have a balanced budget until it cuts down expenses or increases revenue.

Mr. MEAD. And I say to the gentleman that the Post Office Department reached its all-time peak in revenue.

Mr. RICH. As well as expenses.

Mr. MEAD. No; we have a surplus.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3951 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of August 11, 1876 (amending secs. 246 and 251 of the act of June 8, 1872, U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 39, sec. 434), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"The Postmaster General may, in his discretion, and in the interest of the Postal Service and under such regulations as he may prescribe, allow extra pay to a contractor for necessary increased travel caused by obstruction of roads, destruction of bridges, or discontinuance of ferries occurring during the contract term, but no extra pay allowed shall be proportionately greater than the rate established by the contract involved.

"Where a change in schedule is ordered that will necessitate the contractor being away from the initial terminal an excessively longer period than was required in the advertised schedule, the route may be readvertised if the changed schedule is not acceptable to the contractor; or where a schedule is so changed that will permit the contractor to be away from the initial terminal a substantially shorter period than was required in the advertised schedule, the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, and in the interests of the Postal Service, readvertise the route. Less than 3 hours shall not constitute an excessively longer or substantially shorter period."

SEC. 2. Proposals for carrying the mail on star routes shall not be considered unless the bidder is a legal resident of the county or counties traversed by the roads over which the mails are to be carried, or a legal resident within the counties adjoining such county or counties; except that proposals for carrying the mail tendered by firms, companies, or corporations shall be considered, provided, such firms, companies, or corporations are actually engaged in business within the counties to residence in which individuals are herein restricted.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: Page 2, after line 26, insert:

"SEC. 3. The Postmaster General in advertising for bids for any star route shall publish the estimated actual cost of carrying the route, which estimate shall include a reasonable wage for the carrier. No bid shall be accepted which is more than 10 percent below the estimated actual cost."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary for me to object to that amendment, because that includes in the bill the principle that was objected to in the veto message of the President. Our committee considered it, and we feel that this present legislation is in keeping with the veto message of the President.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New York to make the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. MEAD. Yes, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane. It is writing into the bill a new principle of law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has a right under the rules to offer the amendment. It will require unanimous consent.

Mr. MEAD. I renew my point of order and I ask for a ruling.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill deals with a method of compensating star-route carriers. At the time when a star route is let the Postmaster General publishes the price that the present carrier is getting for transporting the route. My amendment simply provides for the publication of another figure in place of that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN], that the bill deals with the matter of compensation under contracts?

Mr. MEAD. No, Mr. Speaker, I do not, because in the laws that we are attempting to amend and modify there is no principle of supervision set up that will permit of the operation of the principle that the gentleman now espouses. In other words, existing law is based entirely on competition in bidding and its exercise within the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department. The gentleman establishes a new principle, whereby wages or contracts would be established by another commission of the Government. Heretofore there have been no wages paid to these men. In my judgment that principle is not germane to the bill or to the law which this legislation is attempting to modify.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, my amendment will not establish any new commission. It will provide that instead of the present system which, as I think the gentleman from New York will agree, is this, that when the Postmaster General asks for bids on a star route, he publishes the price that the present carrier is getting for that route and all bidders may know what this is. My amendment provides that instead of publishing that figure the Postmaster General shall publish the figure that the carrying of the route is actually worth. It establishes no new commission.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] offers an amendment which has been read at the Clerk's desk, and proposes to incorporate the amendment as a new section to the bill. As the Chair understands the major purpose of the bill now under consideration, it deals with the subject of providing additional compensation for star-route carriers for necessary increased mileage, and for other purposes, and although the bill itself purports only to amend an existing statute, it undertakes in terms to set out certain provisions under which the Postmaster General may let these bids for the carrying of star-route contracts. Although the word "wage" does seem to be mentioned in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that as the bill has been proposed, it is merely an addition to the terms under which the contract shall be let.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the star-route carriers are the only class of people employed by the United States Post Office Department whose wages are not determined on a fair basis. In times gone by we have had unfair wages paid to rural-route carriers. That has been corrected so that they are on a basis of good pay for the mileage they travel. If they perform extra service as they carry their routes, they get extra pay for it. But the wages of star-route carriers are on a basis of unfairness, which I think is something of a shame to the Department. I sympathize with the effort of the Post Office Department to keep down expenses, and I think that Postmaster General Farley and his associates are to be congratulated upon the fact that during the 4 years they have conducted the Post Office Department they have conducted it with a net improvement over the previous 4 years of about $300,000,000; and that is something.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. No. I do not have time just now. If I have time I will yield later.

At the time when the Postmaster General advertises for bids for a star route he publishes the pay that the star-route carrier is then getting, so that everybody who bids knows what the fellow who now has the contract gets for it; and the new bidders bid below that figure. Some bid a little below and some more below, but the practical effect of it is to whittle down the pay, so that the pay of star-route carriers in the United States is little less than a shame, it is so low.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I will yield later if I have time.

I submit my amendment is fair to the Post Office Department and it is almost fair to the star-route carriers. It provides that when a star-route is to be let the Postmaster General, instead of publishing the pay that the star-route carrier is then receiving, he publishes what is fair compensation and figures into that a reasonable wage for the carrier himself, in addition to his other expenses, and it then provides that the Postmaster General shall not accept a bid more than 10 percent under that figure. Now, what is unfair about that? Is it right that the Post Office Department save money on a basis less fair than that?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Due to the increase in business all over the country in the last 4 years the obligations and undertakings of every one of these star-route carriers have multiplied two or three times.

Mr. BIERMANN. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will not the gentleman be jeopardizing this legislation by this amendment? In other words, you might be able to get something for the carriers by letting the bill go as it is now, whereas if you add the amendment it might come back as it did before. Why not take what it appears you can get?

Mr. BIERMANN. I cannot say about that, but I know the star-route carriers' representatives do not care very much for this bill as it is. They would almost as soon have nothing as to have the bill in its present form.

Mr. COLLINS. Under the terms of the gentleman's amendment will the announcement be fixed upon a mileage basis by the Post Office Department or will they merely use existing contract figures?

Mr. BIERMANN. That would be a matter for the Postmaster General to decide. Some routes, of course, have several stops, some have one; some routes have bad roads, some routes have good roads. Factors besides mileage should enter into the calculations.

Mr. COLLINS. But it would be a uniform rate per mile throughout the country?

Mr. BIERMANN. My amendment does not so specify.

Mr. COLLINS. Should not the gentleman's amendment direct that?

Mr. BIERMANN. Perhaps it should. I take it for granted, however, that the Postmaster General would know how to establish the cost of the route at fair compensation to the carrier.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What happened to the veto on the other bill that it was not laid before the House?

Mr. BIERMANN. I cannot inform the gentleman. I refer him to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from Wisconsin, I may say that under the rules it is not necessary for the House to act on every veto message.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I realize that.

Mr. MEAD. The veto message and the bill were referred to the Post Office Committee, and it was the judgment of the committee that this bill now under consideration was the very best answer we could make to that suggestion at this time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In other words, it was the judgment of the committee that it would take out everything to which the President objected in the original bill and the committee reported and brought in this bill? Is that what happened?

Mr. MEAD. The principal reason for the objection of the President was the elimination of competitive bidding. That feature is included in this bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Merely as one Member of the House expressing his opinion, I think that the House should be given an opportunity to express itself upon the competitive-bidding feature.

Mr. MEAD. It was not the judgment of the committee. As its chairman, therefore, I had to report the judgment of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, the recommendation of my good friend from Iowa is meritorious and warrants serious consideration, especially from those of us whose duty it is to prepare postal legislation, but to adopt that amendment would merely invite another veto and would likewise result in great hardship to many of the star-route carriers. For example, as my good friend, Mr. HENDRICKS, a member of the committee, pointed out to me a moment ago, there are many men operating star routes who carry passengers and perhaps express also. They traverse the route every day, and incidentally carry the mails. If we were to determine in advance how much it would cost to furnish the equipment necessary for that trip over a long route and to give the employees on that route a fair wage, it would certainly result either in eliminating that star-route carrier, who makes the most of his revenues from passenger and express service, or in compelling the Department to reject his bid. The only eligibles would be those who furnished their own equipment and did nothing but carry the mails. If that were the case, the Post Office Department could estimate a very low rate of pay based upon the most efficient equipment possible, and that would not be in keeping with the ideas of the contractor at all.

I, for one, am very anxious to improve the condition of the star-route carrier. I think it will be agreed that I have at least in some slight measure improved the conditions of those who work in the Postal Service. But I want to accomplish something in this instance; and, therefore, with the support and backing of my committee, including Republican and Democratic members, I want to send a bill to the Senate and to the White House that will really do something for these lowly paid workers and to make a start at least toward the elevation of their present economic status to a higher plane.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. I appreciate what the gentleman has done for the Postal Service. He has been a great friend of the postal employee and has been a fine chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; but I think he either does not understand my amendment or he misinterprets it.

My amendment merely provides that the minimum wage shall be the reasonable cost for transporting the mails over the route. I do not think any Member of this Congress would want any employee of the Government to receive less than a reasonable price for doing his job. We ought not to save Government money by cutting below that figure.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I would like to yield, but cannot for the moment. Answering the gentleman from Iowa, I may say that there are so many different kinds of bidders and competitors in the Star Route Service that it would result in nothing if we adopted the gentleman's amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, having been granted permission to extend my remarks, I insert the following explanations of the four postal bills considered on the Consent Calendar today:

EXPLANATION OF H. R. 7448, A BILL TO PROVIDE FOR EXPERIMENTAL AIR-MAIL SERVICES TO FURTHER DEVELOP SAFETY, EFFICIENCY, AND ECONOMY, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

H. R. 7448 authorizes the Postmaster General to provide for experimental services for the development of safety, efficiency, and economy in air-mail transportation, collection, and delivery.

Such service shall be by contract with the lowest acceptable and responsible bidder.

The pilots engaged in these experimental services are protected by a provision in the bill which states that the provisions of the Domestic Air Mail Act shall apply.

This legislation will permit the employment of night flying, without passengers, to try out new instruments, blind flying; also it will permit experiments with pick-up devices, stratosphere flying, autogiro shuttle service.

It is also required that the Postmaster General shall make a report to Congress on his findings in this connection.

H. R. 3149. A BILL FOR THE RELIEF OF THE POSTAL EMPLOYEES

This bill permits the Post Office Department to credit all postal substitutes with the time they are out recovering from injuries received while on duty, so that when they are promoted to regular assignments and assigned to their proper grade, such periods of convalescence will count as part of their service.

The Department's report states that the bill is not in accord with the program of the President. However, the Department also states that the cost of the bill would be negligible. There is no money involved, except that the substitute takes credit for promotion purposes and this time is counted in determining his proper grade when made a regular employee.

H. R. 6167. A BILL TO PROVIDE A SURCHARGE ON CERTAIN AIR MAIL CARRIED IN ALASKA

This bill was introduced at the request of the Post Office Department, and seeks to amend existing law in two respects: (1) For the purpose of making the law apply to the carriage of mails to and from the Territory of Alaska, whereas the existing law applies only to the carriage of mails within the Territory of Alaska; and (2) to permit the fixing, by way of surcharge, by the Postmaster General of rates of postage.

This bill links up with the request of the Post Office Department, while the 1938 Post Office appropriation bill was under discussion this year, for an appropriation for three air-mail routes:

First. Juneau to Whitehorse, Canada. (Foreign route.)

Second. Fairbanks to Whitehorse. (Foreign route.)

Third. Tanacross to Seward, via Cordova, Valdez, and Anchorage. (Domestic route, but would connect with the foreign route from Whitehorse at Tanacross.)

Air-mail service in Alaska is now contracted for under the star-route appropriation, and postage is at the regular letter, newspaper, and parcel-post rates. They do not even get the 6-cent domestic air-mail rate because the contracts are let under the title of star-route service. There are two air-mail routes, operated during the winter months, one from Fairbanks to Nome—this service used to take 25 days by dog sled; now it takes only 3 or 4 hours by air—and the other from Fairbanks to Bethel—this service used to take 30 days; now, only 6 or 7 hours. Dog-team routes branch out into the interior from these air routes. During the summer the people are served by boat, and the air-mail contracts are therefore let only for the winter months. The planes are packed to capacity with catalogs, parcels, bulk mail, and so forth. There is no room for passengers or anything else which would help the operators to meet expenses and, therefore, in bidding they have to charge the Government a high rate.

Air traffic in Alaska is rapidly increasing. Canada is encouraging passenger, air mail, express, freight service, and so forth.

Under present conditions the Department has to carry all classes of mail on the planes. Under the proposed bill the surcharge would result in the unimportant mail going by boat and the important mail by air at the higher rate of postage. This would leave room for passengers and the development of commercial air service, and would also reduce the cost to the Government.

The Post Office Department has been informed that Alaska is eager to have this service and is willing to pay the proposed surcharge.

H. R. 7879. TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION TO STAR-ROUTE CARRIERS FOR NECESSARY INCREASED MILEAGE, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

This bill is to replace H. R. 4408 which was vetoed by the President because it permitted renewal of star-route contracts.

The new bill eliminates the renewal feature, but does contain all the other unobjected-to provisions of the old bill.

It provides that the Postmaster General shall allow extra pay to star-route carriers for detours involving extra mileage, caused by obstruction of roads, destruction of bridges, or discontinuance of ferries. The extra pay shall be in proportion to the contract rate.

When there is a change in schedule which will keep the contractor away from the initial terminal longer than was contemplated when the route was advertised, the contractor is permitted to give up his route if he wishes to do so, and it will then be readvertised.

The Postmaster General may also readvertise the route if such change in schedule shortens the time of travel.

There is also a residential requirement in the bill whereby bidders must be legal residents of the county or counties traversed by the star routes, or of the adjoining counties.

PER-DIEM PAYMENTS FOR KLAMATH DELEGATES

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill (H. R. 5975) establishing per-diem payments in lieu of compensation and expenses for members of Klamath business committee and official Klamath delegates to Washington was passed, in order that an amendment may be offered to make it conform to an amendment already offered to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what amendment is the gentleman going to offer?

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say an amendment was offered to the bill whereby the $8 figure was changed in one place and not in another place in the bill. The amendment I shall offer will make the bill read uniformly in both instances.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Was an amendment offered striking out the provision with respect to the necessity for the approval by the Indian Bureau of these delegates?

Mr. COSTELLO. A committee amendment was offered.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Klamath Indians in the Treasury of the United States, to official delegates of that tribe, whenever on business at the seat of government, and to members of the business committee and officers of the general council of said tribe whenever actually engaged upon tribal business, a per diem to be approved by the tribal council of said tribe, or its authorized business committee, not, however, to exceed $8, in lieu of all other compensation and expenses: Provided, That official delegates of the tribe on business at the seat of government shall also receive the usual railroad transportation to and from the seat of government, which the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized and directed to pay, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Klamath Indians in the Treasury of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior or such official as may be designated by him is hereby authorized beginning July 1, 1937, to pay, out of any unobligated tribal funds of the Klamath Indians in the Treasury of the United States, to members of the business committee, and to officers of the general council when engaged on business of the tribe, and to such official delegates who may carry on the business of the tribe at the seat of government, a per diem not to exceed $8 in lieu of all other compensation and expenses: Provided, That the official delegates of the tribe on business at the seat of government shall also receive the usual railroad and sleeping-car transportation to and from the seat of government: Provided further, That the rate of per diem paid not to exceed $8 shall be approved in advance by the tribal council of said tribe or its authorized business committee: Provided further, That the length of stay of the official delegates at the seat of government shall be determined and fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Washington: Page 2, line 23, after the word "exceed", strike out "$8" and insert in lieu thereof "$5 for expenses and $3 for salary."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 18, strike out "$8" and insert in lieu thereof "$5 for expenses and $3 for salary."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SECTION 243 OF THE PENAL CODE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5812, to amend section 243 of the Penal Code of the United States, as amended by the act of June 15, 1935 (49 Stat. 378), relating to the marking of packages containing wild animals and birds, and parts thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 243 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", as amended by section 201 of the act of June 15, 1935 (49 Stat. 378), is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 243. All packages or containers in which wild animals or birds and the dead bodies and parts thereof, and the eggs of any such birds, are shipped, carried, transported, or conveyed by any means whatever from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to, into, or through another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia or to a foreign country shall be plainly and clearly marked, labeled, or tagged on the outside thereof so as to show the names and addresses of the shipper and of the consignee: Provided, That the provisions of any treaty or convention to which the United States is a party or any law or regulation thereunder in conflict herewith shall control the marking or labeling of packages and containers of migratory birds, and the dead bodies, parts, and eggs thereof included in such treaty or convention."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAPE HATTERAS NATIONAL SEASHORE, N. C.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7022, to provide for the establishment of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore in the State of North Carolina, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when title to all the lands, except those within the limits of established villages, within boundaries to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior within the area of approximately 100 square miles on the islands of Chicamacomico, Ocracoke, Bodie, Roanoke, and Collington, and the waters and the lands beneath the waters adjacent thereto shall have been vested in the United States, said area shall be, and is hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a national seashore for the benefit and enjoyment of the people and shall be known as the Cape Hatteras National Seashore.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property, within the boundaries of said national seashore as determined and fixed hereunder and donations of funds for the purchase and maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That he may acquire on behalf of the United States under any donated funds by purchase, when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national seashore as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national seashore shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to divest the jurisdiction of other agencies of the Government now exercised over Federal-owned lands within the area of the said Cape Hatteras National Seashore: Provided further, That the provisions of the act of June 10, 1920, known as the "Federal Water Power Act", shall not apply to this national seashore: And provided further, That the legal residents of villages referred to in section 1 of this act shall have the right to earn a livelihood by fishing within the boundaries to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may deem necessary in order to protect the area for recreational use as provided for in this act.

SEC. 4. Except for certain portions of the area, deemed to be especially adaptable for recreational uses, particularly swimming, boating, sailing, fishing, and other recreational activities of similar nature, which shall be developed for such uses as needed, the said area shall be permanently reserved as a primitive wilderness and no development of the project or plan for the convenience of visitors shall be undertaken which would be incompatible with the preservation of the unique flora and fauna or the physiographic conditions now prevailing in this area: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, accept for administration, protection, and development by the National Park Service title to a minimum of 10,000 acres within the area described in section 1 of this act, including the existing Cape Hatteras State Park, and, in addition, title to any other portions of the area described in section 1 hereof subject to the agreement by the State of North Carolina that if all the lands described in section 1 of this act shall not have been conveyed to the United States within 10 years from the date of the passage of this act, the establishment of the aforesaid national seashore may, in the discretion of the said Secretary, be abandoned, and, in the event of such abandonment, the said State shall accept a reconveyance of title to it by the Secretary of the Interior who is hereby authorized to execute an appropriate deed or deeds for said purpose on behalf of the United States of America.

Page 4, strike out all of lines 6 to 15 and the word "America" in line 16 and insert the following: "If the State of North Carolina shall agree that if all the lands described in section 1 of this act shall not have been conveyed to the United States within 10 years from the passage of this act, the establishment of the aforesaid national seashore may, in the discretion of the said Secretary, be abandoned, and that, in the event of such abandonment, the said State will accept a reconveyance of title to all lands conveyed by it to the United States for said national seashore. The lands donated to the United States for the purposes of this act by parties other than said State shall revert in the event of the aforesaid abandonment to the donors, or their heirs, or other persons entitled thereto by law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment defining "jurisdiction", which has been approved by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior, as well as by the chairman of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WARREN: Page 3, line 2, after the word "that", insert "except as hereinafter provided."

Page 4, line 2, strike out the words "title to", and in lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "title to."

The proviso to section 1 of this act shall not limit the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire lands for any migratory-bird refuge by purchase with any funds made available therefor by applicable law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CITIZENSHIP STATUS OF CERTAIN PERSONS BORN IN PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4275, to correct United States citizenship status of certain persons born in Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am going to be compelled to object to this bill because it is the type of bill that merits more discussion and consideration than may be obtained under the present procedure.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to correct the citizenship status of certain persons who were born in Puerto Rico on or after April 11, 1899. Under the treaty of peace which terminated the Spanish-American War, Spanish subjects were given the right to elect on or before April 11, 1900, whether they desired to continue their allegiance to Spain or become American nationals.

The persons who come under this bill are the children of those Spanish subjects who elected to continue as Spanish citizens. These persons, notwithstanding their birth on American territory, stood to lose their rights as American nationals because of the act of their parents over which they had no control, were it not for the act of March 2, 1917, which gave them the right upon reaching their majority to choose whether they desired to be American citizens. While most of the children of those parents who chose to continue as Spanish subjects took advantage of this legislation, a limited number failed to comply with the law and never did become American citizens. These few persons, because of their ignorance of the law and because of misunderstanding, have been under the impression that they were American citizens and have exercised the rights and privileges and performed the duties as such. It is for their benefit that this legislation is proposed.

Mr. O'MALLEY. How many people are involved?

Mr. LANZETTA. There are from 200 to 400 or 500 people who will benefit by this legislation. As I have already stated, these men and women have been performing the duties of American citizens and have been voting in general elections. This amendment to the act of March 2, 1917, is necessary to correct their status.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman states there are 200 people involved?

Mr. LANZETTA. From 200 to 500 people are involved.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a new section is hereby inserted between sections 5b and 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes", approved March 2, 1917, as amended, as follows:

"SEC. 5c. That any person born in Puerto Rico on or after April 11, 1899, who has continued to reside within the jurisdiction of the United States, whose father elected on or before April 11, 1900, to preserve his allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain entered into on April 11, 1899, and who, by reason of misinformation regarding his or her own citizenship status failed within the time limits prescribed by section 5 or section 5a hereof to exercise the privilege of establishing United States citizenship and has heretofore erroneously but in good faith exercised the rights and privileges and performed the duties of a citizen of the United States, and has not personally sworn allegiance to any foreign government or ruler upon or after attainment of majority, may make a sworn declaration of allegiance to the United States before any United States district court. Such declaration shall set forth facts concerning his or her birth in Puerto Rico, residence within the jurisdiction of the United States, and misinformation regarding United States citizenship status, and shall be accompanied by proof thereof satisfactory to the court. After making such declaration such person shall be considered a citizen of the United States."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "person", insert "of good character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States, and."

Page 2, line 17, after the words "Puerto Rico", insert "good character, attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and being well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States."

Page 2, line 23, strike out the words "such persons" and insert "and submitting such proofs, such person shall be admitted to take the oath of allegiance before the court, and thereupon."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to correct a statement in the report on page 2 to the effect that about 6,000 residents of Puerto Rico are involved. This statement is incorrect and should be that approximately 200 to 500 persons are involved.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdrew my objection on the statement of the gentleman that this would not affect more than 200 to 500 people who would be eligible for citizenship if this bill passed.

Mr. LANZETTA. That is right.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The committee report states that 6,000 residents are involved.

Mr. LANZETTA. No; that is incorrect.

Mr. IGLESIAS. That was true 40 years ago, but not today.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Today there are how many?

Mr. IGLESIAS. Today there are about 200.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the bills from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads which have just been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

TERMS OF OFFICE OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES OF PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1486, to amend section 30 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JUDICIARY OF PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1485, to amend section 40 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to explain the reasons for my opposition to this measure.

The Committee on Insular Affairs, of which I am a member, has been informed that the laws of Puerto Rico do not require that cases involve any certain amount before an appeal can be taken from a trial court to the supreme court, and because of this lack of limitation, there are many cases brought to the appellate court which involve very small sums of money or questions of little consequence. In my State of Iowa, and I undertake to say in the other 47 States of the Union, a certain amount must be in controversy in a case before an appeal may be taken from a trial court to an appellate court. Usually this sum is approximately $100. The Governor of Puerto Rico and his assistants, who appeared before the committee in support of this proposal, agreed that about one-fourth or one-fifth of the cases brought on appeal in Puerto Rico involved less than $100; that many minor cases were appealed. Therefore, if the insular assembly should make some reasonable provision with reference to the amount in controversy before an appeal could be made, automatically the supreme court docket would be reduced in the same proportion. This being the situation, the Congress should protect the taxpayers and the people of Puerto Rico from adding to the pay roll two additional judges at $10,000 a year with clerical assistants, when a change in their own statutes, fixing a reasonable appeal limit, would obviate the necessity of adding these two judges.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. The gentleman realizes that the chief justice of the supreme court of Puerto Rico, Emilio del Toro, and all the associate justices, want this measure passed, and also that in 1904 there were only 237 cases appealed, whereas today there are close to 800 cases appealed annually, which means that each judge must write 130 or more opinions each year?

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further.

That is true, I may say to the gentleman, but probably the judges of the supreme court in many States in the Union may want additional judges, to lessen their duties. I grant that the chief justice of the supreme court, Emilio del Toro, is an eminent and learned jurist, with high attainments in jurisprudence, but nevertheless, if these appeals were lessened through a limitation passed by the Assembly of Puerto Rico, these two additional justices would not be needed. We are all interested in the welfare of the fine people in Puerto Rico, therefore, we should not burden them with public expenditures which are not necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to insist upon my objection.

AMERICAN ISLAND, S. DAK.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1266, to authorize the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., to construct, equip, and maintain tourist cabins on American Island, S. Dak., to operate and maintain a tourist camp and certain amusement and recreational facilities on such island, to make charges in connection therewith, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothwithstanding the provisions of section 21, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes", approved March 2, 1889, the city of Chamberlain, S. With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "Island", insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That this act shall become effective only after the city of Chamberlain makes regulatory provision to carry out the terms of the act and after such regulations have been certified to the Secretary of the Interior."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEC. 4. Whoever violates any provision of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "South", strike out the remainder of the line and all down to and including line 20, and insert "Dakota: Provided, That this authorization shall be effective only when the city of Pierre or the State legislature shall enact and maintain regulatory provisions of the kind set out in sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this act, in modification of the conditions contained in the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. ALTERATIONS AND REPAIRS TO CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7560, to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PROCUREMENT OF DIVORCES IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6961, to prohibit the use of the mails for the solicitation of the procurement of divorces in foreign countries.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every written or printed card, circular letter, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind, giving or offering to give information concerning where or how or through whom a divorce may be secured in a foreign country, and designed to solicit business in connection with the procurement thereof, is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, or shall knowingly take or cause the same to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MINIMUM-WAGE COMPACT

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 321, granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to explain this resolution to the House, because it may be it should be extended to other States.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to meet the request of the gentleman from New York, and I call the attention of the gentleman and the House to the fact that this is the first interstate compact on labor legislation ever brought before the Congress. Last year a similar measure was introduced by me, and it passed the House, but failed to pass in the Senate before adjournment.

The compact provides that no employer shall pay a woman or a minor under 21 years of age an unfair or oppressive wage. It sets up an administrative agency in each State to be appointed by the Governor and further provides for a continuing unpaid commission representing labor, the employer, and the public to deal with other States which are parties concerning questions arising under the compact and its operations. It constitutes an effort to secure uniform standards in all States which are parties to the compact.

The bill is entirely constructive. It has no conflict with any other labor legislation pending in Congress now to cover minimum wages. Testimony to this effect was given by Senator BLACK in his unanimous report on the bill when it was reported to the Senate. The measure has the unanimous approval of the House Judiciary Committee and the subcommittee of that committee was headed by our friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], who has given splendid support to the resolution as has his colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

As to whether the scope of the measure should be broadened or not, this compact was signed by the Governors of five of the New England States, or their representatives, all save Vermont, and was signed also by New York and Pennsylvania. The compact has subsequently been ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island in the order named. It is an open form of compact and when it shall be ratified by the Congress and signed by the President, it will be in force in the States that have ratified it.

Mr. FISH. Could New York State still ratify the compact after the action of Congress in the matter?

Mr. TOBEY. At any time; yes. There is a clause in the compact which gives them that privilege and makes it effective when and if they do.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Under the form of the act any other States that are signatories to this compact may come in at any time that their legislature may ratify the act?

Mr. TOBEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. Does it require an act of Congress to amend the compact in that respect?

Mr. TOBEY. No; it is provided in the compact that when and if New York or any other signatory State comes in and ratifies the compact, it becomes a part of the compact.

Mr. BEITER. And no further legislation by Congress is required?

Mr. TOBEY. No.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. MCCORMACK. This constitutes a very sound, constructive, and progressive use of the compact provision of the Constitution.

Mr. TOBEY. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts and point out that this legislation is most timely. It aims to prevent unfair competition between States having common industrial problems. It raises the standards of labor among women and children, and is a sincere effort to abolish sweatshop conditions and to safeguard the health and welfare of women and minors, and to guarantee them fair and just wages.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the compact for establishing uniform standards for conditions of employment, particularly with regard to the minimum wage, in States ratifying the same, which was signed in Concord, N. H., on May 29, 1934, by representatives of the Governors of Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, and Pennsylvania, and which was ratified by the Legislature of Massachusetts on June 30, 1934, by the Legislature of New Hampshire on May 29, 1935, and by the Legislature of Rhode Island on May 1, 1936, is hereby approved and declared to be effective in said States in accordance with the terms thereof, and hereafter in such States as may at any time ratify the same, which compact is as follows:

COMPACT FOR ESTABLISHING UNIFORM STANDARDS FOR CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT, PARTICULARLY WITH REGARD TO THE MINIMUM WAGE, IN STATES RATIFYING THE SAME

TITLE I. POLICY AND INTENT

Whereas enforcement among the industrial States of the Union of reasonably uniform standards for labor in industry, determined in accordance with the general welfare, would not only benefit labor but would be of real advantage to employers, removing the pressure toward low wages, long hours of work, exploitation of minors and women, and similar action commonly admitted to be injurious to all concerned; and

Whereas the advantages of such uniform standards have already been indicated by the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the codes of fair competition adopted thereunder; and

Whereas such operation points to the desirability of continued uniform legislation affecting labor standards, by Federal action or otherwise, and of joint action by the States to establish such uniform standards; and

Whereas the establishment of reasonably uniform standards in States concerned with the same general fields of industry and competitors in the same markets will afford the advantages of stability in labor legislation to all concerned, with disadvantage to none: Now, therefore,

The States whose commissioners have signed this compact and which have, by their legislature, ratified the same, acting to promote the general welfare of the people, do hereby join in establishing the said compact to provide uniform minimum standards affecting labor and industry in the said States: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abrogating, repealing, modifying, or interfering with the operation of laws already in effect in any State party hereto which establish standards equivalent to or above those herein specified, nor to prevent or discourage the enactment of additional laws establishing similar or higher standards; nor shall anything herein contained repeal or affect any laws concerning conditions of employment that are not in conflict herewith or that deal with subjects not included herein: And provided further, That no part of any title of this compact nor of any legislation adopted in pursuance thereof, except as may be expressly specified in such title or in such legislation, shall be in effect in any State party hereto until this compact shall have been approved as provided in section 6 of title II, but whenever title I and II hereof and any other title included herein are so approved and ratified, such titles shall be in full force and effect as laws of the States so approving and ratifying the same.

TITLE II. GENERAL PROVISIONS

SECTION 1. Each State party to this compact shall require its administrative agency or agencies charged with the administration and enforcement of this compact and of State laws relating thereto to make comprehensive and detailed reports concerning the operation and administration of said compact and laws. Such agency shall report at least once each year and shall send copies of such report to the interstate commission established under the following section, to the Governors of the several ratifying States, and to the appropriate administrative agencies in such States.

SEC. 2. Each State party hereto shall make provision for a continuing unpaid commission representing industry, labor, and the public, and appointed by the Governor of said State, to deal with the other ratifying States concerning questions arising under this compact and the operation of the same within the limits of their respective States. The chairman of such State commission shall be designated by the Governor and shall be the representative of his State on an interstate commission which shall be composed of the representatives so designated by the several States parties to this compact. The Governors of the signatory States shall request the President of the United States to appoint a representative of the Federal Government to the interstate commission. The expenses of the interstate commission shall be shared equally by the States ratifying this compact. The interstate commission shall annually makes a report of its activities and shall furnish copies to the Governors of the ratifying States and to the permanent commissions of such States.

SEC. 3. Should any question arise on the part of one or more of the States ratifying this compact, concerning a matter involved in said compact or in any State law adopted in pursuance thereof, then such question shall be brought before the said interstate commission for consideration. Said interstate commission shall make any necessary investigations, shall publish its findings and any recommendations and shall furnish copies of such findings and recommendations to the State commissions in each State party to this compact.

SEC. 4. If any ratifying State should desire a modification of any provision or provisions of this compact, or a revision of the entire compact, or if for any reason it should become desirable to extend the scope of said compact, the aforesaid interstate commission shall, upon the application of one or more of the ratifying States, and after 30 days' notice to the Governors and State commissions of the other States, proceed to consider such application and the reasons advanced for the proposed modification or revision and shall make such recommendations to the ratifying States concerning the same as may seem fitting and proper. Whenever said modification, revision, or extension is ratified in the manner prescribed in section 6 of this title for the ratification of this original compact and the Congress of the United States has consented thereto, then such modification, revision, or extension shall be in full force and effect in the States ratifying the same.

SEC. 5. Each State party to this compact agrees that it will not withdraw therefrom until it has reported to the interstate commission the reasons for its desire to withdraw. The interstate commission shall, upon receipt of such report, investigate the situation and shall, within 6 months, submit its recommendations. If the State still desires to withdraw from the compact, it shall defer such action for 2 years from the date of the findings of the interstate commission.

SEC. 6. Upon ratification by the legislative act of the requisite number of States as specified in subsequent titles of this compact, and with the consent of the Congress of the United States, this compact shall be in full force and effect in the States ratifying the same. Each State so ratifying shall forthwith enact necessary and suitable legislation to establish and maintain the minimum standards set forth in the following title or titles and shall make provision for the continuing State commission required by section 2 of this title. The appropriate administrative agencies of each State shall thereafter enforce and supervise the operation of the laws relating to this compact and the laws enacted to make the provisions of said compact effective.

SEC. 7. Any State may at any time become a party to this compact by taking the action required by the preceding section of this title to ratify the same, subject to the consent of the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 8. If any part of this compact or the application thereof to any person or circumstance should be held to be contrary to the constitution of any ratifying State or of the United States, all other separable parts of said compact and the application of such parts to other persons or circumstances shall continue to be in full force and effect.

TITLE III. MINIMUM WAGE

SECTION 1. No employer shall pay a woman, or a minor under 21 years of age, an unfair oppressive wage.

SEC. 2. The State agency administering the minimum-wage law enacted in conformity with this compact shall have authority to investigate the wages of women and minors; to appoint wage boards, upon which employers, employees, and the public shall have equal representation, for the purpose of recommending minimum fair wage rates for women and minors; and, after a public hearing, to enter directory orders based on the determinations of the wage boards, together with such administrative rulings as are appropriate to make the determinations effective; and may have further authority, without the agency of a wage board, to enter such orders in the case of occupations with less than a specified number of employees.

SEC. 3. The State administrative agency and the wage boards appointed by such agency shall have authority to administer oaths and to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of records relative to the wages of women and minors.

SEC. 4. The State administrative agency shall have further authority to inspect to determine compliance with its orders; to publish the names of employers violating a directory order; and, after a directory order has been in effect for a specified period, to make such order mandatory after a public hearing thereon. Such mandatory order shall carry a penalty of fine, imprisonment, or both. Said agency shall have authority to reconvene wage boards or to form new wage boards for the purpose of modifying wage orders. It shall have authority at any time on its own motion to modify administrative regulations after a public hearing thereon.

SEC. 5. The State administrative agency shall have authority to issue special licenses to employees who, by reason of physical or mental condition are incapable of earning the minimum fair-wage rate established for the occupation in which they are employed. Said agency shall have authority to take assignment of wage claims at the request of women or minor employees paid less than the minimum wage to which they are entitled under a mandatory order, and to bring legal action necessary to collect such claims. Such employees shall be authorized, under the statute, to recover by civil action the full amount to which they are entitled under a mandatory fair-wage order.

SEC. 6. Employers subject to the minimum-wage law enacted in conformity herewith shall be required to keep specified records, including the names, addresses, occupations, hours, and wages of the women and minors in their employ; to permit the inspection and transcript of such records by the State administrative agency and its authorized representatives; and upon request, to furnish said agency with a sworn statement of the same. Employers shall further be required to post and maintain the notices regarding wage orders issued by the State administrative agency.

SEC. 7. Each minimum-wage law so enacted shall contain provisions for appeal to the courts on questions of law by persons aggrieved by the decisions of said agency. Said law shall also contain a provision to the effect that in no case shall wage orders or decrees entered under a previously existing law be nullified until the provisions of the law enacted in conformity herewith have become operative and until new wage orders covering the same occupations have been entered and made effective.

SEC. 8. Each minimum-wage law enacted in conformity herewith shall contain a saving clause to the effect that if any provisions of such law or its application be held invalid, the remainder of the law and its application elsewhere shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 9. Mandatory fair-wage legislation now in effect in any of the signatory States, and such legislation in course of passage in any of such States as is in conformity with the provisions of this compact, is hereby declared to meet the minimum standards required by this compact.

SEC. 10. This compact as applied to minimum wage shall, when ratified by two or more States in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of title II, be in full force and effect in the States so ratifying the same.

In witness whereof the commissioners of the States of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and of the Commonwealths of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania have signed this compact in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States of America at Washington, D. C., and of which a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

Done at Concord, N. H., this 29th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1934.

(Signed by members of commissions and by delegates of the States of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and the Commonwealths of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.)

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROMOTION OF EMPLOYEES, CUSTOMS FIELD SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7948) providing for the promotion of employees in the Customs Field Service.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each employee in the Customs Field Service (except those whose promotion is provided for by section 3 of this act) shall, at the beginning of each fiscal year, if such employee has rendered satisfactory service throughout the preceding fiscal year, be promoted to the next higher rate of compensation prescribed for the grade or class to which his position is allocated. No employee shall receive an increase in compensation under the terms of this act if such employee has during the preceding fiscal year received an increase in the rate of his compensation other than one prescribed by this act. No provision of this act shall be construed to prevent the promotion of any employee at any time to a vacant position in a higher grade or class, and when so promoted such employee shall receive compensation at the rate fixed by law for such grade or class. Nothing herein contained shall operate to reduce the compensation of any employee in the Customs Field Service.

SEC. 2. Section 1 (a) and 1 (c) of the act entitled "An act to adjust the compensation of certain employees in the Customs Service", approved May 29, 1928, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 6 (a)) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) Laborers, $1,440; $1,500; $1,560; $1,620; $1,680."

"(c) Clerks, entrance salary, $1,700; clerks having 1 year's satisfactory service, $1,800; clerks having 2 years' satisfactory service, $1,900; clerks having 3 years' satisfactory service, $2,000; clerks having 4 years' satisfactory service, $2,100; clerks having 5 years' satisfactory service, $2,200; clerks having 6 years' satisfactory service, $2,300."

SEC. 3. Section 1 (e) of such act of May 29, 1928, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(e) Inspectors shall be classified in 13 grades, as follows:

"Grade 1, salary $2,100; grade 2, salary $2,200; grade 3, salary $2,300; grade 4, salary $2,400; grade 5, salary $2,500; grade 6, salary $2,600; grade 7, salary $2,700; grade 8, salary $2,800; grade 9, salary $2,900; grade 10, salary $3,000; grade 11, salary $3,100; grade 12, salary $3,200; grade 13, salary $3,300.

"Hereafter inspectors shall be promoted to grades 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, at the beginning of each fiscal year following 1 year's satisfactory service in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, respectively; not to exceed 50 percent of the force to grades 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 following 1 year's satisfactory service in grades 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, respectively: Provided further, That promotions above grade 7 shall be made in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Customs and as far as is consistent with the efficient administration of the Customs Service shall be made on the basis of seniority."

SEC. 4. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. Sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act shall take effect July 1, 1937.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NATCHEZ TRACE PARKWAY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6652) to provide for the administration and maintenance of the Natchez Trace Parkway in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PAYMENT TO SAC AND FOX INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5170) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Several Members have spoken to me about this bill, claiming there is a great deal of merit to the measure. The bill provides for an appropriation of $40,000. If this bill passes it throws the doors wide open, and every other Indian tribe will be in asking for the same recognition. Forty thousand dollars is to reimburse the Indians for the money which they claim was taken out of their tribal funds for administrative purposes. In all we have expended $21,197,000 in the administration of Indian properties and other related purposes. So you see what we are going to do if we open the door to one tribe in this way.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This tribe is asking to be reimbursed for their money that was spent on other tribes by the Indian Bureau. The money was taken out of their tribal funds and spent for the benefit of other Indians. While the Department does say it may establish a precedent, it is obviously unfair—I questioned the bill when it was in the committee—for the Indian Bureau, under its authority to administer the funds of Indians, to take the money of one tribe of Indians and spend it on other tribes, and they have done it, and these Indians ought to be reimbursed; and the only way they can be reimbursed for that misappropriation, one might say, of funds by the Indian Bureau is by an appropriation from the Treasury. I think they ought to be reimbursed, because their money was spent on other Indians by a Government department without their consent.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I think I have shown to the House today that I have been more than fair in considering these matters. I have taken the bills up with the Attorney General and with the General Accounting Office, and where they are in agreement and where they show there is some merit in the case I have not objected to the bill. I helped to get several bills passed today, but in this instance we would be opening the door for every other tribe to come in. Just as quick as you pass this bill the attorneys for these tribes will know about it—and I refer to the attorneys in Washington—and they will be down here with bills. Probably the funds of some other tribe was used in part for administration purposes this tribe was interested in.

There is a proviso in this bill that no tribal funds of Indians of the United States shall hereafter be used for administrative purposes of tribes or Indians other than the tribes or Indians to which said funds are accredited or hereafter made available. Why not bring that in by itself, why bring it in on this bill? If the gentleman wants to bring that in by a special bill, I shall vote for it, but I shall not support it now. It is simply added for the purpose of getting this bill passed, which, as I say, opens the door.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I opposed this bill until they accepted that amendment. That happens to be my amendment, that the Indian Bureau could nevermore use the money of one tribe to pay the expenses of another tribe.

Mr. COCHRAN. It does not belong on this bill. Introduce it as a separate bill. It will probably pass if the Department and the Bureau of the Budget does not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. I object.

Mr. BOREN Mr. Speaker, request for regular order does not give me an opportunity to set forth the true circumstances in answer to the objections that have been raised here today with reference to my bill, H. R. 5170. So I take this time to further clarify the justice upon which this legislation is based. The report itself clearly shows that there is not even a single element in this bill which is not positively called for by justice, fairness, and reason.

The general objection that this bill is giving something to the Indians is unwarranted. If unwarranted appropriations dog the conscience of the gentleman from Missouri, that would not justify his opposition to this bill. I am not finding fault with the gentleman's determination to prevent mismanagement in the Indian Bureau or curtail the extension of that Bureau's power. It does not logically follow, however, that the Sac and Fox Indians, who have been the victims of misappropriations, should have their interests arbitrarily dismissed.

First, the Sac and Fox Indians are asking only for the return of their money which was spent for the benefit of other Indians. The total number of Indians under the jurisdiction of the Shawnee Agency is 4,570. Of this number, only 849 are members of the Sac and Fox Tribe, yet the entire administrative expenses for the 4,570 was appropriated from Sac and Fox funds. The agents of the United States Government spent $52,450 belonging to Sac and Fox Indians. If this sum were prorated to the Indians it was designed to benefit, the total benefits to the Sac and Fox Indians, applying a per-capita ratio to the total sum, would be $6,800. It is evidently unjust to spend the limited funds which belong to 849 Indians in support of a program for 4,570 Indians. More especially, since this expenditure was without the consent and over the protest of the Indians to whom the money belonged. H. R. 5170 provides for the return of money, without interest or accruals, spent from the Sac and Fox funds for the particular benefit of Indians who are not members of the Sac and Fox Tribe.

In reply to the expression of fear that this bill might set a precedent which would encourage other tribes to seek similar legislation, I quote from the Department's own statement:

> Peculiar circumstances distinguish the claim of the Sac and Fox Indians. * * * In the present case, the Indians have not objected to the use of their own money for the administration of their own affairs. They are asking the return of their money * * * used in the administration of the affairs of other tribes.

Surely there is no wish on the part of the gentleman from Missouri to approve this evident robbery of this tribe's funds. It should further please the gentleman that this bill, through the committee amendment, more completely meets his viewpoint of the future policy for the administration of Indian affairs.

I cannot believe that this Congress nor any Member of this body, wishes to approve, aid, and abet the robbery of these Indians, and I am hoping that those who have entered this discussion today will look further into the justice of this cause and withdraw any objections to the passage of this bill.

TAXES ON GROSS PRODUCTION OF MINERALS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2249) providing for the manner of payment of taxes on gross production of minerals, including gas and oil, in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SHOSHONE NATION OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 68) authorizing the western bands of the Shoshone Nation of Indians to sue in the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Here is a bill that specifically provides that the Government shall not have the power to set off the gratuities and advances that we have made to the Indians. Why should the Committee on Indian Affairs let such a bill come out of the committee when the members know that this House has disapproved of all legislation where the Government does not have that right. It seeks to repeal that section in the deficiency appropriation bill that protects the Government. Therefore I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The author of the bill, the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] is not on the floor. He is in the hospital. He asked me to look after the bill. I ask the gentleman to permit the bill to go over without prejudice.

Mr. COCHRAN. In view of that situation, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will let the bill go over without prejudice. Just a few days ago a tribe of Indians by this name obtained a judgment against the Government for around $5,000,000, and part of it is to bear interest until paid from the date the judgment was rendered. This bill must be amended if it is going to pass by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will go over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

AMENDING ACT CREATING UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6444, to amend the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act creating a United States court for China and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of section 6 of the act entitled "An act creating a United States court for China and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof", approved June 30, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:
> "The judge of said court and the district attorney, who shall be lawyers of good standing and experience, and the marshal and the clerk thereof shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive as salary, respectively, the sums of $10,000 per annum for said judge, $5,000 per annum for said district attorney, $4,000 per annum for said marshal, and $4,000 per annum for said clerk."
> SEC. 2. Section 7 of said act is amended to read as follows:
> "SEC. 7. The tenure of office of the judge and of the clerk of the United States court for China shall be 10 years, unless sooner removed by the President for cause; the tenure of office of the other officials of the court shall be at the pleasure of the President."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, strike out all after line 8 of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert after the discussion on Calendar No. 413, H. R. 5170, my own remarks on the bill then under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AMENDING COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7711, to amend the act approved June 19, 1934, entitled the "Communications Act of 1934."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 201 (b) of the act of June 19, 1934, entitled the "Communications Act of 1934" is hereby amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "Provided further, That nothing in this act or in any other provision of law shall prevent a common carrier subject to this act from furnishing reports of positions of ships at sea to newspapers of general circulation, either at a nominal charge or without charge, provided the name of such common carrier is displayed along with such ship-position reports. The Commission may prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary in the public interest to carry out the provisions of this act."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEN. ANTHONY WAYNE MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 406, to establish the Gen. Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a permanent memorial to the memory of Gen. Anthony Wayne.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the chairman of the committee explain how much money will be involved in the construction of this statue?

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not call for any appropriation. It is an enabling act, to set up a commission in the city of Fort Wayne.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who comprises the commission?

Mr. FARLEY. It will be a commission of nine, three appointed by the President, three by the House, and three by the Senate, and will be largely citizens of that community.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is this the opening drive of a large size appropriation?

Mr. FARLEY. As far as I am concerned, it is not a drive for an appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the people of the United States owe a deep debt of gratitude to Gen. Anthony Wayne, whose military career meant so much during the War of the Revolution and whose activities in the Indian wars succeeded in opening such a large tract of territory in the Middle West; and

Whereas no adequate memorial exists at the junction of the St. Marys, St. Joseph, and Maumee Rivers where he established his fort and carried on his campaign: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the "General Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission", and to be composed of nine commissioners, three to be appointed by the President of the United States, three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House. Such Commission shall consider and formulate plans for designing and constructing a permanent memorial in the city of Fort Wayne to the said Gen. Anthony Wayne.

SEC. 2. Such Commission may, in its discretion, accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys and investigations, formulating, preparing, and considering plans for the construction of such memorial, or other expenses incurred, or to be incurred, in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall report its recommendations to Congress as soon as practicable.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT ANNUITIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7801, to authorize retirement annuities for persons who serve as Librarian of Congress for 35 years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon separation from the service, either by reason of resignation, retirement, or appointment of his successor by the President of the United States, any person who serves or has served 35 years or more as Librarian of Congress shall be paid a retirement annuity in equal monthly installments at the rate per annum of three-fourths of his annual pay at the time of such separation. The eligibility in respect to length of service of applicants for such annuity shall be determined by the Comptroller General or the successor to his present duties. Such annuity shall begin to accrue the day following the date of separation from office and shall continue during the life of the annuitant. Such annuity shall be paid by the disbursing officer of the Library of Congress, and such sums as may be necessary to make such payments are hereby authorized to be appropriated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 1, lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out "either by reason of resignation, retirement, or appointment of his successor by the President of the United States."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Congress", insert "or as an officer and/or employee of either the Senate or House of Representatives."

Page 2, line 5, after the word "Congress", insert "in case of the Librarian of Congress, and out of the contingent fund of the Senate or House of Representatives, respectively, in the case of officers and/or employees thereof."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this bill as the groundwork for the purpose of providing retirement for employees and officers of the House and the Senate who have been in the employ of the House or the Senate for more than 35 years. The bill as amended will provide that these employees or officers may be retired at the end of 35 years with three-quarters pay.

Now, it seems only simple justice that we should provide that these old employees of the House and the Senate be given the same consideration, at least, as employees in the departments, who, under civil-service laws, may be retired. Our employees are not civil-service employees. They are classified differently. Within the last 6 months we have had at least two cases, in one case where we honored an old employee of the House by a subterfuge, by creating an assistant janitor, I think it was; but we intended by doing so to retire that delightful old employee.

We have had another case this year in which a man who, after serving for 47 years, I believe, in several different capacities in this House, was kicked right out in the most cold-blooded manner at a time in life when he needed support the most. We would not do that to an old broken-down horse on our farms. We would not do it to a sick dog. This man was kicked out of the House without any consideration whatever. I think we should protect our employees and officers in the same manner that the employees of other departments are protected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I call the gentleman's attention to the further fact that over the years that these employees of the House and the Senate have served, no deductions have been made from their pay to create a fund to provide for their retirement, as has been done in the case of other Government employees who are required to pay into the fund as they go along.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That might be true.

Mr. MAY. There is, therefore, less reason for retiring them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is every reason for retiring them. I do not care how it is done. This is merely a start. Let this amendment be adopted and in conference with the Senate we can work out a system whereby in the future that might be done. We should not, however, penalize our employees who have been here over 35 years merely because of a mistake Congress made 35 years ago in not providing for them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be voted down for these reasons: This is a special bill that has come up now the second year. It was objected to last year by our unfortunate friend Zioncheck. It is a bill that has met the entire approval not only of the committee but of all the Members to whom I have spoken, and that is quite a large number; and it has met the approval of a large number of Senators, because of these facts: Dr. Putnam for 37 years has devoted his entire life to the Library of Congress. He has made it the greatest Library in the world, and he ought not to be put alongside of somebody else. We ought not to make a general bill of this particular one. The proposition of the gentleman from Michigan ought to be taken up as a separate bill. It is the intention of the committee—and I hope that it is the intention of the House—to take care of a man who deserves to be taken care of. Here is an opportunity to show our appreciation. When a man is 77 years old he ought to be permitted to retire if he so desires. I have talked it over with Dr. Putnam, and this is entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. The Librarian of Congress is paid $10,000 a year salary, is he not?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. Does not the gentleman believe that a man receiving $10,000 a year from the Government over a long period of years ought to be able to take care of himself?

Mr. KELLER. He does exactly the same thing that you and I and almost every other Member here does.

Mr. SHORT. Yes; but Members of Congress do not receive any pension or annuity.

Mr. KELLER. We do not stay here long enough.

Mr. SHORT. And in addition to that we have to spend most of the money we make to get reelected.

Mr. KELLER. If we stayed here 35 years perhaps some provision would be made whereby we could retire.

Mr. SHORT. That is not our fault.

Mr. KELLER. That part is all right; it may not be the gentleman's fault.

Mr. SHORT. Does the gentleman feel that a man receiving $10,000 a year from the Government should receive an annuity or a pension?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SHORT. While lesser employees receiving small salaries do not benefit at all?

Mr. KELLER. I am not going to deny them that; and if the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Speaker, will bring in a general bill along the line he suggests there will be very little opposition to it; but, as I stated before, we ought not to make a general bill out of this. We ought to vote for this bill or against it just as it was presented.

Mr. SHORT. I am sure that the gentleman is in sympathy with the President's program to balance the Budget, but certainly he is not assisting him to do that when he votes a pension to a man who has been drawing $10,000 a year salary for a long period of years.

Mr. KELLER. I think everybody is aware of the very great service Dr. Putnam is rendering. I have been aware of it ever since I have been in Congress. I think if the gentleman from Missouri were, he would be for this bill.

Mr. SHORT. I do not deny the valuable work he has done, but there are 10,000 men who would like to have that job at that salary.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I am prompted to add a word to what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] said a while ago about the treatment that was accorded to an old employee of this House. The gentleman from Michigan did not mention the fact that the employee in question was a minority employee. He was kicked out by the minority in this House. I thoroughly agree with the characterization used by the gentleman from Michigan, that it was a heartless act.

When I came to Congress a great many years ago the Democratic side of the aisle did not enjoy a very much higher rating than the Republican side does now. Bert Kennedy was at that time an employee of this House. Had I been a member of his own party I could not have been treated any more courteously, I could not have been helped any more than I was by Bert Kennedy. In my judgment he is the kind of man we should have in the Government service. It gave my heart a glow when I came back here after 20 years and found that he remembered me and found him the same old Bert Kennedy, although the political situation in the House was reversed.

We get up here and talk a lot against heartless corporations of the country who refuse to employ men because they are 35 or 40 years of age or throw them out of employment the minute they get so they are not able to keep up the pace. Then we take an employee of the House who has served faithfully for a half century and throw him out like a dog. I want to take this opportunity to protest against the action in this particular case.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that he is absolutely right. If any manufacturer did to Bert Kennedy what the House of Representatives did to him during this session of Congress that manufacturer would be severely criticized, yet the House kicked him out.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of this House ought to rectify the wrong and reinstate that man in some way. What is he fit for now after he has become white-headed in the service of the Government?

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. And he has not received $10,000 a year either.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No. I do not suppose he has received $5,000.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. Some statements have been made here that ought to be corrected, especially in reference to Mr. Kennedy. Mr. Kennedy was a very fine gentleman and a valued employee of the House of Representatives.

Under the Legislative appropriation act the minority are assigned six positions here. Mr. Kennedy for years and years was a majority employee when his party was in power and a minority employee when we came into power. The Republican caucus displaced Mr. Kennedy as one of its employees. Then the suggestion was made that we should create a special position for him. It should be thoroughly understood that the only reason Mr. Kennedy is not in the employment of the House is that his own party refused to designate him as one of the six men that they are allotted.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina that that is my understanding, of course.

Mr. RICH. As I understand from the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. Kennedy served here about 45 or 50 years?

Mr. WARREN. Something like that.

Mr. RICH. It makes no difference. If his party did not take care of him after he had been in the service for 45 or 50 years, does not the gentleman think the Democratic Party ought to take him up now? I think the gentleman from Colorado is making a fine speech. If we made a mistake, you people ought to do the right thing.

Mr. WARREN. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with that kind of buck-passing, has spoiled the whole thing. I am sure, though, the gentleman means well, and I applaud the courage and humanity of his stand. I may say to the gentleman I would vote for a resolution to reinstate Bert Kennedy to a job even if he was the rankest Republican in America. I would not question his politics after nearly 50 years of efficient service in this House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that this whole discussion has nothing to do with the pending bill. It is just a question of whether we are going to kill the bill by amending it or not.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Wolcott amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask for information?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNUTSON. What salary has Mr. Putnam been receiving and how long has he been in the employ of the Library of Congress?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not regard that as a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am seeking information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] moves the previous question on agreeing to the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw temporarily the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT)—ayes 42, noes 40.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time by title.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] comes too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think so. The gentleman from Illinois raises the point of order that there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count. (After counting.) One hundred and ten Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois made a point of no quorum, and he did not object to the vote on the ground a quorum was not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct and the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has just moved a call of the House.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] submitted a parliamentary inquiry. Did I understand the Chair to state in answer thereto that the point of no quorum did not couple with it an objection to the vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is absolutely correct. The Chair had not put the question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. When I made the point of order previously I was objecting because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] made a point of order that a quorum was not present and directed his point of order to the previous vote.

Mr. KELLER. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman did not say that at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois merely made the point of no quorum.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COSTELLO) there was—ayes 54, noes 26.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 133]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and nineteen Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. COSTELLO, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I submit a motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLER moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 7801) to the Committee on the Library.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill in its present form?

Mr. KELLER. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 183, noes 58.

So the motion to recommit was agreed to, and the bill as amended was recommitted to the Committee on the Library.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES CARROLL OF CARROLLTON BICENTENARY COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 171, relating to the employment of personnel and expenditures made by Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in the committee report the committee recommends that lines 5 and 6 on page 2 be stricken out, but no committee amendment appears in the bill as it is printed and sent to the House.

Mr. KELLER. Is the gentleman offering an amendment to strike out section 2?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would like to know if the committee still wants to strike out those lines?

Mr. KELLER. I will agree to an amendment to strike out section 2, if that is what the gentleman wants. That is recommended in the report.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the committee report states the committee recommends an amendment to strike out lines 5 and 6 on page 2, but no committee amendment appears in the bill as it is reported out by the committee.

Mr. KELLER. I will accept such an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the chairman of the committee recognizes this to be an error. I have sent an amendment to the desk carrying out the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. May I say to the gentleman that I have introduced a companion resolution in the House. The amendment proposed by the gentleman is not only acceptable, but I think it is a very proper amendment to the resolution.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for the purpose of carrying out its functions under the joint resolution of June 15, 1936, the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission, or the chairman acting for the commission, is authorized to fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, and to determine its necessary expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds; and be it further

Resolved, That the commission be authorized to borrow the services of employees from other Government agencies.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of lines 5 and 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT TO INCLUDE HOPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7836, to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by including hops as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] if it is the purpose of this bill to put hops under the same restrictions as other agricultural commodities now classified in the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. PIERCE. Not as a basic commodity, but in the same position that honey, milk, butter, and such commodities occupy. We can now make marketing agreements. This bill gives the Department the right to put hops in the same position as milk and butter.

That is the best explanation I can make.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is it contemplated that this will tend to cause the hop growers to go into a crop-production plan and thereby increase the cost of hops, which may affect Milwaukee and make the cost of our beer higher?

Mr. PIERCE. No; it will not. This is agreed to by the Department of Agriculture, the brewers, and the growers of hops.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman can assure me this will not cause an increase in the cost of a glass of beer, I shall not object.

Mr. PIERCE. I can give the gentleman that assurance.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 c (2) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by inserting, after "soybeans", the following: ", hops,".

SEC. 2. Section 8 c (6) of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting, after "soybeans and their products", the following: ", hops,".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS IN THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7727, to authorize the administration of oaths by the Chief Clerk and the Assistant Chief Clerk of the Office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby conferred upon the Chief Clerk and the Assistant Chief Clerk, respectively, of the Office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, the authority whenever either of them is required or deems it necessary or proper so to do at any place within the territorial limits of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition, and to perform any notarial act which any notary public is required or authorized by law to do within the United States or any of its possessions. Every such oath, affirmation, affidavit, deposition, and notarial act administered, sworn, affirmed, taken, had, or done, by or before such Chief Clerk or Assistant Chief Clerk when certified under their respective hands and accompanied by a certificate attesting the official position of the person certifying as such Chief Clerk or Assistant Chief Clerk, under the hand and the seal of office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands or of the Acting United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, shall be as valid, and of like force and effect within the United States and its possessions, to all intents and purposes, as if administered, sworn, affirmed, taken, had, or done by or before any other person within the United States or its possessions duly authorized and competent thereto.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall willfully and corruptly misstate, or by any means procure any person to misstate, any material fact or matter in any such oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition, or shall forge any of the signatures or the seal hereinbefore mentioned or shall tender in evidence any of the documents heretofore mentioned with a false or counterfeit seal or signature thereto, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, may be charged and tried in any court of the United States or of its possessions, including the Commonwealth of the Philippines, within whose territorial jurisdiction he may be found, and upon conviction of any offense herein described shall be imprisoned for not less than 1 nor more than 3 years and fined in a sum not to exceed $3,000.

SEC. 3. Any document mentioned herein purporting to have subscribed thereto or thereon the signature of the official administering or taking the same in testimony thereof, when accompanied by the above-mentioned certificate of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands or of the Acting United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, shall be admitted in evidence without proof of the genuineness of the signature or seal of any official herein mentioned or of the official position of such official.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "thereto", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to limit or to replace any provision of law now in force in the Philippine Islands relative to the administration of oaths or the performance of notarial acts therein."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

In computing the indebtedness of the people of Puerto Rico, municipal bonds for the payment of interest and principal of which the good faith of the people of Puerto Rico has heretofore been pledged and bonds issued by the people of Puerto Rico secured by bonds to an equivalent amount of bonds of municipal corporations or school boards of Puerto Rico shall not be counted, but all bonds hereafter issued by any municipality or subdivision within the 5 percent hereby authorized for which the good faith of the people of Puerto Rico is pledged shall be counted:

"And it is further provided, That the internal-revenue taxes levied by the Legislature of Puerto Rico in pursuance of the authority granted by this act on articles, goods, wares, or merchandise may be levied and collected as such legislature may direct, on the articles subject to said tax, as soon as the same are manufactured, sold, used, or brought into the island: Provided, That no discrimination be made between the articles imported from the United States or foreign countries and similar articles produced or manufactured in Puerto Rico. With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 7, strike out "counted:" and insert "counted."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEDICAL AND DENTAL OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2463, to authorize an additional number of medical and dental officers for the Army.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1937, there shall be authorized 1,083 officers of the Medical Corps and 208 officers of the Dental Corps, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 30, 1922 (42 Stat. 721), and the authorized commissioned strength of the Army is hereby increased by 75 in order to provide for the increases herein authorized in the number of officers in the Medical and Dental Corps.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 10 of the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes', approved June 3, 1916, be amended by providing that on and after July 1, 1937, there shall be officers as now authorized by law, except that there shall be four assistants to the Surgeon General with the rank of brigadier general, one of whom shall be an officer in the Dental Corps, and 1,183 officers of the Medical Corps and 258 officers of the Dental Corps.

"SEC. 2. That the act entitled 'An act to authorize officers of the Medical Corps to count certain service in computing their rights in retirement, and for other purposes', approved May 29, 1928, be amended by adding at the end thereof 'service as Contract Dental Surgeons and Acting Dental Surgeons shall be credited to the officers of the Dental Corps for the purpose of retirement.'"

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER] if this bill, which authorizes an additional number of medical and dental officers, also includes veterinary officers.

Mr. HARTER. Additional medical and dental officers are authorized by this bill. The reason for the authorization is the fact that the enlisted strength of the Army has been brought up from 118,000 men to 165,000 men, which necessitates the induction of additional medical and dental officers in their respective corps. Under the appropriation bill for the War Department this year 50 additional medical officers are included and 25 additional dental officers.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. May I say to the gentleman I understand that situation, and I am very much in agreement with the purposes of the bill, but does not the gentleman think there ought also to be provision made for taking care of a veterinary officer with the rank of brigadier general?

Mr. HARTER. No representations were made to the committee during the hearings that were had upon this bill. No doubt, if the gentleman feels that way, the gentleman will introduce a bill covering the subject.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I do not want to object to the bill or offer an amendment, but is it possible under the provisions of the pending bill that the veterinary corps may be represented in the person of a brigadier general, and does not the gentleman think this is justified under the facts and circumstances?

Mr. HARTER. I believe that is a matter in the hands of the administrative officers of the War Department, particularly, the Surgeon General.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Does the gentleman have any assurance from the high officials of the War Department that any provision will be made to take care of the Veterinary Corps?

Mr. HARTER. I have no such assurance.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CREDITS TO DISBURSING OFFICERS, SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEADS CORPORATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2157) authorizing credits to disbursing officers for expenses incident to the creation of subsistence homesteads corporations.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for all otherwise proper payments heretofore made by them as fees and expenses incident to the creation or organization of subsistence homesteads corporations sponsored by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to Executive Order No. 6209 of July 21, 1933.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SITKA COLD STORAGE CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5859) authorizing the Territory of Alaska to transfer a certain tract of land to Sitka Cold Storage Co., a corporation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Territory of Alaska, through the Governor of Alaska, is hereby authorized to transfer and convey to the Sitka Cold Storage Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Alaska, that certain tract of land situated at Sitka, Alaska, the same having been mistakenly included in the tract of land granted to the Territory by the provisions of Public Law No. 134, Seventy-third Congress, approved March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 502), entitled "An act granting abandoned public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", said tract of land being described as follows, to wit:

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ARMY BAND

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6173) to authorize the attendance of the Army Band at the national convention of the Military Order of the Purple Heart to be held in Philadelphia, Pa., August 7, 1937.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

HELIUM GAS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7494) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act authorizing the conservation, production, and exploitation of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense, and to the development of commercial aeronautics, and for other purposes.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a very controversial bill, probably the most controversial bill that we have had here today. It is a very important bill, one that was so controversial in the Committee on Military Affairs that 10 members of that committee signed minority views. I think it should not come up on the Consent Calendar, but should come in under a rule. Therefore, I object.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman is one of the committee who, with myself, joined others in an expression of minority views on the bill relating to two principal subjects, one the exportation of helium gas to foreign countries under certain conditions, and, second, to the exploitation and destruction of a private ownership, the only one in the United States engaged in the helium-gas business. Amendments have been put on the bill by the committee to take care of one feature of it, and I have an amendment on the Speaker's desk that will take care of the other feature.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman will have to admit that this was perhaps the most controversial bill that we had in the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Be it enacted, etc., That subsequent to the enactment of this act no commemorative coins shall be coined or issued pursuant to any act of Congress, authorizing the coinage and issuance of commemorative coins, enacted prior to the date of the enactment of this act: Provided, That the foregoing prohibition shall not apply to the coinage and issuance prior to January 1, 1939, of 50-cent pieces authorized by acts of Congress to be coined in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam, of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk (Va.) land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., and the centennial of the independence of Texas.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT OR NEAR ARROW ROCK, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6975, granting the consent of Congress to the county court of Saline County, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. NELSON. I may explain that this is not new legislation. A similar bill was passed in the previous session of Congress. This is merely to correct an error in the original bill. The privilege was granted in a previous session, and this is merely renewing a privilege granted in the previous bill. It is not a new proposition at all.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This bill utilizes public roads for private gain. I am opposed to toll bridges in all circumstances. I crossed a bridge between Cincinnati and Covington that was built in 1859 and they are still collecting tolls. I am opposed to it. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE OVER LAKE SABINE NEAR PORT ARTHUR, TEX.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER AT OWENSBORO, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7767, creating the Owensboro Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, Ky.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Owensboro Bridge Commission (hereinafter created, and hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") and its successors and assigns be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at or near the city of Owensboro, Ky., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act. For like purposes said Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to purchase, maintain, and operate all or any ferries across the Ohio River within 15 miles of the location which shall be selected for said bridge, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Commission and its successors and assigns the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Indiana and the Commonwealth of Kentucky as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in said State, respectively.

SEC. 3. The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and such ferry or ferries in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and its approaches (including the approach highways which, in the judgment of the Commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing improved highways) and the ferry or ferries and the necessary land, easements, and appurtenances thereto by an issue or issues of negotiable bonds of the Commission, bearing interest at not more than 6 percent per annum, the principle and interest of which bonds and any premium to be paid for retirement thereof before maturity shall be payable solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act. Such bonds may be registrable as to principle alone or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 25 years from their respective dates, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places as the Commission may determine. The Commission may repurchase and may reserve the right to redeem all or any of said bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices, not exceeding 105 and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the Commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. The Commission, when it deems it to the best interest of the Commission, may issue refunding bonds to repurchase and redeem any outstanding bonds, before the maturity thereof, which it may issue: Providing, That the refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times, not exceeding 20 years, as the Commission may determine. The Commission may enter into an agreement with any bond or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the Commission in respect of the construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge and/or the ferry or ferries, the conservation and application of all funds, the safeguarding of money on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of said trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporations. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with the law and also provisions for approval by the original purchasers of the bonds of the employment of consulting engineers and of the security given by the bridge contractors and by any bank or trust company in which the proceeds of bonds or of bridge or ferry tolls or other moneys of the Commission shall be deposited, and may provide that no contract for construction shall be made without the approval of the consulting engineers.

The bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be deemed to be an instrumentality for interstate commerce, the Postal Service, and military and other purposes authorized by the Government of the United States, and said bridge and ferry or ferries and the bonds issued in connection therewith and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from all Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation. Said bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the Commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of more than 6 percent interest on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values, and the face amount thereof shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, the cost of the bridge and its approaches, and the land, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith, and, in the event the ferry or ferries are to be acquired, also the cost of such ferry or ferries and the lands, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith, when added to any other funds made available to the Commission for the use of said purposes. The cost of the bridge and approaches and approach highways, and ferry or ferries, shall be deemed to include interest during construction of the bridge, and for 12 months thereafter, and all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic-surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge or the acquisition of the ferry or ferries, and the acquisition of the necessary property, and incident to the financing thereof, including the cost of acquiring existing franchises, right, plans, and works of and relating to the bridge, now owned by any person, firm, or corporation, and the cost of purchasing all or any part of the shares of stock of any such corporate owner if, in the judgment of the Commission, such purchases should be found expedient. If the proceeds of the bonds issued shall exceed the cost as finally determined, the excess be placed in the sinking fund hereinafter provided. Prior to the preparation of definitive bonds the Commission may, under like restrictions, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates with or without coupons or any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definitive bonds when such bonds that have been executed are available for delivery.

SEC. 5. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds as the same shall fall due and the redemption or repurchase price of all or any thereof redeemed or repurchased before maturity as herein provided. All tolls and other revenues from said bridge are hereby pledged to such uses and to the application thereof as hereinafter in this section required. After payment or provision for payment therefrom of all such cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating and the reservation of an amount of money estimated to be sufficient for the same purpose during an ensuing period of not more than 6 months, the remainder of tolls collected shall be placed in the sinking fund, at intervals to be determined by the Commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. The Commission shall classify in a reasonable way all traffic over the bridge, so that the tolls shall be so fixed and adjusted by it as to be uniform in the application thereof to all traffic falling within any such reasonable class, regardless of the status or character of any person, firm, or corporation participating in such traffic, and shall prevent all use of such bridge for traffic except upon payment of the tolls so fixed and adjusted. No toll shall be charged officials or employees of the Commission or the Government of the United States or any State, county, or municipality in the United States while in the discharge of their duties, or municipal police or fire departments when engaged in the proper work of any such department.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall require the Commission or its successors to maintain or operate any ferry or ferries purchased hereunder, but in the discretion of the Commission or its successors any ferry or ferries so purchased, with the appurtenances and property thereto connected and belonging, may be sold or otherwise disposed of or may be abandoned and/or dismantled whenever in the judgment of the Commission or its successors it may seem expedient so to do. The Commission and its successors may fix such rates of toll for the use of such ferry or ferries as it may deem proper, subject to the same conditions as are hereinabove required as to tolls for traffic over the bridge. All tolls collected for the use of the ferry or ferries and the proceeds of any sale or disposition of any ferry or ferries shall be used, so far as may be necessary, to pay the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and any residue thereof shall be paid into the sinking fund hereinabove provided for bonds. An accurate record of the cost of purchasing the ferry or ferries, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 7. After payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment shall have been provided and shall be held for that purpose, the Commission shall deliver deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance of the interest of the Commission in and to the bridge, that part within Indiana to the State of Indiana or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereafter referred to as the Indiana interests) and that part within Kentucky to the Commonwealth of Kentucky or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereinafter referred to as the Kentucky interests), under the condition that the bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls and be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by the Indiana interests and the Kentucky interests, as may be agreed upon; but if either the Indiana interests or the Kentucky interests shall not be authorized to accept or shall not accept the same under such conditions, then the bridge shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the Commission, and the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management, until such time as both the Indiana interests and the Kentucky interests shall be authorized to accept and shall accept such conveyance under such conditions. If at the time of such conveyance the Commission or its successors shall not have disposed of such ferry or ferries, the same shall be disposed of by sale as soon as practicable, at such price and upon such terms as the Commission or its successors may determine.

(a) Notwithstanding any restriction or limitation imposed by the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, or by the Federal Highway Act, or by an act amendatory of or supplemental to either thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture may extend Federal aid under such acts, for the construction of said bridge, out of any moneys allocated to the State of Indiana with the consent of the Department of Highways of said State, and out of any moneys allocated to the Commonwealth of Kentucky with the consent of the Department of Highways of said State.

SEC. 8. For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the Owensboro Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession; may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain and defend in all courts of law and equity; may make and have a common seal; may purchase or otherwise acquire and hold or dispose of real estate and other property; may accept and receive donations or gifts of money or other property and apply same to the purposes of this act; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

The Commission shall consist of A. S. Griffin, James R. Wilson, Sam C. Coots, W. J. Hinchey, and E. G. Lindeman. Such Commission shall be a body corporate and politic. Each member of the Commission shall qualify within 30 days after the approval of this act by filing in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture an oath that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act, and each person appointed to fill a vacancy shall qualify in like manner within 30 days after his appointment. Any vacancy occurring in said Commission by reason of failure to qualify as above provided, or by reason of death or resignation, shall be filled by the Secretary of Agriculture. Before the issuance of bonds as hereinabove provided, each member of the Commission shall give such bond as may be fixed by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all duties required by this act. The Commission shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from its members, and may establish rules and regulations for the government of its own business. A majority of the members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 9. The Commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenues and receipts thereof shall be applied to the purposes specified in this act. The members of the Commission shall be entitled to a per-diem compensation for their services of $10 per day for each day actually spent in the business of the Commission, but the maximum compensation of the chairman in any year shall not exceed $2,500 and of each other member shall not exceed $500. The members of the Commission shall also be entitled to receive traveling-expense allowance of 10 cents a mile for each mile actually traveled on the business of the Commission. The Commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorney, and other such experts, assistants, and employees as they may deem necessary, who shall be entitled to receive such compensation as the Commission may determine. All salaries and expenses shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act. After all bonds and interest thereon shall have been paid and all other obligations of the Commission paid or discharged, or provision for all such payment shall have been made as hereinbefore provided, and after the bridge shall have been conveyed to the Indiana interests and the Kentucky interests as herein provided, and any ferry or ferries shall have been sold, the Commission shall be dissolved and shall cease to have further existence by an order of the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads made upon his own initiative or upon application of the Commission or any member or members thereof, but only after a public hearing in the city of Owensboro, Ky., notice of the time and place of which hearing and the purpose thereof shall have been published once, at least 30 days before the date thereof, in a newspaper published in the city of Owensboro. At the time of such dissolution all moneys in the hands of or to the credit of the Commission shall be divided into two equal parts, one of which shall be paid to said Indiana interests and the other to said Kentucky interests.

SEC. 10. Notwithstanding any of the provisions of this act, the Commission shall have full power and authority to negotiate and enter into a contract or contracts with the State Highway Commission of Indiana and the Department of Highways of Kentucky, the city of Owensboro, Daviess County, Ky., or any county or municipality in the State of Indiana, whereby the Commission may receive financial aid in the construction of the bridge and approaches thereto, and the Commission may make and enter into any contract or contracts which it deems expedient and proper with the State Highway Commission of Indiana and the Department of Highways of Kentucky, whereby said highway departments or either of them may construct, operate, and maintain or participate with the Commission in the construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge and approaches. It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to facilitate the construction of a bridge and proper approaches across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, and to authorize the Commission to promote said object and purposes, with full power to contract either with the State Highway Commission of Indiana or the Department of Highways of Kentucky, or both, in relation to the construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge and approaches.

SEC. 11. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize or permit the Commission or any member thereof to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds provided by this act. No obligation created or liability incurred pursuant to this act shall be an obligation or liability of any member or members of the Commission but shall be chargeable solely to the funds herein provided, nor shall any indebtedness created pursuant to this act be an indebtedness of the United States.

SEC. 12. All provisions of this act may be enforced or the violation thereof prevented by mandamus, injunction, or other appropriate remedy brought by the attorney general for the State of Indiana, the attorney general for the Commonwealth of Kentucky, or the United States district attorney for any district in which the bridge may be located in part, in any court having competent jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties.

SEC. 13. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

FREE HIGHWAY BRIDGE ACROSS SINEPUXENT BAY AT OCEAN CITY, MD.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7806, authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Sinepunxent Bay in Worcester County, Md., at Ocean City, Md., to replace a bridge already in existence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the author of the bill present?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. COSTELLO. As I understand, this bill would authorize the building of a free bridge across Sinepuxent Bay in Maryland, as also does the next bill on the calendar. In view of the fact that this is not a navigable stream and that it is entirely within the State of Maryland, there appears to be no necessity for Federal authority to build the bridge. According to the report of the Secretary of War on both this bill and the succeeding bill, the only necessity is to obtain authority from the State of Maryland, and it does not properly come before Congress, so it would appear that the enactment of the legislation would be unnecessary.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman is mistaken. Both of these are navigable waters. Sinepuxent Bay is navigable, and so is Cambridge Creek in Dorchester County. They are both navigable waters. If the gentleman has ever been to Ocean City, he would notice that he has to cross a bridge before he gets to Ocean City. That is all navigable water.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I think it would be interesting to know that Sinepuxent Bay is connected by an inlet from the ocean, which inlet is constructed and maintained at Government expense. It is clearly navigable at this time. I think the objection might have applied before the inlet was cut through.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. But it is all navigable. There are yachts anchored all around on both sides of the bridge.

Mr. COSTELLO. How about the following bill that comes right after it?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is a little creek in Dorchester County. That is navigable water also.

Mr. COSTELLO. There is no necessity, according to the report of the War Department. All that is necessary is for the State of Maryland to grant authority and that the plans be submitted to the War Department and approved without specific legislation for this purpose, regardless of the question of navigability.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. At Ocean City the present bridge crosses navigable water, for the Government has dredged the inlet. There is a yacht basin at North River. It certainly is navigable, I will say to the gentleman, for I have navigated it.

Mr. COSTELLO. Was authority for the original bridge granted by Congress to the State of Maryland?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. In both cases; yes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is not that authority sufficient to carry over for the new bridge?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; it is not, because conditions might change from time to time. The Acting Secretary says that this bill would authorize the State Roads Commission of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Sinepuxent Bay at Ocean City, Md., and favorable action on this bill is recommended. I just do not know what point the gentleman is making.

Mr. COSTELLO. Simply that the War Department alleges that the passage of this legislation is unnecessary.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It does not allege that so far as I know.

Mr. COSTELLO. The last line of Secretary Woodring's letter reads:

The enactment of this measure therefore appears to be unnecessary.

In other words, the original bridge was authorized and now it is only desired to replace that bridge. In order to do this no further action is necessary except possibly by the State of Maryland, with approval of the plans and specifications by the War Department.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman is speaking about the bridge across Cambridge Creek. The bill now under consideration is the one providing for a bridge across Sinepuxent Inlet.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is the one to which I refer, the bridge across Sinepuxent Inlet.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. CHAPMAN. The committee considered this. In view of the fact that there is a difference of opinion as to whether these waters are navigable, and there is some question, they thought it should be treated as though the waters were navigable.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across Sinepunxent Bay, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in Worcester County, Md., at Ocean City, Md., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7953, to provide for studies and plans for the development of reclamation projects on the Cimarron River in Cimarron County, Okla.; the Washita River in Oklahoma, and the North Canadian River in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized (a) to conduct surveys and investigations in order to determine the feasibility and economic usefulness of the development of reclamation projects embracing certain lands on the Washita River in Oklahoma, and certain lands on the North Canadian River in Oklahoma, and certain lands on the Cimarron River, in Cimarron County, Okla.; and (b) if such development is determined to be feasible and economically useful, to prepare cost of estimates and designs for the construction of dams at such sites and such additional or incidental facilities as are necessary to carry out such development.

SEC. 2. That any funds appropriated for the fiscal year 1938 providing for surveys under the Reclamation Act may be used to carry out the provisions of this act.

The Clerk read as follows:

CREATION OF THE PALISADES INTERSTATE PARK COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 445, granting the consent of Congress to a compact between the States of New York and New Jersey providing for the creation of the Palisades Interstate Park Commission as a joint corporate municipal instrumentality of said States with appropriate rights, powers, duties, and immunities, for the transfer to said commission of certain functions, jurisdiction, rights, powers, and duties together with the properties of the bodies politic now existing in each State known as "Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park", and for the continuance of the Palisades Interstate Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY] whether there has been any request from the New York State Legislature for any such legislation?

Mr. KENNEY. The request came down from the commission, which was set up by both the States of New York and New Jersey. The gentleman perhaps knows that the compact was entered into, and the laws of both States required that the commission ratify it. It has been ratified and approved, and the bill has been sent down by the commission for action by the Congress.

Mr. FISH. The New York State Palisades Park Commission has unanimously recommended this action?

Mr. KENNEY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do so for the purpose of making an inquiry about jurisdiction. The Committee on the Judiciary, so far as I know, has always had jurisdiction with reference to interstate compacts. This bill seems to have been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I reserved the right to object, and I shall not object in this instance, to raise only the question of jurisdiction. In other words, as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I do not want to yield the jurisdiction of that committee as a permanent proposition. I have no objection to this bill, but I want it understood we do not consent that it shall become a precedent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to a compact between the States of New York and New Jersey providing for the creation of the Palisades Interstate Park Commission as a joint corporate municipal instrumentality of said States with appropriate rights, powers, duties, and immunities, for the transfer to said commission of certain functions, jurisdiction, rights, powers, and duties together with the properties of the bodies politic now existing in each State known as "Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park", and for the continuance of the Palisades Interstate Park.

Whereas, pursuant to chapter 170 of the Laws of 1937 of the State of New York and chapter 148 of the Laws of 1937 of the State of New Jersey, the States of New York and New Jersey entered into a compact which is as follows:

"COMPACT

"Whereas, heretofore the States of New York and New Jersey have cooperated in the establishment and maintenance of an interstate park along the front of the Palisades in said States and in the mountainous lands in Rockland and Orange Counties in the State of New York, by respectively enacting legislation creating in each State a body politic by the name and style of "Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park", with power to acquire lands for such park, and improve and manage the same, and by respectively appointing, in practically all cases, the same persons as members of each of such State bodies politic; and

"Whereas it is confidently believed that the creation, by interstate compact, of a joint corporate municipal instrumentality to hold and manage such interstate park will provide greater flexibility and harmony in the management of the park,

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the mutual advantages and benefits to accrue to the peoples of the States of New York and New Jersey from this compact and in consideration of the mutual covenants of the parties hereto herein contained, the sovereign State of New York and the sovereign State of New Jersey do hereby agree as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"The park or parks in the State of New York under the jurisdiction, management, or control of Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, a body politic created pursuant to chapter 170 of the laws of 1900 of the State of New York (hereinafter referred to as 'New York State board'), and the park or parks in the State of New Jersey now under the jurisdiction, management, or control of Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, a body politic created pursuant to chapter 87 of the laws of 1900 of the State of New Jersey (hereinafter referred to as 'New Jersey State board', the New York State board and the New Jersey State board being hereinafter referred to collectively as 'State boards'), shall continue to exist and shall be maintained in the two States as an interstate park for the use of the public and for the purpose of preserving the scenic beauty of the Palisades and other lands therein. Such park shall be called 'Palisades Interstate Park.' The parties hereto do hereby agree to and pledge, each to the other, faithful cooperation in the future planning, improvement, development, maintenance, government, and management of the park, holding in high trust for the benefit of the public the special blessings and natural advantages thereof.

"ARTICLE II

"There is hereby created a body corporate and politic with the name and style of 'Palisades Interstate Park Commission' (for brevity hereinafter referred to as 'the commission') which shall be a joint corporate municipal instrumentality of both the State of New York and the State of New Jersey for the purpose of effecting the objects of this compact and which shall be deemed to be performing governmental functions of the two States in the performance of its duties hereunder. The commission shall have power to sue and be sued, to use a common seal and to make and adopt suitable bylaws. The commission shall consist of 10 members, 5 of whom shall be citizens and residents of the State of New York and 5 of whom shall be citizens and residents of the State of New Jersey. For the purpose of doing business the members of the commission shall constitute a board. The present members of the two State boards shall be the first members of the commission for their respective States for the remainder of the terms for which they were respectively appointed. Each member of the commission shall be a citizen and resident of the State of which his predecessor was a citizen and each member of the commission other than the first members shall be appointed by the Governor of the State of which his predecessor was a citizen, by and with the approval of the senate of such State. Each member shall take an oath of office to perform faithfully all of the duties of his office according to the best of his ability. Such oath of office may be administered by any officer of the State of which such member is a citizen who is authorized to take oaths of office of any State officer and shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state of such State. The term of office of each member other than said first members shall be 5 years. Each member shall hold office until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have taken his oath of office, but each term shall be deemed to commence at the end of the preceding 5-year term regardless of when the incumbent is appointed or takes the oath of office. If a member shall cease to be a citizen and resident of the State for which he was appointed, he shall cease to be a member of the commission. If a member of the commission shall die, resign, be removed, refuse to act, or cease to be a citizen and resident of the State for which he was appointed, the vacancy so created shall be filled, for the unexpired term only, by the appointment of a citizen and resident of the State of which such member was a citizen by the Governor thereof, by and with the approval of the senate of such State. Each member of the commission may be removed from office for neglect of duty or misconduct in office by the Governor of the State of which such member is a citizen after giving such member a copy of the charges against him and an opportunity of being publicly heard in person or by counsel or both in his own defense, upon not less than 10 days' notice. No member of the commission shall receive any compensation for his services as a member, but each member shall be entitled to receive his actual disbursements for his expenses in performing the duties of his office. The commission shall annually choose a president, a vice president, a treasurer, and a secretary from among its members, and may also appoint such other officers as it may deem necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this compact.

"ARTICLE III

"There are hereby transferred to the commission all of the functions, jurisdiction, rights, powers, and duties of the respective State boards, as now prescribed by the laws of the respective States, and the same shall hereafter be exercised and performed by the commission, subject to such modifications thereof as are contained in this compact. Either the State of New York or the State of New Jersey may by law applicable to parks or park commissions generally within such State, or by law specifically applicable to the commission or to any of the parks within such State under its jurisdiction, and without the concurrence of the other State, withdraw, modify, alter, or amend any of the functions, jurisdiction, rights, powers, and duties transferred to the commission by this article or confer additional functions, jurisdiction, rights, powers, and duties on the commission, but such action by one State shall be effective only within the territorial limits of such State. The commission shall also have such additional functions, jurisdiction, rights, powers, and duties as may be conferred upon it by both States.

"ARTICLE IV

"1. All legal and equitable title to or in any property, tangible or intangible and whether real, personal, or mixed, used or held as a part of, in connection with, or for the purposes of the park or parks now under the jurisdiction, management, or control of the respective state boards, or connected with the maintenance or control thereof, in so far as the same shall have heretofore been vested in either of such State boards, is hereby transferred to and vested in the commission, subject to such liens, easements, permits, life rights, and other contracts relating thereto or in respect thereof as may now lawfully exist. All such legal and equitable title shall, upon the taking effect of this compact, forthwith and thereafter reside in the commission without further act or deed or transfer.

"2. The commission shall succeed and shall be, and hereby is, substituted for each of the State boards in so far as either of them has any obligation or liability to any person, firm, or corporation, has undertaken or commenced any proceeding or other business, is a party to any action, suit, or proceeding (the substitution of the commission for either of the State boards in any action, suit, or proceeding to be deemed to be by operation hereof without motion or order) or has issued or promulgated any orders, rules, or regulations, and also in so far as consistent with the other provisions and the purposes of this compact, the commission should be regarded as succeeding and as substituted for either of the State boards in any other respect in order that the purposes of this compact may be accomplished. The balance of all appropriations heretofore made by either State and remaining to the credit of either of the State boards, to which either State board is entitled, or in the future would become entitled if its existence continued, shall be deemed to be appropriations to the commission herein created, and the commission shall, upon the taking effect of this compact, succeed to all the rights to any such appropriations theretofore made with the same force and effect as if the commission had originally been specifically named in the respective appropriation acts instead of the respective State boards for which such appropriations were made.

"3. All lands the title to which is hereby transferred to or shall hereafter be owned by the commission shall be and continue under the jurisdiction of the commission and shall be used only for public-park purposes and none of said lands or any part thereof shall be sold, exchanged, or conveyed except with the consent of both States by specific enactments: Provided, however, That the commission shall have power to grant easements, licenses, permits, and other rights over any lands held by it in either State when in the opinion of the commission the same will not interfere with the use and enjoyment of the park by the public.

"4. Each State may by legislation make rules and regulations for the use and government, including regulation of traffic, of such portions of the park as lie within the boundaries of the State, and such parts of any State, county, or other public highways as lie within the limits of such portions of the park, and all lands, parks, and parkways in the State under the jurisdiction of the commission, prescribe the penalty or penalties for violation of any such rules or regulations, prescribe the procedure for enforcement of any such penalty or penalties and provide the court or courts in which any such enforcement is to be sought.

"ARTICLE V

"1. All money, securities, and other property, real and personal, heretofore received by either of the State boards or hereafter received by the commission by way of gift, bequest or devise, may be retained by the commission and, except insofar as the purpose or manner of using the same is otherwise specifically designated or restricted by the terms of any such gift, bequest or devise, may be used in the commission's discretion in either State for any park purpose; and the commission may likewise retain and use all revenue and income arising solely from such money, securities, and other property so received by way of gift, bequest or devise or from facilities or operations financed solely by funds so received. In the case of revenue and income arising partly from specific property received by way of gift, bequest or devise or from specific facilities or operations financed partly by funds so received, the commission may likewise retain and use such proportion of such revenue and income as the amount of gifts, bequests or devises, or the proceeds thereof, invested in each such property, facility or operation, bears to the total amount invested therein. The legislature of either State may from time to time by law specifically made applicable to the commission prescribe other terms and conditions upon which or purposes for which any gifts, bequests or devises thereafter made of money, securities, or other property may be accepted for use in such State or used in such State or prescribe a different manner of administering gifts, bequests or devises thereafter made in such State and the disposition of all revenues or income arising therefrom.

"2. Either State may from time to time by law require the commission to render to any designated official or official body or such State such reports and such estimates of revenues and expenditures as may be specified in such law.

"ARTICLE VI

"The commission shall not pledge the credit of either State except by and with the authority of the legislature thereof.

"ARTICLE VII

"Neither the State of New York nor the State of New Jersey shall be liable for any torts of the commission, its members, officers, or employees, except as provided by the laws of such State, but each member, officer, and employee of the commission shall, with respect to any tort committed by him in the exercise of his duties or in the course of his employment as such member, officer, or employee, be deemed to be an officer or employee of the State where such tort was committed, and any liability arising from such tort shall be governed by the laws of such State.

"ARTICLE VIII

"This compact may be amended from time to time by the concurrent action of the two States who are parties hereto.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the consent of Congress is hereby given to said compact, and to each and every part and article thereof: Provided, That nothing therein contained shall be construed as impairing or in any manner affecting any right or jurisdiction of the United States in and over the region which forms the subject of said compact.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to take the time of the House, but I believe I ought to call the attention of the Members to a significant fact in connection with this bill. The bill, after it is passed by Congress, will set up the first park in which two States have united for joint control. As if by fate, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce sent the bill to a subcommittee, appointing as its chairman the able gentleman from Indiana, an advocate of outdoor life, which adds years to its span and a nephew of the sponsor of our first national park, Yellowstone, carved out of sections of Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho, and constituting the world's greatest geyser area and world-famous game sanctuary. The chairman of the subcommittee has an inborn interest in our great parks. Consequently, he was disposed to and did expedite the resolution for consideration by the full committee. Having had the privilege of introducing the bill, I wish to pay my compliments to the chairman of the subcommitee, our colleague SAMUEL PETTENGILL. It was his uncle, then a Delegate from Montana, who sponsored the founding of Yellowstone Park, the first of our great national parks. Back in the last century William H. Clagett, Delegate in this House from Montana, gave of his energy and vision to establish our first national park. Now SAMUEL PETTENGILL, William H. Clagett's nephew, faithful to the cause, is aiding the progress of the world-renowned Palisades Interstate Park.

The resolution before the House undertakes to ratify a compact between two States for the better development and management of a great interstate park.

This proposed legislation is in harmony with the act of June 23, 1936 (49 Stat. 1894, ch. 735), section 3 of which provides as follows:

> The consent of Congress is hereby given to any two or more States to negotiate and enter into compacts or agreements with one another with reference to planning, establishing, developing, improving, and maintaining any park, parkway, or recreational area. No such compact or agreement shall be effective until approved by the legislatures of the several States which are parties thereto and by the Congress of the United States.

Following years of study a compact between the States of New York and New Jersey for the administration and development of the Palisades Interstate Park was drawn and submitted to the respective legislatures of those two States. This compact this year was adopted by each, signed by the respective authorized commissions, and approved by the Governor of each State. It remains only for Congress to approve, as provided in the Constitution, and the compact becomes effective.

Palisades Interstate Park was the first undertaking in which two sovereign States united for joint action in a vast project. It represents a cooperative enterprise of unparalleled success. The attendance in the park is greater than in any other park in the world. It is estimated that 14,382,622 people visited the park in the year 1936. Park lands consist of approximately 46,000 acres in New York and approximately 1,700 acres in New Jersey. The lands in New York are mostly mountainous and were valued at the times of their acquisition at a total of $7,524,671.08, while the lands in New Jersey, being located nearer New York City, were valued as acquired at a total of $10,914,306.

Since the creation of the park 36 years ago, in 1900, the State of New York has dedicated to it land valued at $170,000 and appropriated $22,594,735.38 in money, or a total of $22,764,735.38. The State of New Jersey has appropriated $3,291,415.37. The totals of these State appropriations include all sums appropriated for current maintenance and operating expenses during all the years. In addition to these State contributions, gifts of money and land have been made to the park by private donors of whom the family of John D. Rockefeller were generous contributors, totaling $17,799,999.57. Down to the end of 1935 the grand total of the money and property received from the two States and from private contributors for all purposes amounts to $43,856,150.32.

Palisades Interstate Park was established in 1900 to preserve the scenic beauty and natural resources of the Palisades. The machinery set up at that time for its management consisted of two separate State bodies—a New Jersey commission of which Senator Edmund W. Wakelee is now president, and a New York commission of which Mr. J. Du Pratt White is president—each consisting of 10 members. It was contemplated that the activities of the two State boards would be coordinated through having identical members of the two State commissions, as they have five residents of each State. This coordination, however, without the compact which is the subject of this joint resolution, rests entirely upon comity and has no basis in law. A Governor of either State might refuse to continue this policy of appointing identical members. If this should happen, the management and development of the park as a unit would be destroyed. As a matter of fact, at one time there was a serious possibility that this unfortunate result might occur.

This compact will place the park on a more solid foundation, permitting a permanent organization for its administration and development. The many advantages of this assurance are obvious. One advantage of inestimable value to the park in gaining this solid foundation will be that the park will be a more attractive object for the bounty and generosity of public-spirited benefactors.

It is believed, and indeed it has been specifically pointed out in the instances of a number of gifts in the past, that the park has not enjoyed gifts of land and money to the fullest extent for the reason that the operation of the park as a unit has lacked the element of permanency, this lack of assured certainty being inherent in the former plan of operation. The compact will allay the fears of possible donors that there might be a change in the fundamental policy of either State toward the park and thus frustrate the purpose of their gifts. With these fears allayed the commissioners look forward to the time when they will obtain gift funds with which they can provide income-producing operations that will make the park substantially self-sustaining.

The compact will in some respects add greatly to the efficiency of the administration of the park. An example of this is in the matter of the policing of the park. The compact specifically authorizes the new interstate commission to establish a police force to operate in both the New York and New Jersey sections of the park. At the present time a park policeman in the New Jersey section of the park is not and cannot be a peace officer in New York, and vice versa, a park policeman in the New York section of the park cannot act as a peace officer in New Jersey. This situation becomes very serious in the matter of pursuit of escaping violators of the law, because in such case the peace officer of one State is compelled to stop at the State line.

Furthermore, it prevents the commission from transferring its police force back and forth in order to take care of peak loads and emergencies on one side or the other of the State line. For example, there may be in the New Jersey section on a particular day a celebration of some kind which would require a considerably larger police force than the New Jersey commission regularly employs. It is obviously economical and sensible to shift extra police from the New York section of the park into the New Jersey section to take care of this situation. In the same way there may be something going on in the New York section of the park, such as a ski-jumping contest at Bear Mountain in the winter, that makes it desirable to have extra policemen there, and sensible management of the park dictates that the New Jersey police force should be available for such use in New York.

With the approval of this compact by Congress, it is believed that the commission can confidently look forward to increasing the park's usefulness in making it even a greater instrumentality for the health and happiness of the millions of people that use it.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WORLD WAR PROVISIONAL OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1040, placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BIERMANN. I have two or three objections. One of the objections is this will cost $3,000,000. This bill is objected to by the Veterans' Administration, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. FISH. Has the gentleman made a study for himself?

Mr. BIERMANN. I have the report right here and will submit it to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. There has been great discrimination against these provisional officers. They do not qualify for compensation, they were sidetracked, yet they are the same young fellows who went into the First and Second Divisions and did the fighting for this country and were all shot up. For some unknown reason they have been discriminated against for a number of years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to further develop this a bit, because I do not believe any Member of the House wants an injustice to be done.

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not want an injustice to be done.

Mr. FISH. I am sure the gentleman does not. I would like to hear a little bit more about it, as long as the question has been raised.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Those of us who were in training camps remember well the commanding officer asking those who wanted to be commissioned and go overseas immediately to take two paces forward.

Some of those who were a little braver than the rest of us took the two steps forward, and they were sent over as provisional officers. They were denied all the privileges we were allowed by reason of the fact we stayed in camp, were commissioned later on, and then went abroad. We received our bonuses, and some of us received retirement pay. However, these fellows who patriotically stepped the two paces forward and said, "I am willing to be commissioned now and go overseas" have been denied everything that we shavetails who went over later received.

Mr. FISH. And they had casualties beyond any other group.

Mr. WOLCOTT. They were over there before any other American officers went over.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, is it not a fact those young officers acted in good faith in the belief they were to receive the same rights, benefits, and privileges as the regular officers?

Mr. FISH. I think that is so, but they went even further.

The SPEAKER. In order that the Chair may clear up the parliamentary situation, does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER] object to the request that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. HARTER. I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, in view of that objection I shall have to object to the present consideration of the bill.

BURR CREEK, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7766, to declare Burr Creek, from Fairfield Avenue southward to Yacht Street in the city of Bridgeport, Conn., a nonnavigable stream.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to how many more of these bills are we going to return? We must not get in the habit of going through the calendar and, when we get through, returning to various bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there will be only two such requests. We have finished the call of the calendar for the day.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

(d) Each third district director shall be selected as follows: Each national farm loan association and borrower through agencies in the district shall nominate, in the manner provided herein for the nomination of candidates for elected directors, one candidate for such director, and from the three persons having the greatest number of votes as nominees the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration shall appoint such director. In the case of an election of a director by national farm loan associations and borrowers through agencies, such notice shall be sent to all national farm loan associations and borrowers through agencies in the district; in the case of an election by production credit associations, such notice shall be sent to all production credit associations in the district; and in the case of an election by cooperatives which are stockholders or subscribers to the guaranty fund of the bank for cooperatives of the district, such notice shall be sent to all cooperatives which are stockholders or subscribers to the guaranty fund at the time of sending notice. After receipt of such notice those entitled to nominate the director shall forward nominations of residents of the district to the Farm Credit Administration. The Farm Credit Administration shall, from the nominations received within 30 days after the sending of such notice, prepare a list of candidates for such elected director consisting of the 10 nominees receiving the highest number of votes.

(f) At least 1 month before the election of an elected director the Farm Credit Administration shall mail to each person or organization entitled to elect the elected director the list of the 10 candidates nominated in accordance with the preceding paragraph of this section. In the case of an election of a director by national farm loan associations and borrowers through agencies, the directors of each farm loan association shall cast the vote of such association for one of the candidates on the list. In voting under this section each such association shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to the number of stockholders of such association and each borrower through agencies shall be entitled to cast one vote. In voting under this section each production credit association shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to the number of the class B stockholders of such association. In voting under this section each cooperative which is a holder of stock in, or a subscriber to the guaranty fund of, the bank for cooperatives shall be entitled to cast one vote. The votes shall be forwarded to the Farm Credit Administration, and no vote shall be counted unless received by it within 30 days after the sending of such list of candidates. In case of a tie the Farm Credit Administration shall determine the choice. The nominations from which the list of candidates is prepared, and the votes of the respective voters, as counted, shall be tabulated and preserved and shall be subject to examination by any candidate for at least 1 year after the result of the election is announced.

(g) The terms of office of all directors shall be 3 years. Any vacancies that may occur in the farm credit board shall be filled for the unexpired term in the manner provided herein for the original selection of such directors.

(h) Members of each farm credit board shall have been, for at least 2 years, residents of the district for which they are appointed or elected. From and after the date of enactment of this act, no person shall be eligible for election or appointment as a member of any district farm credit board, and no person hereafter elected or appointed as a member of any district farm credit board shall be eligible to continue to serve as such, if in either case said person is an officer or employee of any Federal land bank, Federal intermediate credit bank, production credit corporation or bank for cooperatives. "Any other provisions of law to the contrary notwithstanding, two or more national farm loan associations may with the approval of the Farm Credit Administration, and by an agreement not inconsistent with any rules and regulations prescribed by the said Administration, provide for a common board of directors to be elected by the shareholders of the associations that are parties to the agreement: Provided, however, That each member of any such board shall be a shareholder in an association that is a party to the agreement and shall be a bona fide resident of the territory within which such association is authorized to do business: And provided further, That no such agreement shall provide for a term of office in excess of 3 years for any member of such board. The number of members of the common board of directors shall be specified in the agreement and shall be five or more. The agreement may provide that any director may be elected by the shareholders of one or more of the associations which are parties to the agreement; that in the balloting for any director an association may vote at a separate meeting of its shareholders or at a joint meeting with the shareholders of any other association or associations participating in the election of the director; and that the candidate receiving the highest aggregate number of votes at such meeting or meetings shall be declared elected. Whenever two or more national farm loan associations have entered into such an agreement, the members of the common board of directors provided for in the agreement shall be ex officio the members of the board of directors of each association that is a party to the agreement, any provisions of this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Whenever a national farm loan association has entered into such an agreement, the power of approving applications for loans through the association and the power of admitting persons to membership in the association shall be vested in the loan committee of the association in lieu of being vested in its board of directors. The loan committee of any such association shall be elected annually by the shareholders of the association, instead of by its board of directors, and the shareholders shall in addition annually elect two alternates to serve as members of the loan committee at such times as regular members may be absent or disqualified."

(b) Whenever it shall appear that the capital stock of a national farm loan association is impaired, the Farm Credit Administration may authorize the Federal land bank of the district in which such association is located to make loans to applicants through such association subject to the requirements and conditions specified for direct loans in paragraphs 12 to 16, both inclusive, of section 7 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 723), except as herein otherwise specifically provided, and may authorize such association to elect to membership borrowers having loans made pursuant to said paragraphs on lands situated within the chartered territory of the association. Borrowers admitted to membership in the association pursuant hereto shall be entitled to vote and hold office in the association and the rate of interest on their loans shall be one-fourth of 1 percent per annum less than the rate of interest provided at such time for direct loans. The association shall endorse all such mortgage loans, but it shall not become liable therefor except as hereinafter provided.

When there are 10 or more borrowers admitted to membership in an association pursuant hereto whose loans are in good standing, as defined by the Farm Credit Administration, and aggregate not less than $20,000:

First. The association shall become liable for the payment of said loans: Provided, however, That, any other provisions of law to the contrary notwithstanding, the shareholders who have become members pursuant to this subsection shall not be held responsible, through the amount paid in and represented by their shares or otherwise, for any contracts, debts, or engagements of the association entered into before the date on which the first member was admitted to the association pursuant to this subsection and the shareholders of such association who were members prior to said date shall not be held responsible, through the amount paid in and represented by their shares or otherwise, for any mortgages endorsed by such association on or after said date, but this provision shall not be construed to relieve any other liability with respect to stock held by shareholders who were members prior to said date.

Second. The interest rate paid by each such borrower on each such loan shall, beginning with the next regular installment date, be reduced one-fourth of 1 percent per annum.

Third. The stock in the Federal land bank held by each of said borrowers shall be exchanged for association stock in the manner provided for in paragraph 15 of section 7 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 723, subsection (d)).

Fourth. The association may thereafter admit new members, endorse their loans, and become liable for the payment of such loans as provided in paragraph "First" of this subsection.

Fifth. At the next annual meeting of stockholders, and thereafter, the loan committee of such association may be elected by the members who become stockholders pursuant to this subsection and any loan committee so elected shall have the powers specified for loan committees elected as provided in subsection (a) of this section: Provided, however, That in the event such stockholders fail to elect the loan committee, new members shall be admitted to the association as otherwise provided in the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended.

Sixth. In accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Farm Credit Administration, the association shall maintain separate capital-stock records; shall keep all capital losses or gains, reserves (including legal reserves), and dividends received from the Federal land bank on stock owned by the association in connection with loans for which it becomes liable as provided in this subsection separate and apart from capital losses or gains, reserves (including legal reserves), and dividends received from the Federal land bank on stock owned by the association in connection with other loans of the association; and shall segregate any undivided profits of the association resulting from its business operations in like manner when so required by rules and regulations of the Farm Credit Administration. Subject to the other provisions of the Federal Farm Loan Act with respect to the declaration of dividends, dividends may be declared exclusively on association stock owned by borrowers with loans for which the association becomes liable as provided in this subsection or exclusively on association stock owned by borrowers with other loans through the association.

If the loan of any borrower who was admitted to membership pursuant hereto is not in good standing at the time when there are 10 or more borrowers with loans aggregating not less than $20,000 which are in good standing, the provisions of paragraphs "First", "Second", and "Third" of this subsection shall be applicable to his loan at such time as it shall be placed in good standing.

If and when all impairment is removed in the stock owned by shareholders with loans which were made prior to the date on which the first member was admitted to the association pursuant to this subsection, the holders of such stock and the holders of stock issued on and after said date may, pursuant to rules and regulations of the Farm Credit Administration and consistent with the provisions of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, agree as to the rights, powers, privileges, duties, and liabilities which shall thenceforth attach to their respective shares of stock and otherwise agree as to the future applicability, if any, of the special provisions contained in this subsection.

(c) Section 11 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 761), is amended by adding a paragraph at the end thereof reading as follows:

"Fifth. Whenever a Federal land bank shall have empowered any national farm loan association of its district to collect and pay over to said bank the dues, interest, amortization installments, and other sums payable under the terms, conditions, and covenants of the mortgages taken from its shareholders, such association may, with the approval of said bank, enter into an agreement with another association operating in the same or adjacent territory to make such collections, for and on behalf of the association thus empowered to do so, on any or all of said loans, and immediately pay the amounts so collected to said land bank. Such agreements shall be made upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as may be approved by the Farm Credit Administration."

(d) Section 29 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, secs. 961-966), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"Upon receiving satisfactory evidence that any national farm-loan association has failed to meet its outstanding obligations of any description, and that it will be to the best interests of its creditors and stockholders for the association to continue in business, the Farm Credit Administration may, in its discretion, in lieu of appointing a receiver as hereinabove in this section provided, appoint a conservator for such association and require of him such bond and security as the Administration may deem proper. The person so appointed shall be a land-bank appraiser appointed under the authority of section 3 of this act: Provided, however, That the Farm Credit Administration may, in its discretion, appoint some other qualified person. Any land-bank appraiser appointed as a conservator shall serve without any additional compensation. Any other person appointed as a conservator shall receive such compensation as the Farm Credit Administration may authorize. Such compensation and all necessary and proper expenses of any such conservatorship shall be paid out of the assets of such association and shall be a lien thereon which shall be prior to any other lien.

"The conservator, under the direction of the Farm Credit Administration, may, when directed so to do, take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, and take such action as may be necessary to conserve such assets pending final determination of the financial condition of the association and the conditions under which it may be permitted to continue in business. Such conservator shall at the earliest practicable date make such investigations as shall be necessary to enable him to prepare an accurate report on the financial condition of such association. In preparing such report he shall value the association's assets and determine its indebtedness: Provided, That in determining said indebtedness contingent liabilities incurred by the association under the provisions of this act on endorsed mortgages shall be estimated and included as a debt. On the basis of said evaluation of the association's assets and indebtedness, the conservator shall determine the fair book value of the outstanding stock of said association and the claims of any retired shareholders based on their previous stock ownership. Upon its completion said report shall be submitted to the Federal land bank of the district and said bank shall thereupon indicate its approval thereof or note any exceptions thereto and submit such report together with its exceptions, if any, to the Farm Credit Administration for consideration.

"If said report is approved, in whole or in part, by the Farm Credit Administration, upon recommendation of the Federal land bank of the district said Administration shall then decide whether such association shall be permitted to pay off and retire its capital stock at its fair book value, upon full payment of the mortgage loans in connection with which such stock was issued originally, and to settle on the same basis the claims of any of its stockholders who have previously paid their loans in full, but have not received credit for, or the proceeds of their stock in such association. At the same time the Farm Credit Administration shall also decide whether it will permit said association to admit new members pursuant to section 25 (b) of the Farm Credit Act of 1937. If the decision of said Administration is in the affirmative, it may terminate the conservatorship and turn the affairs of the association back to its board of directors. If said report is not approved or the decision of said Administration is in the negative, it may, in its discretion, terminate the conservatorship and permit such association to resume the transaction of its business subject to such terms, conditions, restrictions, and limitations as it may prescribe for the protection of the rights of creditors and stockholders, or said Administration may appoint a receiver for the association as elsewhere provided in this section.

"Any settlement made with a retiring or retired shareholder on the basis of the fair book value of the stock of the association pursuant to this section shall be made only on condition that said shareholder agrees to accept such settlement as payment in full. If any shareholder or former shareholder does not desire to settle on such basis, he may, in lieu thereof, be given a participation certificate which will entitled him to share pro rata, on the basis of the number of shares of stock which he owned in the association, in the distribution of any assets of the association which is made after all of its indebtedness to creditors has been satisfied. The Federal land bank of the district may pay to the association from the proceeds of bank stock retired in connection with the payment in full of loans endorsed by such association an amount sufficient to permit the association to make the settlements provided for in this section and any balance of such proceeds shall be retained by the bank and applied as a credit on the indebtedness of the association to it.

"After any determination by the Farm Credit Administration as herein provided, that the fair book value of the stock of a national farm loan association is less than the par value thereof, periodically thereafter any increase in the fair book value of said stock resulting from earnings of the association and actual recoveries in excess of the valuations used by the Farm Credit Administration in determining the fair book value of the stock of such association, as herein provided, shall, under rules and regulations of the Farm Credit Administration, be apportioned ratably on a per-share basis to all outstanding stock or participation certificates having a fair book value less than par until the fair book value of all such stock or participation certificates is equal to the par value thereof.

"In the event that the indebtedness, as determined by the conservator, of an association which has been under conservatorship pursuant to this section increases in excess of the earnings of such association, the Farm Credit Administration may, in its discretion, again appoint a conservator for the association, or it may appoint a receiver as elsewhere provided in this section."

Rates of interest upon debentures and other such obligations issued under the preceding section shall, subject to the approval of the Farm Credit Administration, be fixed by the Federal intermediate credit bank making the issue, not exceeding 6 percent per annum."

SEC. 29. Section 204 (c) of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1053), is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Subject to the approval of the Farm Credit Administration, a Federal intermediate credit bank may buy for its own account any debentures or similar obligations issued by or for the benefit and account of such bank or other Federal intermediate credit bank or banks, and (1) hold until maturity any such debentures or similar obligations or (2) retire before maturity any such debentures or similar obligations issued by it or for its benefit and account."

"(b) Subject only to review and approval by the Farm Credit Administration, each Federal intermediate credit bank, at the end of its fiscal year, after all its necessary expenses and costs of operation for such fiscal year have been paid or provided for, shall apply its net earnings then remaining, first, to making up any losses in excess of its reserves against unforeseen losses and assets of doubtful value; second, to the elimination of any impairment of its paid-in capital and paid-in surplus; third, to the creation and maintenance of reserves against unforeseen losses and assets of doubtful value in such amount as its board of directors may prescribe; fourth, to the payment of 2 percent of the amount then remaining to the United States as a franchise tax; and fifth, to the payment of the remaining net earnings into its surplus account. The amounts paid as franchise taxes to the United States by Federal intermediate credit banks shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be used to supplement the gold reserve held against outstanding United States notes, or shall be applied to the reduction of the outstanding bonded indebtedness of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Should a Federal intermediate credit bank be dissolved or go into liquidation, after the payment of all debts and other obligations as hereinbefore provided, any surplus remaining shall be paid to and become the property of the United States and shall be similarly applied."

SEC. 31. Section 208 (e) of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 12, sec. 1095), is amended to read as follows:

"(e) The executive departments, boards, commissions, and independent establishments of the Government, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Reserve banks are severally authorized under such conditions as they may prescribe, upon the request of the Farm Credit Administration to make available to the Farm Credit Administration or any district bank or district corporation operating under its supervision, in confidence, all reports, records, or other information they may have relating to the condition of any institution to which the Administration, such district bank or corporation has made or contemplates making loans or for which it has discounted or contemplates discounting paper, or which it is using or contemplates using as a custodian of securities or other credit instruments, or as a depositary."

SEC. 32. Each regional agricultural credit corporation, created under the authority of section 201 (e) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1148), in addition to the powers heretofore granted, shall have and, upon order or approval of the Farm Credit Administration, shall exercise the following rights, powers, and authority:

(a) To conduct, transact, and operate its business in any State in the continental United States, in the District of Columbia, and in Puerto Rico.

(b) To borrow money (other than by way of discount) from any other regional agricultural credit corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any Federal intermediate credit bank, and to give security therefor.

(d) To sell to or purchase from any other regional agricultural credit corporation or any corporation formed by consolidation or merger as provided in section 33 of this act, any part of or all the assets of any such corporation, upon such terms and conditions as may be approved by the Farm Credit Administration, including the assumption of the liabilities of any such corporation, in whole or in part.

SEC. 33. (a) The Farm Credit Administration shall have the power and authority to order and effect the consolidation or merger of two or more regional agricultural credit corporations, on such terms and conditions as it shall direct.

(b) The Farm Credit Administration is authorized to grant charters to, prescribe bylaws for, and fix the capital of regional agricultural credit corporations which may be formed by the consolidation of two or more regional agricultural credit corporations, and to approve or prescribe such amendments to the charter and bylaws of any regional agricultural credit corporation as it may from time to time deem necessary. Corporations formed by the consolidation of two or more regional agricultural credit corporations, as herein provided, shall have all the rights, powers, authority, and exemptions; shall be subject to the same supervision and control; and shall have their expenses paid in the same manner as provided by law in respect to regional agricultural credit corporations organized under section 201 (e) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932.

SEC. 34. Nothing contained in sections 32 and 33 of this act shall be construed as limiting the rights, powers, and authority heretofore granted to the regional agricultural credit corporations, the Farm Credit Administration, or the governor thereof, by any acts of Congress or Executive orders.

SEC. 35. Section 34 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 12, sec. 1134j), is further amended to read as follows:

SEC. 36. Section 41 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 12, sec. 1134c), is further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 41. Subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Farm Credit Administration, the banks for cooperatives are authorized (a) to make loans to cooperative associations as defined in the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, for any of the purposes and subject to the conditions and limitations set forth in such act, as amended; (b) to make loans (by way of discount or otherwise) to any bank organized under this act; (c) to buy from and sell to any such bank or any Federal intermediate-credit bank any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other obligation, or any interest therein; and (d) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, any and all such banks and commercial banks."

SEC. 37. Section 4 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1141b), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(7) may sell at public or private sale to the highest responsible bidder, upon such terms and after such public advertisement as the Farm Credit Administration may deem in the public interest, any property, real or personal, or any interest therein, acquired by the United States on account of or as a result of any loans made from the revolving fund authorized by section 6 of this act, as amended; may lease any such property, pending its sale, on such terms and for such period, not in excess of 5 years, as the Farm Credit Administration may deem in the public interest; and may incur and pay, from the said revolving fund, obligations and expenses for the operation, upkeep, maintenance, repair, disposition, insurance, and protection of any such property: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service on account of such property."

SEC. 38. Section 6 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1141d), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Any and all funds derived from the sale, lease, operation or other disposition of any property, real or personal, acquired by the United States on account of or as a result of any loan made pursuant to the provisions of this act, shall be covered into and become a part of said revolving fund."

SEC. 39. The terms "debenture" and "debentures", when used in any act of Congress, whenever enacted, except the Federal Farm Loan Act, relating to the purchase, sale, or use as security, of debentures issued by or for the benefit and account of any Federal intermediate credit bank or banks, shall be deemed to mean debentures issued by any such bank individually and consolidated debentures issued by such banks acting together.

SEC. 40. (a) If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

(b) The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, this bill for the most part is taken up with necessary amendments that have been found necessary from experience in handling the four wings of the Farm Credit Administration. It has one important change that is not a mechanical change and is not involved in the administrative features. This is a provision which authorizes the Farm Credit Administration to extend, in worthy cases, the time of payment of the principal of the Commissioners' loans.

You will recall that the land-bank loans were the first lien on the property and might be made up to 50 percent in value. The Commissioners' loans were the additional 25 percent that might be made and were second liens, in many instances, although not in all. These second liens in the Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 were made for a period of from 10 to 13 years and the principal payments were not required to be paid until the end of a 3-year period. These payments are falling due in lumps that are too large for the average farmer to pay and this provision simply authorizes the spreading out of the time of payment of the principal of these loans over a period of not to exceed the time for which the regular land-bank loans are made, to wit, a period of 33 years.

Then the measure makes many changes. You will recall that in 1933 we took different lending agencies where different methods of making loans for agricultural purposes had been lodged with different departments and embodied them in one centralized agency. This agency, which was designated the Farm Credit Administration, absorbed the old land banks that were established in 1916, and absorbed the intermediate credit banks. The act provided for emergency purposes for certain bonds with interest guaranteed for the purpose of making loans to the land banks in order that funds might be made available for refinancing farm mortgages, many of which were in desperate condition. It provided for production credit corporations which financed the current secured credit for the needs of the farmers from year to year, which was short-time paper. The intermediate credit banks were also continued.

The other wing provided for loans to cooperative organizations in financing their various activities. This was a pretty broad and sweeping organization.

Naturally, in handling over $3,000,000,000 in loans and supervising some $3,300,000,000 of loans, they have found that a number of changes are necessary for them to function to the best advantage. The committee went over these various changes thoroughly. They are largely technical, they have required a great deal of time to go over and are very important from an administrative viewpoint. I am not going into an explanation of any of them unless the House wants it. I believe this is a unanimous report of the committee, and, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Does this bill in anywise affect the 3½-percent interest measure that we passed the other day?

Mr. JONES. No; this does not affect that in anyway.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Does it in anyway lessen the amount of loans that will be available to the farmers?

Mr. JONES. Not in anyway whatever.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. As I understand, the Commissioners' loans on maturing, where the Farm Credit Administration determines they are good loans, the time of payment may be extended and spread over a period of years?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am pleased to know that that provision is in the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I would like unanimous consent of the House to insert a detailed explanation of the bill at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

ANALYSIS OF THE FARM CREDIT ACT OF 1937

Section 1: Title of the act.

Section 2: Authorizes the extension of land-bank commissioner loans.

This section confers upon the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation powers similar to those vested in the Federal land banks under paragraph "tenth" of Twelfth United States Code, page 781. It authorizes the Corporation to extend, in whole or in part, any unpaid obligation under the terms of any mortgage for such periods as may be agreed upon at the time when the extension is made (amends 12 U. S. C. 1020 (d)).

Section 3: Reduces the amount available for loans to joint-stock land banks under section 31 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 (48 Stat. 47) and makes the reduced amount available through the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation instead of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

No loans have been made to joint-stock land banks under section 30 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, and the authority conferred upon the land-bank commissioner to make loans under this section expired on May 12, 1937. Section 31 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, providing for loans to joint-stock land banks for the purpose of postponing foreclosure of first mortgages held by such banks, is amended by cutting down the amount available for loans thereunder from $25,000,000 to $2,000,000 and by extending the authority to make loans thereunder from May 12, 1937, the present expiration date of section 31, until July 1, 1938. Under the amendment the funds will be made available through the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation instead of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This amendment makes it necessary for any joint-stock land bank obtaining such a loan to agree that it will postpone foreclosures for a period of 1 year upon the conditions now prescribed in section 31 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act (amends sec. 31 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 as set forth in note to 12 U. S. C. 823).

Section 4: Authorizes the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation to make loans to Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks on the security of real-estate mortgages, sheriff's certificates, sales contracts, and real estate, upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Corporation's board of directors.

The second clause of this section is new matter and will enable the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation to make loans to Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks on the security of assets not acceptable as collateral for farm-loan bonds issued by these banks. The balance of the section reenacts existing provisions of law. Such loans to joint-stock land banks may not exceed in the aggregate $10,000,000 (amends 12 U. S. C. 1020d).

Section 5: Provides for 12 farm-credit boards, prescribes the manner in which the members thereof shall be elected, and establishes the qualifications of such members.

This section, together with sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, will promote the further integration of the Federal farm-credit system through the creation of a cooperative farm-credit board in each of the 12 Federal land-bank districts now existing. This board will be ex officio the board of directors of the Federal land bank, Federal intermediate-credit bank, production-credit corporation, and bank for cooperatives in the district, and will in addition be vested with the powers enumerated in section 6. With the exception of the third-district director, the members of the farm-credit board will be selected in substantially the same manner as the members of the Federal land-bank board of directors are now chosen.

Paragraph (a) provides for the creation of 12 farm-credit districts to take the place of the 12 Federal land-bank districts now existing, and changes the designation of these districts in the Federal Farm Loan Act, its amendments and supplements, to "farm-credit districts" (new provision; 12 U. S. C. 671 repealed by section 7 (a)).

Paragraph (b) provides for a farm-credit board in each farm-credit district, to be composed of seven members. Three of the members of this board are to be elected: One by national farm loan associations and borrowers through agencies, and such director must, at the time of his election, be a Federal land bank borrower; one by production credit associations, and such director must, at the time of his election, be a class B stockholder in a production credit association; and one by cooperatives which are stockholders or subscribers to the guaranty fund of the district bank for cooperatives. In addition, there are to be three district directors, of whom two are to be appointed by the Farm Credit Administration and one, who will be known as the third-district director, selected as provided in paragraph (d). The seventh director is to be a director at large appointed by the Farm Credit Administration. (New provision. Substitute for 12 U. S. C. 678.)

Paragraph (c) provides that the present Federal land-bank directors shall be the first members of the farm-credit board and establishes identity of board members for selection purposes. (New provision.)

Paragraph (d) provides that so long as reduced interest rates on Federal land-bank loans continue in effect, the third-district director shall be appointed by the Farm Credit Administration, but that after the termination of all reduced interest rates such director shall be nominated by national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies and appointed by the Farm Credit Administration from among the three highest nominees. (New provision.)

Paragraph (e) sets out the procedure for nominating the three elected directors and the third-district director. (Substantially reenacts 12 U. S. C. 679.)

Paragraph (f) sets out the procedure for electing the three elected directors. (Substantially reenacts 12 U. S. C. 680.)

Paragraph (g) fixes a 3-year term of office for all directors and provides for filling vacancies in the farm-credit board. (Substitute for 12 U. S. C. 681)

Paragraph (h) prescribes the qualifications of directors; all directors must have been residents of the district 2 years; officers and employees of institutions under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration are, with certain exceptions, made ineligible to serve as directors; and the extent to which district directors may engage in other business is restricted. (Substitute for 12 U. S. C. 682.)

Paragraph (i) continues in effect the present disqualification on conviction of felony or court award of damages for fraud applicable to all directors and to administrative and executive officials of the Federal land bank, Federal intermediate credit bank, production credit corporation, and bank for cooperatives. (Substantially reenacts 12 U. S. C. 682a.)

Paragraph (j) provides for compensating members of the farm-credit board and sets certain limitations on the compensation which may be paid such members. (Substitute in part for 12 U. S. C. 683.)

Paragraph (k) is a saving clause as to 12 U. S. C. 672 and other provisions of law authorizing loans in territories and insular possessions of the United States.

Section 6: Authorizes each farm-credit board to employ joint officers and employees for the four district institutions, and to acquire and dispose of such property, real or personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of the business of these institutions.

This section will permit the appointment of a unified service staff, similar to the present general agent's staff, and the unified handling of property needed in transacting the business of the four credit units in each district. Officers and employees appointed under this section will be officers and employees of the four institutions. (New provision.)

Sections 7, 8, and 9: Make changes in the Federal Farm Loan Act incidental to the creation of the farm-credit boards.

Section 7 repeals provision for Federal land-bank districts (12 U. S. C. 671) and other provisions of Federal Farm Loan Act superseded by section 5; makes members of farm-credit board ex-officio directors of Federal land bank in district (new); reenacts provision of 12 U. S. C. 683 making compensation of officers and employees of Federal land bank subject to the approval of the Farm Credit Administration; and repeals 12 U. S. C. 682a (substantially reenacted by section 5 (i)).

Section 8 preserves power of Farm Credit Administration to readjust territories of national farm-loan associations now exercised by reference to 12 U. S. C. 671.

Section 9 amends 12 U. S. C. 831, conferring removal powers upon the Farm Credit Administration, so as to permit the director at large to be removed for cause. Under existing law (12 U. S. C. 681, repealed by sec. 7) such director may be removed by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration at will.

Sections 10 and 11: Provide that the members of each farm-credit board shall be ex officio the directors of the Federal intermediate credit bank, the production credit corporation, and the bank for cooperatives in the district.

Section 10 amends 12 U. S. C. 1022 providing that the directors of the Federal land bank shall be ex officio the directors of the Federal intermediate credit bank in the same city.

Section 11 amends 12 U. S. C. 1131 and 1134, making similar provisions for the production credit corporation and bank for cooperatives in the district.

Section 12: Extends the class of eligible purposes for Federal land-bank loans to include the refinancing of any indebtedness incurred prior to January 1, 1937.

Under existing law Federal land-bank loans may be made for the purpose of refinancing indebtedness incurred for agricultural purposes irrespective of the date of its incurrence, but may be made for the purpose of refinancing nonagricultural indebtedness only if incurred prior to January 1, 1933. This date is changed to January 1, 1937, by this section. (Amends par. "Fourth" of 12 U. S. C. 771.)

Section 13: Restricts the class of eligible purposes for commissioner loans by excluding the refinancing of indebtedness incurred for nonagricultural purposes subsequent to January 1, 1937, except where such refinancing is sought in connection with proceedings under chapter VIII of the Bankruptcy Act.

Under existing law, land-bank commissioner loans may be made for the purpose of refinancing any indebtedness of a farmer irrespective of the purpose for which it was incurred or the date of its incurrence. This section restricts eligibility for refinancing loans by the land-bank commissioner to the same classes of debts as are made eligible for Federal land-bank refinancing loans under section 12; that is, debts incurred for agricultural purposes or incurred prior to January 1, 1937, with the one exception that refinancing loans may still be made by the land-bank commissioner in connection with proceedings under chapter VIII of the Bankruptcy Act without regard to the purpose or date of the indebtedness to be refinanced. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1016 (c).)

Section 14: Provides that when conditions justify it the land-bank commissioner may, by provision in the mortgage, allow a borrower the right to defer payments on principal during the first 3 years his loan is in effect.

This section substitutes for the existing provision of law under which borrowers from the land-bank commissioner are entitled to defer all principal payments for the first 3 years their loans are in effect if not otherwise in default, a provision under which such initial deferments will be permissible only when the land-bank commissioner deems them to be justified in the light of the circumstances, and consents to the inclusion in the mortgage of a clause permitting the borrower to defer principal payments for 3 years if he is not in default with respect to any other provision of his mortgage. Under existing law a borrower from the land-bank commissioner is in effect given the privilege of turning a 10-year loan into a 13-year loan at his option, by electing to defer principal payments during the first 3 years the loan is in effect. Under this section the land-bank commissioner will be vested with the power of determining whether this privilege should be granted the borrower according as the circumstances of the individual case may warrant. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1016 (c).)

Section 15: Authorizes Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks to purchase Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds without restrictions as to price.

Under existing law, the Federal land banks may purchase Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds, but only at or below par. Paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section remove this limitation so as to permit purchases for more than par. They also confer upon the joint-stock land banks power to purchase Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds without restrictions as to price. In addition, paragraph (c) of this section permits the proceeds of principal payments upon first mortgages pledged as collateral security for farm-loan bonds issued by a joint-stock land bank to be invested in Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds. This provision confers upon the joint-stock land banks a power already vested in the Federal land banks by 12 U. S. C. 897. (Amends paragraphs "Eighth" and "Fifteenth" of 12 U. S. C. 781, and the last paragraph of 12 U. S. C. 897.)

Section 16: Authorizes Federal land banks to make loans to each other upon such terms and conditions as may be approved by the Farm Credit Administration.

Under existing law, Federal land banks have express power to borrow money and to give security therefor, but have no express general authority to make loans to each other. (Adds a new paragraph to 12 U. S. C. 781.)

Section 17: Authorizes Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks to accept conditional payments from borrowers, such payments to be held by the bank for future application upon unmatured indebtedness of the borrower making the payment.

The Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks do not, at the present time, have express authority to accept payments from borrowers on the condition that they be not immediately credited in reduction of the principal of the borrower's loan, but that they be held by the bank for the purpose of being applied to future maturing installments on the loan as they come due. This section, by conferring such power, will make it possible for the land banks to accept in good crop years payments in excess of the installments for that year on the borrower's loan, and to hold these payments unapplied until some future year when the borrower is unable to meet his current payments because of a poor harvest or other cause. In order to protect the banks' bondholders, this section requires that when a conditional payment is accepted for subsequent credit upon a first mortgage then or thereafter pledged as collateral security for farm-loan bonds, such conditional payment shall be subject to all requirements, conditions, and limitations imposed with respect to principal payments by 12 United States Code 897 to 899. Conditional payments made under this section are to be credited upon the borrower's indebtedness to the land bank as he may from time to time direct in accordance with the terms and conditions upon which the payment has been accepted and may, at the option of the bank, be credited upon such indebtedness as and when it matures if not otherwise paid. If at any time after 5 years from the date on which a loan was made the borrower's conditional payments equal or exceed his total indebtedness under the loan, the entire loan will become due and payable at once and such conditional payments are to be forthwith credited upon the loan so far as may be necessary to pay it in full. The bank is authorized to pay interest on conditional payments while held unapplied. (Adds a new paragraph to 12 U. S. C. 781.)

Section 18: Authorizes the Federal land-bank bond committee to appoint a subcommittee of three members.

The bond committee of the Federal land banks consists of the presidents of the 12 banks or their alternates. It is desirable that the bond committee be given express authority to exercise its functions through a smaller subcommittee. This section permits the bond committee to appoint a subcommittee composed of three of its members, and provides that this subcommittee, if appointed, shall have authority to exercise all of the powers and perform all of the functions of the bond committee. Members of the subcommittee are to be appointed for 1-year terms but may be dismissed by the bond committee at will. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 883.)

Section 19: Permits the paid-in surplus of the Federal land banks subscribed by the United States to be converted into a revolving fund, which may be transferred from one bank to another to meet unusual conditions.

Under the authority of paragraph "Tenth" of 12 U. S. C. 781, the Secretary of the Treasury has from time to time subscribed to the paid-in surplus of the Federal land banks for the purpose of assisting these banks in granting extentions pursuant to the foregoing paragraphs and in deferring payments of principal pursuant to paragraph "Twelfth" of 12 United States Code, 771. This section provides that all unpaid balances of the funds appropriated for these subscriptions to paid-in surplus, and all repayments of Government subscriptions to paid-in surplus shall be held in the Treasury as a revolving fund. This revolving fund is to be used for the making of additional subscriptions to the paid-in surplus of the Federal land banks, which subscriptions may be made for the purpose of assisting the banks in granting extensions and deferring principal payments. The duty of making such subscriptions out of the revolving fund upon the request of any Federal land bank made with the approval of the Farm Credit Administration is placed upon the Secretary of the Treasury. Such subscriptions to paid-in surplus may be repaid, in whole or in part, at any time in the discretion of the bank and with the approval of the Farm Credit Administration, and the Administration may at any time require their repayment, in whole or in part, if in its opinion the bank has resources available therefor. (New provision to be added after 12 U. S. C. 698.)

Section 20: Changes the title of land-bank examiners to "farm-credit examiners."

Land-bank examiners appointed pursuant to the provisions of 12 U. S. C. 656, are, under the authority of other provisions of law, being used for the purpose of examining Federal intermediate credit banks, production credit corporations, banks for cooperatives, and other institutions under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration. This section brings their title into conformity with their functions. (New provision.)

Section 21: Changes the term of office of national farm-loan association directors from 1 to 3 years, and provides for staggering the election of such directors.

This section provides that each national farm-loan association shall have a board of directors of from five to seven members; that the members of the board shall be elected by the shareholders at annual meetings; that they shall hold office for 3-year terms; and that a certain number of directors shall be elected each year. It also provides for filling vacancies on association boards of directors and eliminates the reference to the National Banking Act now contained in the provision of the Federal Farm Loan Act relating to the election of association directors. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 712.)

Section 22: Permits direct borrowers from Federal land banks to transfer or hypothecate their Federal land-bank stock to the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.

Under the provisions of the Federal Farm Loan Act the stock in Federal land banks for which direct borrowers from the banks are required to subscribe may not be transferred or hypothecated. Where the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation holds a second mortgage, subject to a first mortgage in favor of the Federal lank bank, it sometimes becomes desirable to take an assignment of the borrower's interest in the Federal land-bank stock in order to avoid losses which the Corporation might otherwise sustain After obtaining an assignment of the stock the Corporation would either hold the stock until the bank loan had been paid in full and the stock retired, when the proceeds would be paid over to the Corporation, or the Corporation would dispose of the stock to a subsequent purchaser of the property who assumed the Federal land-bank mortgage. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 723 (c).)

Section 23: Changes method of voting in stockholders' meetings of national farm-loan associations to: One member, one vote.

Present law gives each stockholder one vote per share of stock with maximum of 20 votes. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 732.)

Section 24: Provides that the favorable vote of a majority of the board of directors is sufficient to elect a prospective borrower to membership in a national farm-loan association.

Present law requires a two-thirds vote to elect an applicant to membership. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 745.)

Section 25: Provides that two or more national farm-loan associations may under an agreement between them, and with the approval of the Farm Credit Administration, elect a commmon board of directors which will act as the board of directors of each of the associations entering into the agreement.

This section will facilitate the joint management program of the Farm Credit Administration under which national farm-loan associations operating in the same territory are encouraged to conduct their business at a common office and through a single secretary-treasurer for their mutual benefit and the convenience of borrowers in the territory served by them. It permits one or more members of the common board of directors to be elected by each association which is a party to the agreement and permits the balance, if any, of the directors to be elected by the shareholders of all the associations voting as a single group. Other methods of election may be used where deemed appropriate and the total number of directors may exceed the maximum of seven elsewhere fixed by law. The members of the common board of directors will be ex officio the directors of each association which has become a party to the agreement. In order to retain in the individual associations the power of approving or disapproving applications for loans, it is provided that the shareholders of each association which has entered into such an agreement shall elect the members of the association's loan committee at the annual meeting, and that the loan committee so elected shall set in place of the association's board of directors with respect to the approval of applications for loans and the election of applicants to membership in the association. (New provision to be added after 12 U. S. C. 745.)

Section 26: Authorizes Federal intermediate credit banks to acquire and dispose of such property, real or personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of their business.

This section is believed to be desirable so that the authority of the Federal intermediate credit banks to acquire and convey property used in the performance of their functions will be specific. Heretofore, such transactions have been conducted under the general authority of the banks to exercise "all the usual powers of corporations." (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1023.)

Section 27: Authorizes the Federal intermediate credit banks to pledge as collateral security for debentures issued by them United States Government bonds and Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds.

This section authorizes the Federal intermediate credit banks to use United States Government bonds, or bonds fully and unconditionally guaranteed by the United States, as collateral security for their debentures. Under existing law, such collateral is limited to "cash, or notes or other such obligations discounted or purchased or representing loans made under section 202 (a) of the Federal Farm Loan Act." Authorization to employ obligations of the United States Government as collateral will be of advantage to the Federal intermediate credit banks, in view of the fact that a large part of their capital is now invested in these obligations. The Federal land banks have for some time been authorized to use United States bonds and Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds as collateral for farm-loan bonds. This section will extend similar privileges to Federal intermediate credit banks in respect to the collateral for their debentures. The striking out of the phrase "when chartered and established" in the provision amended is due to the fact that this phrase is believed to be surplusage. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1041.)

Section 28: Permits the Federal intermediate credit banks to withdraw on trust receipt pledged collateral of certain kinds, subject to the approval of the Farm Credit Administration.

This section provides that warehouse receipts, shipping documents, and other similar credit instruments, when constituting the underlying collateral securing notes which have been purchased or discounted by Federal intermediate credit banks and deposited with a farm loan registrar as collateral security for debentures issued by these banks, may be released by the registrar on trust receipt in such form and subject to such conditions as may be approved by the Farm Credit Administration. Heretofore, such warehouse receipts, shipping documents and similar credit instruments have been delivered physically to the registrar. This has occasioned considerable difficulty and delay in handling commodities covered by such receipts and documents. It is occasionally very desirable for the owners of such commodities to be able to dispose of them without delay, due to a rapidly fluctuating market. The purpose of this section is to permit the adoption of a procedure whereby warehouse receipts and similar documents can be held so that they will be available at all times when required for quick disposition of the commodities covered thereby. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1042.)

Section 29: Permits Federal intermediate credit banks to purchase debentures issued by them without restrictions as to price.

This section authorizes any Federal intermediate credit bank, with the approval of the Farm Credit Administration, to purchase consolidated debentures issued by the 12 Federal intermediate credit banks and individual debentures issued by the purchasing bank or by any other Federal intermediate credit bank. If a Federal intermediate credit bank purchases debentures which it has issued, or which have been issued for its account, it may retire them forthwith. If it purchases debentures issued by, or for the account of, any other Federal intermediate credit bank it may hold them until maturity. At the present time Federal intermediate credit banks are authorized to purchase debentures only at or below par. It sometimes happens that one of these banks has funds which are temporarily idle, and market conditions are such that it can use such funds for the purchase of debentures only by buying them at a price above par. The section is designed to give these banks more freedom in using temporarily idle funds advantageously. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1053.)

Section 30: Changes the procedure for determining the amount of the franchise tax to be paid by each Federal intermediate credit bank.

This section modifies and clarifies the provisions of the Federal Farm Loan Act with respect to the disposition of the annual earnings of Federal intermediate credit banks. It provides that after paying or providing for necessary expenses each bank shall apply the earnings then remaining: First, to restoring any losses in excess of its reserves which may have occurred during the current year; second, to eliminating any impairment in its paid-in capital and paid-in surplus which may have occurred during the year; third, to the creation and maintenance of such reserves as may be found advisable; fourth, to the payment of 25 percent of the amount then remaining to the United States as a franchise tax; and, fifth, to the payment of the residue of its net earnings into its surplus account. Under existing law the net earnings of any Federal intermediate credit bank remaining after payment or provision for necessary expenses are to be paid into the bank's surplus fund until it amounts to 100 percent of the subscribed capital stock, and thereafter 50 percent of such earnings is to be paid into the surplus fund, and the residue is to be paid to the United States as a franchise tax. No franchise tax has been paid to the United States for the past several years. It is believed desirable to amend the existing law in the manner indicated above which, it is expected, will result in substantial payments of franchise taxes to the United States. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1072.)

Section 31: Amends the law relative to the furnishing of confidential information to Farm Credit Administration institutions by various Government agencies.

This section provides that the several executive departments, boards, commissions, and independent establishments of the Government, including the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Federal Reserve banks, are authorized, upon request of the Farm Credit Administration to furnish to the Administration or of any bank or corporation operating under its supervision, in confidence, information relating to the condition of any institution with which such bank or corporation, or the Administration, contemplates entering into business relations. At present such information is furnished only in connection with the affairs of Federal intermediate credit banks and it appears desirable to provide that similar information be furnished in connection with the affairs of the other institutions operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration (amends 12 U. S. C. 1095).

Section 32: Confers upon the 12 regional agricultural credit corporations certain powers necessary or convenient for their proper liquidation.

This section authorizes each regional agricultural credit corporation to transact business in any State of the United States, in the District of Columbia, and in Puerto Rico; to borrow money from any other regional agricultural credit corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any Federal intermediate credit bank; to lend any of its available funds to any other regional agricultural credit corporation; and to sell to or purchase from another regional agricultural credit corporation any part or all of the assets of any such corporation. The foregoing additional powers are believed necessary to enable each regional agricultural credit corporation to liquidate its business to the best advantage (new provision).

Section 33: Provides for the merger and consolidation of regional agricultural credit corporations.

This section will enable the Farm Credit Administration to effect the consolidation or merger of two or more regional agricultural credit corporations. It provides for granting charters to, prescribing bylaws for, and fixing the capital of, regional agricultural credit corporations formed by consolidation, and makes applicable to such consolidated corporations all provisions of law conferring powers upon, or otherwise affecting, the 12 regional agricultural credit corporations now in existence. It is believed that the foregoing provisions are necessary to permit the liquidation of these corporations in an efficient manner (new provision).

Section 34: Declares that nothing contained in sections 32 and 33 shall be construed as limiting the rights, powers, and authority heretofore granted to regional agricultural credit corporations, the Farm Credit Administration, or the Governor thereof.

Section 35: Authorizes the Central Bank for Cooperatives (1) to buy and sell interests in notes and other obligations, and (2) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, commercial banks.

Clause (c) of this section enlarges the power of the Central Bank for Cooperatives to buy and sell notes or other obligations by including therein the power to buy and sell interests in such notes and other obligations. Clause (d) of this section gives the Central Bank for Cooperatives power to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, commercial banks, in addition to its present power of borrowing from, and discounting or rediscounting with, Federal intermediate credit banks and banks for cooperatives. Clauses (a) and (b) of this section reenact existing law. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1134J.)

Section 36: Authorizes the 12 regional banks for cooperatives (1) to buy and sell interests in notes and other obligations, and (2) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, commercial banks.

This section confers upon the regional banks for cooperatives powers similar to those conferred upon the Central Bank for Cooperatives by section 35. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1134 (c).)

Section 37: Authorizes the Farm Credit Administration to lease and sell properties acquired in connection with loans made from the Agricultural Marketing Act revolving fund, and to pay from this fund expenses incurred in handling acquired properties pending their sale.

This section authorizes the Farm Credit Administration to sell at public or private sale to the highest responsible bidder, after such public advertisement as it may deem necessary, real or personal property acquired in connection with loans made from the Agricultural Marketing Act revolving fund, and also authorizes the leasing of such property for a period not in excess of 5 years. It further authorizes the Farm Credit Administration to pay from the revolving fund obligations and expenses incurred for the operation, upkeep, maintenance, repair, disposition, insurance, and protection of any such property. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1141 (b).)

Section 38: Provides that all funds derived from the sale, lease, operation, or other disposition of real and personal property acquired in connection with loans made from the Agricultural Marketing Act revolving fund shall be covered into such fund.

The purpose of this section is to definitely establish that all proceeds from the disposition of properties acquired on account of or as a result of any loan made from the revolving fund, together with all income from such properties, shall become part of the revolving fund. (Amends 12 U. S. C. 1141d.)

Section 39: Provides that the terms "debenture" and "debentures", when used in any act of Congress, whenever enacted, except the Federal Farm Loan Act, relating to the purchase, sale, or use as security, of debentures issued by or for the benefit and account of any Federal intermediate credit bank or banks, shall be deemed to mean debentures issued by any such bank individually and consolidated debentures issued by such banks acting together.

Section 40: Provides that if any provision of the act is held invalid the remainder of the act shall not be affected thereby, and reserve the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as the chairman has said, is a technical measure. It consists of approximately 42 pages of technical changes in the Farm Credit Administration. The bill originally was prepared by the attorneys in the Farm Credit Administration, sent to the Congress, and introduced by our chairman. In analyzing the bill in our committee it appeared to me, as well as to other members of the committee, that an effort was being made to further centralize control over the farm credit set-up here in Washington.

The original Farm Credit Act or the Federal Land Bank Act provided for a cooperative control of farm credit by local national-loan associations. The members of the loan associations were the borrowers from the bank. They provided the capital stock and the money with which the bank was to operate. In the last 4 or 5 years the Federal Government has contributed a substantial portion of the funds for loaning purposes to the Farm Credit Administration, but the original purpose of the Farm Credit Act was to place an agency in the hands of the farmers so that they would be able to have a bank under their own management and control. An effort has been made during the past 2 or 3 years to take away the management and control that the local associations have had over their own affairs and centralize the authority in Washington, fixing it so that the local associations had nothing to say whatsoever about the policies or about the loans to be made within their respective districts. Some amendments were adopted in the committee that helped perfect the bill and helped retain some of that control for the local associations, but I call attention to section 8 of the bill, on page 13, which gives to the Federal land bank, or to the governor of the Federal land bank, the right to change the boundaries of the territory designated in the charter of any national farm-loan association by readjusting from time to time those boundary lines.

If the Governor of the Farm Credit Association should decide he wants to wipe out one of the small local loan associations in your community, he might do so by changing the boundary lines of that particular loan association. Some of you no doubt have had complaints from your local associations that they have not been able to receive anything for servicing the loans. That is correct. The Farm Credit Administration in its policies here from Washington have stated to the local loan associations that if they do not join up with other farm loan associations as directed, they will receive no compensation for the servicing of the local loans. They are therefore forced to consolidate with other associations or be driven out of business because of lack of any income.

Within the past year and a half another criticism has become apparent in many agricultural sections. We find that the Farm Credit Administration has adopted a policy down here where they will no longer make loans to help finance farmers who are in distress on account of being in default on their farm mortgages. Out in Minnesota, in the section that I have the honor to represent, we find that the Federal land bank has virtually ceased making loans whatsoever or if they do make commitments, the commitments are so low that they will not help farmers in any way to refinance their present obligations. If the Federal land bank is to be of any assistance to the farmers of this country, then that assistance should be given to the farmers at this time where they are crying for help to refinance their present obligations so that they can stay in the farming business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULLEN). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, at a later date during the present session of Congress I shall talk more at length upon some of the policies and practices of the Federal land bank. I believe it would be well if Congress would appoint a special committee to investigate the practices and policies of the Federal land bank to see if the Farm Credit Administration is carrying out the policies according to the original intent. These institutions, national local loan associations, and Farm Credit Administration, Federal land bank, are supposed to be cooperative enterprise, where the farmers might have something to say over their own affairs in a bank they are creating from their own capital contributions. I hope that within the course of the next week or so I may have the opportunity of offering a resolution in this House asking for the appointment of a special committee to investigate present practices of the Farm Credit Administration and also ask Congress to investigate some of the questionable practices of the officers in various land-bank districts where charges have been made that certain preferred and questionable loans had been made contrary to public policy.

I would like to offer an amendment to strike section 8 from the bill, but under the rule no amendments can be considered. I therefore hope that section 8 will be stricken from the bill when it is considered in the Senate.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. GEHRMANN. I am wondering now if a local association is in default, will the individual stockholder be held liable for the default of the association, beyond the 5 percent that he is now liable for?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. If I am not mistaken—if a local association is in default, I think all members of that local association may be assessed for the value of their stock, in order to pay up the loss of the association.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Beyond the 5 percent of the stock that they own?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. No; not beyond the 5 percent, but if a man had a $10,000 loan and had $500 worth of stock, he might be assessed for the amount of that stock.

Mr. JONES. There is no change at all in that respect. They are liable for the value of their stock.

Mr. GEHRMANN. It does not change that part of it? They do not go beyond the 5 percent?

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. It would not be an assessment. It is merely the loss of his stock?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. It is merely the loss of his stock. If the loss does not come up to the value of his stock he gets whatever equity there is, of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] has again expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

DEFICIENCY JUDGMENTS AND SEED LOAN COLLECTIONS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this bill is coming up under suspension of the rules which, as I understand, prevents any amendments. The remarks I have to make would really call for an amendment to this act or else, following the suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN], the appointment of a commission with power to change two current practices in the administration of the Farm Credit Administration, which, it seems to me, are inconsistent with the fine work the F. C. A. has done and also inconsistent with the intent of Congress.

The first has to do with the taking of deficiency judgments in the case of land foreclosures. The second has to do with the reports that where farmers are now threshing, orders are given to the elevators or to the purchasers of grain, that they shall make a 100-percent collection of all Government seed loans; not merely the current feed and seed loans, but also the feed and seed loans for 4 and 5 years back. Those two policies are resulting in an unhealthy condition throughout the area that suffered from drought during the past few years.

I have a letter from a constituent enclosing a letter from the Farm Credit Administration, in which a husband and wife are notified that the Federal land bank would not be interested in taking a deed to a particular piece of land, but would insist upon foreclosure proceedings, with the costs that that involves; and, in addition to that, the taking of a deficiency judgment.

The letter reads:

> We have a report from our fieldman, advising us he discussed this loan with both you and your husband, and you did not feel that you could go on with the loan, and thus signed a statement wherein you agreed to transfer the land to the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation in full settlement of the mortgage.
> This is to advise you that we will not be interested in taking title to this land, but rather, we choose to foreclose in the event you refuse to settle the present delinquencies and carry on with the loan. It is our thought that you have not given the proper consideration to the results that will accrue through foreclosure, and in case the land did not bring the full amount of our investment at the time of sale, it is quite possible that both you and your husband would be faced with a substantial deficiency which would later have to be paid.
> We wish you would talk this matter over together, giving consideration to this aspect of a foreclosure, and write us your decision.

In this case, my understanding was that the family found itself unable to make a go of things on the farm during the drought. The father got his soldier's adjusted compensation. Instead of applying it on the farm mortgage, he bought a little store or filling station and kept his family off relief. The farm loan was not a Commissioner's loan, but a first mortgage. Under any fair appraisal, the land should have been worth the loan so they offered to turn over title in settlement. But the collection letter plainly intimated that the land bank intended to get its money regardless of what happened to the family. So I asked the Farm Credit Administration if it really did take deficiency judgments. I received this reply:

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1937.

Hon. FRANCIS CASE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CASE: Further reference is made to your letter of May 13, 1937, in which you inquired concerning the policy followed in the foreclosure of loans owned by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.

The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation is pursuing a lenient policy regarding foreclosure, and it has the power to grant deferments, extensions, or reamortizations in individual cases as the facts may warrant. Delinquent loans are not foreclosed so long as the borrower is making an honest effort to meet his payments, is applying the net income from the farm to his primary obligations, is taking proper care of the security, and appears to have the ability to work out of a reasonable burden of debt under normal conditions. In foreclosure cases where the security is inadequate for the payment of the mortgage debt, it is the general policy to bid at sheriff's sale the estimated value of the property. If a deficiency results, the case is again considered on its individual merits and a determination made as to what further steps may be necessary or advisable. It is also the general policy to seek the appointment of a receiver to take possession of the farm and collect rents, issues, and profits within the period of redemption. We are informed that in South Dakota it is usually possible to have a receiver appointed within a reasonable time after sale.

We believe that the continued application of the established equitable foreclosure and extension policies pursued by the Corporation does not conflict with the intent and purpose of the Frazier-Lemke amendment to the Bankruptcy Act as confirmed by the Supreme Court's decision.

I trust that the foregoing is the information you desire.

Sincerely,

H. A. LAKE,
Assistant Deputy Commissioner, Land Bank Division.

The statement is well made; it sounds plausible; and, no doubt, it is a proper interpretation of the law as it now stands. But it also makes clear that deficiency judgments are taken, and, frankly, I do not like the idea of a Government agency taking deficiency judgments against citizens. The little money we can get by selling the last piece of machinery and the last cow and the last bedstead are not worth the damage we do to an American family. The proceeds of such sales pay hardly more than sheriff's costs. And we have done an injury to the morale of a family, a father, mother, and some children, that can never be repaired.

In the State of South Dakota we have a State law that says that the taking of a deficiency judgment in the foreclosure of a man's homestead is against public policy; that if you foreclose on the land on which a loan was extended that should be sufficient. To loan money to a farmer when he needs it is a good thing for the country; but to follow that up and say that you are going to close him out and sell his household goods and what little personal property he has and forfeit his homestead exemption is a terrible thing to do in the name of aid or help by an agency of the Federal Government. We should declare the taking of deficiency judgments to be against public policy.

Turning to seed-loan collections, I have a communication from D. D. Collins of the National Farmers' Holiday Association saying that they are very much concerned with the present policy of having agents and representatives of the feed and seed loan section following up the sale of grain to collect all outstanding seed loans.

At this point I wish to insert two letters from the national secretary.

The Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section made a good record in getting loans into the field earlier last spring than in previous years. That was partly because Congress acted earlier, and partly because of the organization developed by the Farm Credit Administration. Col. Philip Murphy, director of crop loans, and his assistant, Mr. Lindsey, were really on the job. Note this record:

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 9, 1937.

Hon. FRANCIS CASE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CASE: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 6, 1937, in reference to the 1937 crop loan in South Dakota as compared with previous years.

It is believed that the advantages gained from the early launching of the 1937 loan were well sustained throughout the lending period.

In 1935 the total amount of loans made in South Dakota was $7,837,191; in 1936 the amount loaned was $138,660; and the loan for 1937 to date amounts to $2,623,905.

Our records indicate that compared with April 4, which was the date the first loans were disbursed in 1936, 45 percent of the total amount loaned in 1937 had been disbursed; and compared with April 10, which was the date the first loans were disbursed in 1935, 61 percent of the 1937 loan had been disbursed.

A comparison of the progress of the loan in 1937 with corresponding key dates for the previous years of 1935 and 1936 is as follows:

Date	Number of loans	Amount	Percent of total amount loaned
May 1, 1935	13,396	$3,098,630	39
May 1, 1936	885	106,160	76
May 1, 1937	12,088	2,471,560	94
May 15, 1935	25,637	5,837,234	74
May 15, 1936	1,024	121,835	87
May 15, 1937	12,860	2,610,855	99
June 1, 1935	28,816	6,422,296	81
June 1, 1936	1,084	128,500	92
June 1, 1937	12,877	2,623,905	100

It is noted that on May 1, which is in the midst of the planting season, 94 percent of the 1937 loan had been disbursed as compared with 39 percent in 1935; and on May 15 the 1937 loan was practically completed as compared to 74 percent for the 1935 loan.

Sincerely,

S. P. LINDSEY, Jr.,
Acting Director, Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section.

You will note that 45 percent of this year's loans were disbursed before the first loan was put out in 1936 and that 61 percent of this year's loans were disbursed before a loan was put out in 1935. That is a good record and I hope it will not be marred in the memory of the people by a collection policy that hounds the people for the last penny, this first year that they have had a crop. I am concerned because of such letters as these:

NATIONAL FARMERS' HOLIDAY ASSOCIATION,
July 29, 1937.

Hon. FRANCIS H. CASE,
Representative from South Dakota,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing a copy of a letter sent to the Farm Credit Administration concerning fred and seed-loan collections. I am sure you are aware that the Federal Government, if it so desires, can strip thousands of farmers of the first crop they have had in many years.

Undoubtedly you are working on this problem in your own way, but I wish you would join us at the moment with a letter or telegram to the Farm Credit Administration, or the President.

I am sending a copy of the enclosed letter to numerous Governors, Senators, Congressmen, and farm leaders. A concentrated effort at this time, I feel sure, will show the proper officials the necessity for a lenient policy and consequently will at least dispel part of the despair which has settled over the drought areas these last years.

Sincerely,

DALE KRAMER.

NATIONAL FARMERS' HOLIDAY ASSOCIATION,
Minneapolis, Minn., July 29, 1937.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION,
Seed and Feed Loan Division, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We are very much concerned over the attitude you are to take on collection of seed and feed loans. From the letters you have already sent out from your various regional offices, and from the reports coming to us from the field, we have considerable reason to be concerned.

If you are to pursue a hard-boiled, pound-of-flesh policy, farmers had as well turn over their crop and apply for aid at the nearest relief office. After the years of drouth these loans are piled up to the extent that according to law literally tens of thousands of farmers can be stripped of their first crop in a number of years.

It is our belief that you will not follow such a policy, if for no other reason than that the expense would be greater to the Government than if a lenient policy was pursued. After the expense of collections, farmers will have to seek the same old relief rolls.

We believe your local units should be instructed to release enough of the crop to insure reasonable living conditions and an opportunity to put in the new crop. Otherwise farmers will be forced to apply for new feed and seed loans. Our local committees will work fairly with you on this matter. They want debts of farmers paid, but naturally they also want to live. Men who are able to pay and desire only to beat their debts will meet the opposition of the Holiday Association, but, on the other hand, we expect our committees to work with your local units to see that families have enough out of their crop to live on.

I am sure you are in agreement with us in this matter and will instruct your local groups to follow a lenient policy.

Sincerely,

DALE KRAMER,
Secretary, National Farmers' Holiday Association.

We must realize that through a great deal of that section, with grasshoppers and some drought, it is a poor crop even this year, and to require that out of the little proceeds of this year's crop the farmer must pay up 100 percent for the back feed and seed loans, merely means stripping him of this year's income and sending him back to the relief rolls again. I sincerely hope that action will be taken to indicate that this is not the will and intent of Congress. Of course, we should collect something, but do not strip these farmers again, and leave them in a destitute condition for the coming winter.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Does the gentleman mean that the Farm Credit Administration is making collections on those unsecured loans that were made in 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is what my correspondence indicates.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that they are not only enforcing those seed loans to an extent that cripples the farmer, as far as his operations are concerned, but they are forcing many farmers into foreclosure proceedings because they are taking all he has got for seed loans made in 1934?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is right. This year when we have a chance for these farmers to get squared away and on their feet again we ought to have a little consideration and leniency about this matter, whether you put it on a basis of relief or simply good business. I sincerely trust the gentleman will bring in his resolution so worded that the Farm Credit Administration may know how Congress feels about procedure under technical rulings which leads their agents to say they are extending all the aid the law permits them to extend. Let us make it clear in our amendment to these acts that they can extend consideration within the law and thereby follow a sound financial policy as well as a humane policy. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman from South Dakota, I may say that two bills on deficiency judgments have been pending before the Committee on Agriculture. One provides that deficiency judgments could not be taken under any conditions on the foreclosure of Federal loans. The second, a bill I introduced, provides that in foreclosing the property should be bid by the bank on the same valuation basis on which they made the loan. Loans are made today on the basis of normal value. The land bank has a complicated formula to get the basis for the loan value of a man's farm. They figure his average crop through a series of years, the average price, and then they get from that net average income for the series of years. Then they capitalize that, say at 4 percent, and that is the normal value. Then upon that basis they make their loan. I think it very unjust because they have succeeded in cutting the value so low that they have largely taken the helpfulness out of the farm credit business as far as farmers are concerned.

The Farm Credit Administration has stated that it would withdraw from any State that passed a law prohibiting deficiency judgments. The Oregon Legislature was about to pass such a law last winter. The Farm Credit Administration notified them that if they did so they would withdraw all lending in Oregon. That scared them out and they did not pass the law. We have had it up with the governor of the Federal land bank and I have had it up personally with the attorney and the various men who control the Farm Credit Administration in Washington, D. C. There is little chance to change their views. They wrote me a dissertation covering three or four pages giving the reason why they had to take deficiency judgments. I think every one of those reasons came from an age when the creditor contended that the debtor should be imprisoned for his debt if he could not pay.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield ?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The State of North Dakota passed a law against taking deficiency judgments, and the Farm Credit Administration withdrew from lending any money whatsoever in the State of North Dakota. The farmers in that State are not able to secure loans from the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. PIERCE. There are other reasons in North Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But they would withdraw from Oregon or any State which passed a law saying that it was against public policy to take deficiency judgments.

Mr. PIERCE. I think, then, we should pass such a law here and let our viewpoint be known throughout the country.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think we ought to.

Mr. PIERCE. I am seriously in favor of such a law, but I do not think we can pass it. These amendments should be passed. I am in favor of the pending bill. I would like to find some way to modify the severity of the policy followed by the Farm Credit Administration in valuing farm lands for the purpose of making loans.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman will remember that they said they very seldom took deficiency judgments, but that there were some cases in which the man had plenty of property where they felt the man ought to pay a deficiency judgment to them just like they would have to pay it to any other institution. They act in the matter of deficiency judgments in accordance with the circumstances of each case.

On the proposition of their withdrawing from South Dakota, I understand that under the laws as they were enacted they could not continue and the State of South Dakota subsequently changed that law.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will yield, it was North Dakota, not South Dakota.

Mr. JONES. Certainly, an institution could not continue functioning in a State which passed laws changing outstanding contracts.

Mr. PIERCE. The injustice came to the farmer when they put into effect this normal-value formula which they use in such a one-sided manner at the present time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed surprised to hear the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], as well as several gentlemen from Minnesota, asking for additional farm-relief legislation. It seems to me that a major portion of our time at this session has been taken up in the consideration of farm relief.

We have before us now by unanimous consent a bill that will amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, the Farm Credit Act, and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, as well as the Agricultural Marketing Act.

I want to congratulate the Members who come from the various industrial sections of this country in cooperating for the consideration of a bill of this kind to be considered by unanimous consent, notwithstanding the fact the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture says it is an innocent bill and will not accomplish a great deal. After reading the bill I think it will have a wholesome effect and will accomplish a great deal of good.

I bring this to the attention of you gentlemen who are vitally interested in the welfare of agriculture in this Nation so that you may show the same broad liberal views when we from the industrial centers desire legislation that may be helpful and beneficial to the workers and wage earners of America. Invariably we find that there is not cooperation, that there is not aid, from you gentlemen whenever we aim to give some little assistance to the underpaid wage earners.

I want to congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture for the splendid and innocent way in which he brings before the House this important legislation for the aid and benefit of the agricultural interests.

I hope from now on you gentlemen will realize and recognize the aid and assistance you have been receiving at the hands of Democratic Congressmen from the industrial centers and that you will at some time in the future aid the Members who come from the industrial centers to pass some legislation at this session which is needed and legislation that will be helpful and beneficial to the wage earners of America. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman represents the district in which is situated the International Harvester Co.?

Mr. SABATH. No. That is not in my district.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Did the gentleman know that the International Harvester Co.'s report for last year showed a profit of $59,000,000?

Mr. SABATH. All of these corporations show a great profit; I concede that.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman realizes that comes out of the farmer's pocket, and the farmers need a little help to pay those enormous profits?

Mr. SABATH. I would like some of that profit to go to the wage earners who make these huge profits possible. I would also like to see the farmers get their share. I am not interested in whether McCormick or any other implement manufacturer makes $59,000,000 or $159,000,000. I am interested in the underpaid wage earner of America who should receive a living wage, so that he may also exist.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is the wage of the class the gentleman just referred to as compared with what the farmer gets, per hour?

Mr. SABATH. Taking everything into consideration, ordinary labor receives much less than the farmer. The farmers have received from 200 to 300 percent more for their products in the last 3 years, but the wages of the workers in the industrial centers have not been increased above 20 percent. I am satisfied that the average wage of American common labor does not amount to more than $600 a year. The farmers of this country should appreciate that they fare better than any other class in this country. I am gratified that the condition of the farmers has been so tremendously improved in the last few years under the present administration, and I hope the wage earners will be benefited at least to the same extent the farmers have been.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] about the wages of a man in the factory as compared with the earnings of a man on the farm. He told us his version. Now I want to tell you something.

Ford, for instance, pays $7.29 a day. The average worker on the farm, if he is lucky, aside from what he gets to eat, and he does not get grapefruit, oranges, or anything like that, receives much less than that. Many times no more than a dollar a day. He gets potatoes, beans, bread, butter, salt pork, and once in a while some fresh meat if he grows it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Why can he not grow it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. He cannot grow quite as much as he otherwise would, because many of your W. P. A. projects have taken the men away from the farmers. The boys and hired men on the farm flock into the city to get this Government money at 6, 8, or sometimes 5 hours a day. So they do not have to work on the farm. The farmers help keep those fellows.

The farmer, if he is lucky, may get a dollar a day, and that is about all. If the gentleman from Illinois would only come over just across the lake and instead of stopping at the hotels in Benton Harbor and St. Joseph where he pays 10, 12, or 15 dollars a day, as the gentleman is accustomed to pay and go out on the farms and see the boys work from the rising of the sun until its going down he would learn something. I would not want him to work on the farm. I would just want the gentleman to watch the farmer work over there.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. May I inform the gentleman I do work sometimes on the farm and I am interested in the farmer. I have voted for more farm-relief legislation than perhaps any other Member here.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fine spirit shown by the gentleman from Illinois. However, I may say this bill is not brought up by unanimous consent. It is brought up under suspension of the rules.

May I inform the gentleman I did not make the statement that this is an innocent bill. The gentleman evidently misunderstood me. I said this is an important bill, but, being largely technical, I am sure the House would not be interested in a long technical explanation, although I will insert that technical explanation in the RECORD.

May I say just a word about the policies of this Administration? This is a financing institution for the purpose of financing secured credit. We have other types of credit in this country. This institution within the last 4 years has refinanced more farm mortgages at a lower rate of interest than was ever financed during any like period in our Government's history. It made more loans on land than were made in the 16 previous years of the land bank's history and at a lower rate of interest than ever prevailed in this country. They have repeatedly stated that on foreclosures their policy is not to foreclose on any farmer who is doing his honest best, if he applies all his money above his actual living needs on the payment of his loans. I have received complaints, and when I have investigated, in most instances I have found this statement to be correct. While they have 37 percent of the farm mortgages of America, they have foreclosed less than 10 percent as many mortgages as the other lending institutions of America.

I wish some of the gentlemen who are disposed to criticize the fine work of this organization, although there are some matters for criticism, would spend a little time in thinking over some of the fine accomplishments of this Administration. It has not only reduced the interest rate which it charges, and has done so in what I believe to be a very fair way, but it has caused the rates of interest to be reduced by practically all the other lending agencies of America. This is not an innocent bill. It is a tremendously important bill. I believe this institution is doing some of the finest work that has ever been done in our country. It has done for the farmer a class of work that has never been done before in any country in the history of the world. Nothing comparable to it has ever before been accomplished. This organization is doing a wonderful work. I do not claim it is perfect, for there are no perfect institutions in this country of ours, but I will match it word for word, act for act, accomplishment for accomplishment, with any institution which was ever created by the hand and purpose of man.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROGRAM OF NATIONAL SAFETY AND ACCIDENT PREVENTION

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7433) to advance a program of national safety and accident prevention.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what this bill is about. We may not object to it.

Mr. SADOWSKI. There is no controversy whatsoever about this bill. This merely provides that the Secretary of Commerce shall continue to foster accident-prevention work on the part of organizations engaged in the promotion of safety and accident prevention. This is the bill sponsored by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $35,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce for the furtherance of the work of the Accident Prevention Conference. Money appropriated pursuant to this act shall be available upon vouchers approved by the Secretary of Commerce for fostering accident-prevention work on the part of organizations engaged in the promotion of safety and accident prevention; preparation and printing of material designed to enlighten the general public in matters of safety and accident prevention, such material to be disseminated through schools, newspapers, magazines, the radio, or any other means of intercourse or communication; the preparation and attempts to obtain enactment of uniform vehicle regulations in the several States; clerical assistants, the services of a director, an assistant director, and a trained engineer for the members of the General Committee of the Accident Prevention Conference: Provided, That the director, assistant director, and engineer shall be employed without reference to the civil-service laws and regulations; and that travel expenses incurred by members of the General Committee of the Accident Prevention Conference in the furtherance of the work of the said Conference shall be paid out of the amount appropriated.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "assistants" strike out "the services of a director, an assistant director, and a trained engineer."

Line 10, after the word "that" strike out "the director, assistant director, and engineer shall be employed without reference to the civil-service laws and regulations; and that."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the President of the United States, in which he expresses the hope there will be some low-cost-housing legislation passed at this session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PER-CAPITA PAYMENT TO RED LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4539) authorizing a per-capita payment of $25 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation, which was passed over a few minutes ago on the call of the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill referred to by him, which the Clerk will report.

The Chair may state that this bill was on the Consent Calendar, and the gentlemen who objected have agreed to withdraw their objections.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I just want to call attention to the tactics used over here. I am not going to object to this bill, but I have a bill which came up in the same way.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. If the gentleman is going to do that, I am going to object.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not care.

Mr. FISH and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, demanded the regular order.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I object, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 6100) authorizing the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to control and prevent the spread of the disease of cancer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a short newspaper article in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill (H. R. 7909) to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and for other purposes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a description of a ride in the air to Bermuda, by our colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there have been a number of newspaper articles put in the RECORD. We have all been taking flights in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not object, but I think the Democratic administration ought to protect the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and stop a lot of this insertion of newspaper articles in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered over the radio by my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

DEVELOPMENT OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECT AT CABINET GORGE

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation pumping or other uses, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation pumping or other uses, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur therein.

COMPTON I. WHITE,
J. W. ROBINSON,
PAUL R. GREEVER,
B. W. GEARHART,
J. C. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. P. POPE,
CARL A. HATCH,
ALVA B. ADAMS,
J. G. TOWNSEND, JR.,
PAT MCCARRAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for a survey of the Cabinet Gorge, on the Clarks Fork of the Columbia River, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying report:

The purpose of H. R. 114 is to investigate the feasibility of a power project and incidental reclamation development at the Cabinet Gorge site, on the Clarks Fork of the Columbia River in the proximity of the Idaho-Montana State line. The bill (H. R. 114) authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the reclamation fund, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

On May 17, 1937, the Senate amended the bill (H. R. 114) by striking out the words in section 2 as follows: "in the reclamation fund" and inserted the following language in lieu thereof, "not otherwise appropriated." The bill H. R. 114 as amended authorizes to be appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concurs therein.

COMPTON I. WHITE,
J. W. ROBINSON,
PAUL R. GREEVER,
B. W. GEARHART,
J. C. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, if there is no opposition to the report, I shall move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, there may be opposition to the report. We would like to know what the report does.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This bill was passed by the House and was amended by the Senate and this is a conference report which has been agreed upon by the conferees on the part of the House and Senate.

The bill provides for an investigation of the Cabinet Gorge power project and is similar to the bill passed this afternoon with reference to the Cimarron River.

Mr. RICH. Is this part of the seven-point program to put the Government in the power business all over the United States?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. No; it is not. This is simply to get some information and have it on file with the Bureau so they may know how to handle the project.

Mr. RICH. Who is going to authorize this? Are you going to authorize in this way a survey for more power projects?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This is simply an investigation by the Bureau of Reclamation.

Mr. RICH. What is it going to cost to put this proposition through?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The bill authorizes an appropriation of $25,000.

Mr. RICH. Where are you going to get the money? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. By taxation, I imagine.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. When this measure passed the House the understanding was that the money would come out of the reclamation fund, and as I understand it, the Senate has put on an amendment so that the money will come out of the general funds of the Treasury. Why should this money come out of the general funds of the Treasury?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may say to the gentleman that the money that is available in the reclamation fund is obligated and it is desired to have these examinations and get the information on file and the Senate put on the amendment and the House conferees have agreed to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There was a distinct understanding about it in the House and the chief argument used here was that the money would come out of the reclamation fund and consequently there would be no drain on the Treasury.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The argument that was made was that we wanted to develop Government-owned resources in our national forests and utilize the water power in manufacturing paper and things of that sort from Government timber.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is begging the issue. When this bill went through the House we wanted to have the money involved taken out of the reclamation fund. Did the gentleman make any effort to maintain the position of the House?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. We certainly did, and the conferees are in agreement that we should accept the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If you had to get the money out of the reclamation fund it would be over 100 years before the gentleman could get it. The gentleman knew that, and this is only a ruse by which you say you are going to take the money out of the reclamation fund, although that money is spent or obligated for the next 100 years.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may say to the gentleman that I think he is in error. We are passing bills every day authorizing the construction of projects by the utilization of the reclamation funds.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states that I am in error. I may state to the gentleman that the reclamation fund is obligated to the extent of more than $700,000,000 and according to the Reclamation Service you are getting in $10,000,000 a year. If you include the interest you are paying and so on, you will see that it will be 100 years before you get caught up.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may say to the gentleman that there is over $2,000,000 in the reclamation fund now.

Mr. RICH. There may be $2,000,00 in the fund at the present time but we have already obligated over $700,000,000, and how are you going to get $700,000,000 out of $2,000,000?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 51, noes 19.

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NEUTRALITY

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, early this year the membership of this House voted for an arms embargo law in the interests of neutrality which we were solemnly assured gave the President of the United States the authority to place an embargo upon the exportation of arms and implements of war and to issue other Executive orders in the interest of maintaining the neutrality of the United States and assuring that our country would not become involved in the military disputes of other nations. For a number of weeks on the other side of the Pacific, the armed forces of China and Japan have been waging war upon the Asiatic mainland. In spite of the pratings of international diplomats and legalistic hair splitters, China and Japan are at war with every indication that the struggle will be a long one and may easily involve other nations, yet no application of our widely advertised neutrality and arms embargo laws have been made. Materials to be used in the prosecution of war are leaving our ports, American nationals are traveling on ships of the belligerents, American refugees are remaining in the war zone and apparently have not been advised to evacuate and American money and credit have not been restricted to the countries involved. In the so-called neutrality laws that we have passed with haste and with little or no opportunity to discuss or amend, the President is given the responsibility of declaring when a state of war exists before invoking the restrictions of the legislation. That the laws we have passed are weak, ineffective, and are charged with international and diplomatic dynamite is indicated to me by the Executive's hesitancy in using them in this Asiatic crisis. China insists Japan is pursuing a war of conquest and territorial aggrandizement against her, while the Foreign Office of the Government of Japan insists that they are not at war with China but dealing with irresponsible Chinese bandits, Communists, and so forth. When the so-called neutrality laws were passed by this Congress, some of us protested their ineffectuality and their dangers of international repercussions, but our voices crying in the wilderness were not heard. Some of us pointed out the very weakness which in my own opinion has caused the President to proceed so cautiously in applying the laws we have given him the authority to use. If the President of the United States declares that a state of war exists between China and Japan, in spite of the protestations of the Japanese, which he must do to proclaim an embargo, then Japanese-American relations are strained and even the lives of American nationalists in the war zone may be seriously endangered.

Why it was necessary to place the Executive on the delicate spot of declaring a state of war in existence before embargoing the shipment of arms and implements of war from this country, neither I nor millions of other friends of peace in America have been able to understand. No one has ever convinced me that it was a good thing to ship arms, implements of war, and loan money to foreign countries before a war started, but a bad thing after shooting began. That was why I introduced House Joint Resolution 412 in June, prohibiting the shipment of arms or the materials of war and the making of loans to be used in preparation for war, to any country, whether that country was actually at war or not. This type of legislation involves no statements by the President or any other American to be misinterpreted or misunderstood. This type of legislation, once the basic law of our land, applies to all countries at all times, equally and alike.

I requested a hearing by the Committee on Foreign Affairs for my resolution. No hearing has been granted, although the situation in Asia grows more serious day by day, and none of our so-called neutrality legislation, approved by that committee and enacted into law, has been applied. Scrap metal and other materials usable in the prosecution of war are leaving our ports. War clouds that may hover over us gather more ominously each day across the Pacific. We shall and must keep out of war, and the surest way of dong it is to take neither side and prevent profit-hungry war mongers from involving us on either side by the plying of their disreputable trade.

I have not despaired that the Foreign Affairs Committee may bring in legislation which will not require the President to declare a state of war exists before he can use it to protect the neutrality of the United States and prevent the exportation of arms, but the time before we adjourn is short. My resolution is broad enough to avoid such complications. On Friday, when the 30 legislative days required under the rule expired, I filed a discharge petition with the Clerk to bring my resolution into the House so that it might be acted upon. It would be a tragedy fraught with the greatest dangers if Congress should adjourn this session without passing an arms-embargo act that would bar exportation of arms and the making of loans to any country without conditioning such legislation on a Presidential pronouncement that war exists between certain countries. All Asia is arming and this country must not be connected with the conflict in any way. We can steer clear of war, check the greed of the munitions and banking dealers in blood without straining diplomatic relations with any country by the type of legislation I have suggested to the House. I am not vainglorious enough to insist that my bill and no other should pass, but I do feel the principles it outlines should be enacted into law before we adjourn. Millions of peace-loving Americans want an absolute embargo on arms, implements of war, and the loan of war-making moneys to be effective at all times. I urge my colleagues of the House to sign my petition no. 25 on House Joint Resolution 412 so that we can get some legislation effective before we adjourn that can be invoked without compelling the President to proclaim a situation exists that, while all the civilized world knows does exist, the very proclaiming by our President, before he is at liberty to apply the law, might lead us into the dispute ourselves and cost the lives of many Americans.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. O'MALLEY was granted leave to revise and extend his own remarks.)

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 7909, and to insert certain letters referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] is entitled at this point to be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not avail myself of the privilege extended to me today. I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of legislative business and any other orders that may have been made, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE ROBERT H. WHITELAW

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes to announce the death of a former Member of this body.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to announce the death of a former Member of this House, Hon. Robert H. Whitelaw, of Cape Girardeau, Mo., who died at Blythesville, Ark., on Tuesday last, the 27th of July, at the advanced age of 83 years. Mr. Whitelaw was a Member of the Fifty-first Congress, having been elected to serve out the unexpired term of Hon. James P. Walker, who died in July 1890, shortly after his renomination in the old Fourteenth Congressional District of Missouri. Mr. Whitelaw did not seek reelection, and after the expiration of his term, March 5, 1891, he resumed the active practice of law at his home in the city of Cape Girardeau, Mo.

At the time of his death Mr. Whitelaw had been a member of the bar of southeastern Missouri for more than 60 years. He was a successful lawyer, was loved and esteemed by the lawyers, judges, and litigants, and played a very important part in the development of southeast Missouri, where he spent most of his life.

Being the son of a Virginia planter, Mr. Whitelaw was an ardent Democrat in politics, and always contributed generously both of his time and money to the success of his party. To his surviving family, his wife, and three children, his home city, and his State he leaves a rich heritage, a life of useful, patriotic service, which will be long remembered by neighbors, friends, and an appreciative citizenry.

For many years it was my privilege to list him as my warm personal friend. I, too, shall miss him when I go back to his home city which he loved so well.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday in my State, the State of Pennsylvania, there was a so-called convention of those who posed as delegates representing large groups of American workingmen. They stated their purpose was to form an organization to secure justice for the American workingman and to insure him of the exercise of his right to work. The list of those attending in their capacity as so-called delegates comprised those who, throughout their lives, have been devoted to furthering so-called company unions. Practically every one of them who was there as a delegate has at some time in his life been associated with organizations which had for their purpose the nullifying of those things which legitimate organizations were seeking to accomplish. Unfortunately—and I say unfortunately with real sincerity—a Member of this House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] journeyed to my State of Pennsylvania and addressed this gathering. While there he engaged in the most vituperative attacks upon practically everyone who at any time had evidenced a desire to be of help to labor. The President of the United States, the Governor of Pennsylvania, everyone identified with the labor movement, and not even the wife of the President of the United States was immune from his vituperative remarks.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is using language about a Member of the House that is not permitted.

Mr. BRADLEY. I will strike out "vituperative."

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BRADLEY. When a Member of Congress comes into my State, I deem that I have a duty upon the floor of this House to answer any remarks which he might have made, to which I have objection and which might be a reflection upon those people in my State who are striving to earn a living or to organize those who are engaged in occupations in that State.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. When I have finished, if you please.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan made his plea on the basis of patriotism. He clothed himself in the garb of a patriot. He appealed to those gathered there to join him in a great movement to save the liberties of the American people. He praised, with great fervor, those captains of industry, Mr. Sloan, Mr. Ford, and all those who have concentrated the wealth of this country in their hands, who have exploited labor for years, who have pyramided their profits and piled up their gains.

I submit that when anyone engages in attacks upon others, when they clothe themselves in the garb of a patriot, their own actions, I presume, would be open to scrutiny. I heard the gentleman from Michigan upon the floor of this House state that at no time would he consider the bearing of arms—I believe my recollection is correct——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. To correct the gentleman. I said "except in self-defense; in defense of my liberties."

Mr. BRADLEY. I make that correction—"except in self-defense."

Mr. HOFFMAN. And in defense of my liberty.

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes. I believe the gentleman stated that he had at no time borne arms for the defense of his country and would not bear arms except if he were personally attacked. The welfare of this country means nothing to him, presumably—only himself.

Now, some weeks ago I was much amazed to read in the public press that a Member of Congress had sent a telegram, and gave it publicity, advising someone to hoard up ammunition, buy machine guns, and Gatling guns. For what? Presumably—and I was right in making the inference, because it was made in connection with a labor dispute—the guns were to be used upon American workingmen, and I was much concerned at the time. I thought, well, as a friend of labor, here is something to be concerned about. Perhaps this is the traditional man on horseback. Perhaps this is some excellent military strategist whom the country would have to fear. Perhaps here is another would-be dictator, a man well versed in arms, the traditional man on horseback; but my calm returned to me when I made a few inquiries with respect to the possibility of the gentleman being learned in the arts of war and found these facts: The gentleman was born in 1875. I looked to see what patriotism he had when the country needed patriots and I found that at the outbreak of the World War he was 42 years old.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I insist that the gentleman has no right to speak of a Member of the House in the language the gentleman is using.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move that the words of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be taken down?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Not if the gentleman proceeds in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. In a moment I shall be pleased to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just wanted to give the gentleman permission to go as far as he likes.

Mr. BRADLEY. I believe I have that under the rules of the House anyway.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I give it to him whether the gentleman has it or not.

Mr. BRADLEY. The gentleman has no right to impugn the patriotism of our leaders. I simply stated the gentleman's record with respect to the absence of a military career: 42 years old at the time of the World War, no military record. At the time of the Spanish-American War he was 23 years old. I never heard of him in the histories bravely charging up San Juan Hill with Theodore Roosevelt. Why the patriotic fervor today? Why the call for arms and ammunition? Why the journey to a State to arouse officers, citizens, and give vent to spleen against the President of the United States and the Governor of my State.

Mr. Speaker, on one occasion, on this floor, the gentleman from Michigan spoke on the labor question. I asked him then if he had any knowledge of the earnings of the corporations he was discussing, and he informed me quite candidly that he had no knowledge either of their earnings or of their capital structures. I would say to the gentleman from Michigan that before he undertakes to settle the labor question, before he undertakes to impugn the motives of those who are leading the American workingman, before he attacks the President of the United States, the Governor of Pennsylvania, and the wife of the President of the United States, it would be a great deal better if he would study the corporations and the earnings of the corporation involved in these labor disputes. Then, perhaps, he could speak with authority and not engage in general condemnation of everyone striving to improve the lot of the American workingman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I take it for granted that the gentleman is interested in labor and trying to see that labor gets a fair opportunity to say whether it wants to work under certain conditions or whether it does not want to work under those conditions.

Mr. BRADLEY. I am very much interested in labor. That is the reason I am here.

Mr. RICH. I wish to refer the gentleman to a letter that I placed in the RECORD on July 30, page 7908, from the Eskimo Knitting Mills, of Philadelphia, J. Rosenfeld, president. I do not know this man, but this letter is worthy of the gentleman's study if he lives in Philadelphia and is interested in doing labor a service. I would like for the gentleman to read the letter.

Mr. BRADLEY. I have already read the letter. The Eskimo Knitting Mills said that they were on the verge of liquidation, on the verge of going out of business. If the gentleman would read the news reports of today, he would find that they have changed their minds about going out of business, for they have just signed a complete agreement with the C. I. O. [Laughter.] From this I imagine that they sent the letter at a time when they were in the throes of labor difficulties in order to create sympathy. Their change of mind was reported in this morning's paper. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I would ask the gentleman whether the vote was an expression of the free will of the majority of the employees in the Eskimo Knitting Mills, or was it because they were compelled to cast that kind of vote under direction from the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania or from the mayor of Philadelphia?

Mr. BRADLEY. The gentleman's opinion is as good as mine. He can read the complete report in this morning's paper.

Mr. RICH. Which paper?

Mr. BRADLEY. The Philadelphia Record.

Mr. RICH. I would believe very little I saw in that paper.

Mr. BRADLEY. On the contrary, I find in these matters it is most reliable. It must be a good paper if it does not suit the gentleman. It must be very good for me, then.

Mr. RICH. Has the gentleman any more authentic information? I would like to get it if he has. I am interested in helping labor.

Mr. BRADLEY. If I had any further information, I would be glad to give it to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman can get something, I wish he would send it to me. I want to help these people.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Did I understand the gentleman to say in the course of his remarks that telegrams or letters had been sent out advising American citizens and businessmen to store arms and ammunition?

Mr. BRADLEY. I understand from what I read in the paper that the gentleman from Michigan wired someone in his State to collect ammunition and guns, and that he would be out there, I presume to take charge of the situation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I do not want to get into the controversy between the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague, and the gentleman from Michigan, but I think if you sat down and talked with the gentleman from Michigan and got his viewpoint, you would be able to do something to help labor and not come on the floor of the House and make statements such as you have made.

Mr. BRADLEY. If the gentleman read the statements made by the gentleman from Michigan, he should be here objecting to them also.

Mr. RICH. I believe the gentleman is trying to do a good thing, and I think if you would try to do the same good you would not be here fighting. You would be discussing the thing and trying to help.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Was that the speech the gentleman from Michigan made at Hershey, Pa., in which he charged that the Senator from Wisconsin was a Communist?

Mr. BRADLEY. He said everyone was a Communist. I presume I am one now by qualification.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is Pennsylvania really in such a bad state they need these reformers to go in there from other States?

Mr. BRADLEY. We were in a terrible state up to about 2 years ago when we elected a Democratic Governor. Conditions are improving.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It would seem to me that Michigan is in need of reforming. That should be done over there.

Mr. BRADLEY. I think so. I agree with the gentleman, and I thank him.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Did the gentleman read the editorial in yesterday's Philadelphia Inquirer?

Mr. BRADLEY. I read everything in the Inquirer yesterday except the editorials.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman had read that editorial he would see a different situation in the State of Pennsylvania. I prognosticate if the gentleman will watch Pennsylvania for the next 3 or 4 years, he will find that Pennsylvania will be going backward.

Mr. BRADLEY. I will correct myself and say I did read that editorial. I hope when the wage and hour bill is in here for consideration the gentleman will join with us from Pennsylvania in voting for it in order to insure protection for Pennsylvania's manufacturers and Pennsylvania workers.

Mr. RICH. If you will bring in a bill providing for a 40-hour week and a 40-cent minimum wage and not set up a new board with a lot of new powers, you will find the gentleman from Pennsylvania voting for it; but when you put the power in the hands of five men to regulate all the industry of this country, I am frank to say I would not vote for anything like that because it will do no good.

Mr. BRADLEY. We have to make haste slowly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAAS (at the request of Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BLAND (at the request of Mr. BURCH), for 1 day, on account of important business.

To Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT (at the request of Mr. GREGORY), for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARTER, for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. COOPER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska, for 1 week, on account of official business.

To Mr. PHILLIPS (at the request of Mr. SMITH of Connecticut), for 1 day, on account of important business.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman withhold that request for a half minute?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], I think I may say to him that we can probably pass this bill without his approval.

Mr. RICH. I am sure you can pass the bill without my support; but if the gentleman wants my support, he will have to bring in a bill that does not set up a new board with unlimited powers. I will support a bill providing for a minimum wage and the elimination of child labor, but I will not support a bill which creates a new board.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of the time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to address the House for 15 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should apologize for going into Pennsylvania. I never knew before that that was closed territory; but if it is hereafter, I will try to avoid giving offense to the gentleman.

A correction should be made in his statement, because I said nothing at Hershey derogatory to any woman, nor do I ever expect to.

So far as my patriotism is concerned, I do not think any defense of that is necessary. It would be biased and prejudiced in any event, and I have no desire, and I have had none at any time, to be shot.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not now.

I am inclined to think that these gentlemen who boast of their patriotism so much perhaps did not realize fully the danger they might encounter and some of those who boast the most stayed nearest to home. We will let that pass.

As to the statement about inciting disorder or bearing arms, I have heard that once or twice before. All that I ever said at any time to anyone, and all I ever intend to say, was I did not and I do not advocate violence and I approve of no one who does. I do not approve of lawlessness. I assume no patriotic, decent American citizen does approve of lawlessness. I did say, and on this I stand, and I think every other Member of the House who is a patriotic American has the same idea, that when there comes to my city and to the cities of my State outsiders, some action should be taken. Michigan has been a fairly decent State in the past. I do not care under what banner these men come into my State, but when they come to our State, and they are armed, and a minority, not more than 10 percent, takes possession of our factories, takes possession of our streets, goes to the homes and intimidates the wives and children of our workers, when they threaten as Bittner did on that Sunday down there at Monroe, speaking to and of the citizens of Monroe and to the citizens of Michigan:

> By God, they'll pay for what they did at Monroe, and pay well. We will have pickets in Monroe within 2 days—we didn't want to do it today, for Sunday is not a day of work, so we'll allow the crowd in Monroe to rest in peace today, but beginning tomorrow there'll be no peace in Monroe until Republic signs with S. W. O. C.
> We're going to Monroe and stay there as long as steel is made there.
> The Government of Michigan and the United States are with us.

When they do these things and make these statements, I can only answer that Michigan citizens will, as they did on this occasion, show themselves capable of defending themselves.

But what can any decent citizen do when his Governor has told the State troopers, in effect, to prevent the sheriff, a civil officer, from giving protection to citizens of a community? What can any decent citizen do, even though he be a coward, as the gentleman says I am?

Mr. BRADLEY. I did not say it; the gentleman said it himself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There are two kinds of cowardice. There is the man who is possessed of physical courage and the man who is possessed of moral courage. There are more moral cowards in this world today who do not stand up and voice their sentiments when an election is about to be held than there are physical cowards, and they are not all outside official elected positions, either.

I have no apology to make for anything I said at Hershey. I criticized no one as a man. I criticized several because of their official acts, and I propose to do it again. As time goes on, you on the Democratic side will find more and more joining me in that criticism, because the course of this administration is bound to bring destruction to this Government and to its industries.

Into Michigan you came, or I will say came those whose doctrines and treatment you follow, and took from the wage earners $44,000,000 in the space of 44 days. What did these wage earners get in return? Nothing. You will find when this industrial war is over that the average pay check of the automobile worker will be from $300 to $400 per year less than it was before, and you will find that in the end those factories will be retooled, there will be fewer hours of employment required to turn out the same product than were required before, and the money expended for the benefit of labor will be less.

Oh, yes; I did criticize the Senate Civil Liberties Committee. Why? Because, charged with a duty of disclosing the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, it concealed a part of that Chicago transaction. I recall the day, the day the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] stood here and held out those pictures, and so do you. No one has ever brought to the floor the pictures showing the whole scene. I have in my office, and I will put in the RECORD, if I may have that permission, and I now ask it, a portion of the testimony taken in Chicago which shows that the photographers who took those pictures had them and that the Senate committee did not disclose them. I do not want to put the pictures in the RECORD.

Mr. BRADLEY. The gentleman said a portion of the testimony. I think we should have all the testimony.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan kindly indicate before what committee this testimony was taken and where it was taken?

Mr. HOFFMAN. To save time, Mr. Speaker, I will put that testimony in the RECORD at some later time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It will come in in some other speech. What the Senate committee did, as I have stated, was to leave out that portion of the testimony which has since been put in under oath in another tribunal, which shows that the riot came about because of an assault by the strikers, armed at the time. It is a significant fact that the march on the plant was the fourth one which had been staged by those men. It is significant, indeed, that a first-aid station had been established by the strikers before they started their march. This is proof enough that they knew what was about to happen. That violence on their part was intended. That they were looking for trouble. That they intended to drive the workers from the plant by force.

I recall when I stood here in January and February and appealed for the passage of a resolution asking that these sit-down strikes be condemned, not a voice on this side was raised in support of it, though it is true that both the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] made statements indicating their opposition to sit-down strikes and the methods used by those engaged in them. Last week the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] rose and condemned, in terms as strong as I have ever used, the National Labor Relations Board for what it did down in his State. It makes a difference, oh, it makes a difference whether it is your factory that is taken from you or a factory somewhere else. It was nothing to destroy industry in Michigan, and it was nothing to deprive our wage earners of their jobs by the thousands, and of their pay rolls by the millions of dollars, but go down into Mississippi and oh, that is a different proposition. This thing is coming home, as I told you it would come home, to you people of the South, and to you Democrats of the South. It is coming home some day to you men in Pennsylvania, when your laborers find they have sold their right to work to John L. Lewis and that he collects tribute each month. You will find that he will do to your workers and to your industry what he did to the coal miners and to the coal industry. He forced the users of coal into the use of oil and other substitutes. There are fewer jobs in the coal industry and there is less sale for coal in volume than there would have been were it not for his activities. What has he accomplished?

I hold no brief for the men who have established and who operate these industries. They are nothing to me, but the independent worker is, and the unorganized citizen means something, for, after all, they are the men who have to pay the costs. It is easy enough for the steel companies, if they have a market in Great Britain where they can sell steel to a country which wants to build ships and prepare for war, to grant an increase in wages and add it to the cost of the product, but it is a different proposition if the cost is to come out of the pockets of our own people.

Execute these men industrially, if you will, all of them about whom you talk—Ford, Mott, Sloan, Chrysler, and the rest of them. You know their names better than I, for they are the favorite topic of abuse and vilification. I say, execute them industrially, if you wish. Who will take their places—wreckers like Lewis? How many of you are riding in automobiles today because of the genius, the perseverance, and the executive ability of Henry Ford and like men? The chances are that the gentleman who spoke here a moment ago would be walking the streets on his own shoe leather instead of riding in an automobile if it were not for Henry Ford and a hundred like him.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not now.

Execute all of these men industrially. Then, will John Lewis, who rides around in his 12-cylinder Cadillac, with a liveried chauffeur, give the workers jobs?

And when Lewis provides the jobs, will he be "an easy boss"? Will he divide the profits with the workers? Will he discard his 12-cylinder Cadillac and his liveried chauffeur and drive his own medium-priced car, as do those who toil for him?

Does he possess the executive ability to create, to construct, to carry on a business, to as great an extent as he possesses the ability to wreck and to destroy? Is he a builder or just a wrecker?

He is an expert at collecting dues, at forcing men into the C. I. O. Can he meet a pay roll as well as he can levy tribute upon one? Is he equally as expert at creating and maintaining jobs, tasks at which to labor, as he is in destroying them?

He is an expert at collecting dues, at forcing men into the C. I. O. You cannot point to one strikebreaker imported into any plant by anyone since December 30, when this automobile strike was called, and all these acts of violence, with very few exceptions, have occurred on company ground; and I have a letter which I will put into the RECORD, too, if I may, showing how the C. I. O. gets its members. They just took him—this employee, and he is a member of the National Guard—and ducked him in a vat of flint "cote", which contains creosote. That is one way of arguing; that is one way of convincing a man he should join the C. I. O.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No.

Well, Lewis, maybe when he has wrecked and destroyed the business, will give them jobs. Will he? Will the Madam Secretary? Will the President himself? Will it be Governor Earle?

Oh, I was born in Pennsylvania, and I claim the right to go back once in a while to visit some of my relatives who still live there. I know that under your code it is a sin and a crime for me to raise my voice in opposition to the crimes of the C. I. O. when committed in my State of Michigan. I would have been welcomed by the gentleman's associates in Pennsylvania anywhere had I spoken for the C. I. O., had I gone out to collect dues, had I advocated the doctrine that the gentleman stands for—the doctrine that is preached and followed by Brophy, Hapgood, Germer, and Reuthers and their associates.

Mr. BRADLEY. Is the gentleman intimating that I am associated with Browder and that outfit?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; you just preach the doctrine they preach.

Mr. BRADLEY. The gentleman is very much mistaken. I am more opposed to communism than he is; and more intelligently opposed to it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I admit the intelligence and thank God for the other—for the degree. I never questioned your intelligence. I will concede you are "all wise", that you are the only man who has patriotism in his heart. Oh, sure, that is all conceded. The only thing I regret is that it is not used in a different way, that is all.

Mr. BRADLEY. God forbid I should use it your way.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must not speak while sitting in their seats. If they desire to submit remarks, they must secure the permission of the Member occupying the floor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] seems to be thinking, if not quoting, the words of that Biblical character who said, "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are"

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think not, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan declines to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You know it is always interesting, instructive, as well as amusing, I might add, to have some gentleman who knows nothing about industry, who never in his life has given a job to anybody, who never met a pay roll, tell how industry should be operated. I have noticed that the fellows who meet the pay rolls ordinarily are decent, respectable men, and I have noticed that the fellows who criticize them the most severely are fellows who have not, for some unexplained reason, followed the course of meeting a pay roll.

I have no criticism of any Member of the House nor do I question any Member's motives or ability. I suppose we can all go out and talk as long as we tell the truth and are fairly temperate in our language, but I notice it is all right for the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BERNARD]—and I regret to speak of this because he does not happen to be here—to advocate, as the papers say he did, if he did, the calling of strikes up in that country. It is all right for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] to speak as he did here a few days ago and criticize those of us who would like to see these jobs continued. I have no fault to find. That is their privilege, but when, on the other side, we rise and we talk not in favor, necessarily, of the industrialists, but when we talk in favor of the man who wants to work, the man who is satisfied with his job, that seems to be treason. To advocate the right of a man to work at a job of his own choosing seems to be contrary to the policy of those who would impose their will and levy tribute upon all workers. [Applause.]

APPOINTMENT OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICES

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I merely desire to ask the Senator whether he would yield for the purpose of permitting me to offer certain amendments to the pending bill which were suggested by different Senators as the result of the discussion yesterday, or would he rather I should defer doing so?

Mr. BORAH. I wish to occupy the floor very briefly.

Mr. President, I desire briefly to continue the debate on the subject of the vacancy or supposed vacancy on the Supreme Court. There was rather an extended and heated discussion on yesterday as to the time when this vacancy should be filled. I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that, in my opinion, there is no vacancy on the Supreme Court of the United States. This may seem surprising but investigation will disclose that we have that question to determine. Has Justice Van Devanter resigned? If not, how does the vacancy occur?

I do not think there is any vacancy to fill, and I wish to urge that view upon the consideration of the Senate. It will certainly become an acute question when the President sends in, if he ever does, an appointment for this vacancy. I should not be greatly surprised if the Attorney General did not have this matter in view when he was forming his opinion on the question of filling the supposed vacancy.

Mr. President, there are only three ways by which a Justice of the Supreme Court may be separated from the Court—by impeachment, by resignation, or by death. A Justice may be separated from the Supreme Court by no other means and in no other way. He is either a Justice of the Supreme Court or he is not, and he is a Justice if he has not been impeached or has not resigned or if death has not overtaken him. He cannot be made to "jayhawk" between the lines of being a Justice and not being a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The measure which Congress passed, and which recently became a law, and under which we are apparently proceeding, recognizes, by its very terms, that a Justice who retires under the terms of this law is still a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The law provides—

That Justices of the Supreme Court are hereby granted the same rights and privileges with regard to retiring, instead of resigning, granted to judges other than Justices of the Supreme Court by section 260 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 375), and the President shall be authorized to appoint a successor to any such Justice of the Supreme Court so retiring from regular active service on the bench, but such Justice of the Supreme Court so retired may nevertheless be called upon by the Chief Justice and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties, in any judicial circuit, including those of a circuit justice in such circuit, as such retired Justice may be willing to undertake.

Is he a Justice of the Supreme Court or what office does he hold when the Chief Justice of the United States calls upon him to perform the duties of a Justice? He is still a Justice of the Supreme Court. He is not a circuit judge. He has never been appointed to that position. No law has ever undertaken to make him a circuit judge, and we could not by law make him a circuit judge. He would have to be appointed. He is called into service as a circuit judge or to perform other judicial duties because he is still a Justice of the Supreme Court. If he is still a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, necessarily he must perform the duties of a justice, and he cannot perform duties other than those which depend upon the fact that he is a Justice of the Supreme Court.

I ask the Senate and I ask those who have studied the question to think over the matter of how a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States can be retired. He is there during good behavior. There is no way to get rid of him except to impeach him. That was the entire design and purpose of that clause of the Constitution, that he could not be removed except through impeachment, through resignation, or death.

I called attention to this matter in the subcommittee when it was before them, but I could not get any consideration. I urged that as the Constitution now stands that all retirement plans must be based upon resignation. We were moved under a desire, apparently, to furnish a chute by which a Justice might escape so that another question might be made less acute. We did not fully consider the question I am now debating.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator contend that under the statute there is no retirement of these Justices and that the Chief Justice could call a retired Justice back to service on the Supreme Court?

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt at all that Justice Van Devanter could be called back at the October term 1937 and take his place and discharge the duties of a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Of course he will not, under the circumstances, likely do so, but he still holds the office for he has not resigned. The Chief Justice may call upon him to perform judicial duties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under what language of the statute could he do that?

Mr. BORAH. Under no act or statute.

Mr. ASHURST. Under the Constitution?

Mr. BORAH. Under the Constitution of the United States he has been appointed to that position during good behavior, and neither the Congress of the United States nor the President, nor the Congress and the President combined, can remove him from that office except through the power of impeachment. We could not provide by law for his retirement and end his term of office, unless that law provided for his resignation and he accepted the terms of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Constitution does not provide the details by which Congress may clothe Justices of the Supreme Court with authority to serve in connection with circuit judges. By statutory provision, and not by the Constitution, for a long time they presided over the circuit courts and traveled around over the country like circuit riders. Of course, that was statutory and could be repealed, modified, or changed in any way Congress might see fit. The act which authorized the retirement, and which was supposed to be made necessary in order that the retired Justice might enjoy the emoluments of his office, would still hold out the fiction or delusion that he would in some way still be connected with the Court. It was provided by statute that he might be called by the Chief Justice to perform certain duties in the circuit.

Might not that be regarded merely to be what the statute in the beginning provided and still provides, that a Justice of the Supreme Court should perform certain duties in the circuit, without in any way involving his right to sit upon the Supreme Court if he insisted upon it, notwithstanding his retirement under the statute?

Mr. BORAH. There is a wide difference in calling upon a Justice of the Supreme Court by statute to perform the duties of a circuit judge and in removing him from office by statute. We do that because he is a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. What I am talking about now is a statute which undertakes to separate him from the justiceship of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I maintain cannot be done. There has never been an attempt that I know of to provide that a Justice of the Supreme Court might be a justice for some purposes and not a justice for another purpose.

Why do we say the Chief Justice can call upon Justice Van Devanter to discharge judicial duties in the circuit? It is because he is still a Justice of the Supreme Court. Under no other theory would he have any right or any authority to call upon Justice Van Devanter. He might just as well call upon John Doe to discharge the duties unless he is a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The fact that we recognize in this act the right of the Chief Justice to call upon him to discharge his judicial duties recognizes the fact that he is still a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not believe that any lawyer will dispute the assertion of the able Senator from Idaho that Mr. Justice Van Devanter, until he dies or is impeached or resigns, is a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. But I doubt if any lawyer upon a close examination will follow the able Senator in his position that there is no power vested in the Executive to nominate a successor to Mr. Justice Van Devanter.

For example, take the State of Arizona, which is provided with two district judges. One of them reached the age of 70 years lately and retired on full pay under a statute enacted many years ago. He is still a district judge. He may be called upon by the circuit judge to render service, but when the nomination came in for his successor no one here or elsewhere had any idea that the President was without power to nominate a successor.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly, the President cannot name a successor until there is a vacancy, and I challenge any lawyer here to say there is a vacancy on the Supreme Court of the United States, until a Justice resigns or is impeached or dies. Our retirement law is defective in not calling for resignation prior to receiving the emoluments there provided for.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator has been—I will not say an ornament, but he has been more than that—he has been a most useful member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary for six Roman lustrums—30 years. When the health, the mental power of Mr. Justice Pitney was impaired, and he was unable to read his briefs, unable to read his correspondence, unable to sit upon the bench, my able friend from Idaho assisted in the Judiciary Committee in approving a measure to authorize the President in providing for retirement pay for Mr. Justice Pitney. While I do not recall now, because it was many years ago, yet I believe no one questioned the right of the then President to nominate a successor.

Suppose the entire membership of the Supreme Court of the United States should suddenly become insane. Suppose there was something which would take the reason prisoner, and that each and all, en masse and en bloc, would become insane. Congress, of course, would grant them retirement privileges and retirement pay. Does the able Senator say the President could not nominate a new bench?

Mr. BORAH. I say the Congress of the United States could not get rid of nine insane men except through the power of impeachment. That is what was done in the days when the Constitution was observed. Did they not in the early days impeach an insane judge?

Mr. ASHURST. I think one of the reasons for the great success of the Senator at the bar and in statesmanship is his willingness to say bold things and to take ground which at first blush challenges rather what is the generally accepted attitude of the country. If the nine members of the Supreme Court were each and all to become insane suddenly they would still be judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. They would still be entitled to their compensation and, as the able Senator has said, until they died, resigned, or were impeached, they would still be Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I doubt, however, if upon careful reflection the able Senator would say that the President is without power to nominate not precisely successors but to nominate as Justices men to sit upon the Supreme Bench and do justice to the people. The Senator will never admit, keen, thoughtful logician that he is, brilliant statesman that he is, that the Federal Government can by any plan be driven into a cul de sac where the entire judicial branch of the Government could be paralyzed and the executive and legislative branches powerless and helpless to move.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution provided certain means and methods by which the Justices of the Supreme Court could be dealt with. So far as this matter is concerned, it is wholly immaterial what my record has been on the Judiciary Committee. Nevertheless, when, years ago, the bill came before the Senate providing for the retirement of judges of the lower courts, I opposed it and voted against it for the reasons which I now urge. A bill came over from the House later covering the same principle, and I opposed it and voted against it, again for the same reasons. When the measure recently enacted was before the subcommittee of the Senate I again advanced the proposition that until a Justice resigns he is still a Justice.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. Whether I am right or wrong, I have entertained that view from the beginning; and I ask those who disagree with me to point to me the constitutional method by which a Justice of the Supreme Court can be gotten rid of if he does not see fit to resign.

As I suggested, we could have passed a law providing that the salaries of resigned Justices should continue the same as while they were on the bench, but it would have had to be based upon their resignation. They would have had to resign. We had the same right to do that as we have now with reference to the widows of ex-Presidents, and so forth. We could have made such provision for these resigned Justices; but we are not doing that. We have a Justice here whom the Chief Justice at any time may call upon to discharge the judicial duties, which he could not discharge except from the fact that he is a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. After urging my position and receiving no support, I concluded not to oppose the bill. But now a situation has arisen which justifies—in fact, requires—that the matter be presented.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. GEORGE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, one or two sentences that fell from the lips of the able Senator indicated that he thought I was attempting to array him against himself. I did not attempt any such thing. It is my exclusive privilege here to array myself against myself when I see fit. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. No; we all share that honor with the Senator. The only safe rule is to act according to your best judgment; today and tomorrow act upon your best judgment again. Let consistency take care of itself. "Consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds."

Mr. ASHURST. If consistency be a virtue at all—and I do not think it is—the Senator from Idaho has that among his many other virtues.

On many occasions men have left their country for their country's good. Suppose the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, for their country's good, should all retire en bloc, en masse. Is the Senator going to argue that the President of the United States could not nominate and send to the Senate for confirmation the names of men to sit upon the Supreme Bench? Will the Senator say that the President would be powerless in such a contingency?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, Mr. President; I am going to say that until a vacancy is created, either by the hand of God or by the impeachment power of the Congress, or by the resignation of a Justice, there is no office for the President to fill; and if Justices get up and leave their country for their country's good, then the Congress of the United States has the power to impeach them for failure to discharge their duty. They are no longer acting in accordance with the rules of good behavior. There is a perfect way to deal with them. At least, it is the only constitutional way.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. Justice Van Devanter served his country on the circuit bench, he was an Assistant Attorney General, and I have no quarrel with his record as a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, though I may not agree with some of his decisions. He is not going to perform any more duties as Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The most remote excursion of the imagination does not lead anyone to believe that he will ever perform any more services as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He will, however, draw full pay for life. Is the Senator from Idaho willing to vote to impeach him because of his refusing to serve further?

Mr. BORAH. I should unhesitatingly vote to impeach a Justice who refused either to perform his duties or resign. Why should I vote to impeach anybody if I would not vote to impeach a man who would not discharge his duty?

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Then the fault lies with the Congress in passing the retirement law.

Mr. BORAH. The fault lies with the Congress in the fact that instead of providing for his retirement they did not provide for his salary or his compensation after his resignation. I am thoroughly in favor of a retirement law which provides the same emoluments after resignation as before. I would, however, require him to serve until 75 years of age.

That would have been a perfectly simple and easy thing to do. We could have said that any Justice resigning should have a salary equal to that which he had at the time he was serving—a perfectly simple thing to do. Instead of doing that, however, we have undertaken to do that which we have no power to do. We are trying to create a vacancy and still leave the Justice in office.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Suppose, during the session of Congress the President should nominate a man for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and send his name to the Senate, and he should be confirmed and take the oath of office. We should have 10 judges of the Supreme Court, should we not?

Mr. BORAH. We should.

Mr. ASHURST. That is all I contend, and all anybody contends. There is no real difference between the Senator from Idaho and myself.

Mr. BORAH. We should have a Supreme Court of one Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices. That is what the statute provides. The statute today says that the Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices. We have no power to appoint for any other than those positions provided for by the statute; but if the President should nominate a man and send up his name——

Mr. ASHURST. He would be a de-facto judge.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not think so. I do not think it would make a man a de-facto officer to nominate him for a position which did not exist.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. All right. The Senator says a man cannot be made a de-facto judge in the circumstances that have been stated. Suppose the President, after the adjournment of this session, during the recess, should nominate a Justice, and he should take the oath of office, and on what would otherwise be a 4-to-4 decision this temporary Justice, or Justice nominated during the recess, should cast the deciding vote. The able Senator knows that that would be a valid declaration, even though the Justice should not be thereafter confirmed.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Arizona is trying to make the Senator from Idaho know things which he does not know.

Mr. ASHURST. I cannot do that. The Senator from Idaho knows more than I do, to begin with.

Mr. BORAH. Let me say to the Senator that if there were in fact a vacancy, and the President of the United States should fill that vacancy during the recess, I concede that the man would be a de-facto judge; but what I am saying is that there is no vacancy, and a man cannot be made a de-facto judge by appointing him to an office which does not exist. Does not the Senator see the distinction?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I am much interested in the Senator's remarks. The point I am about to mention may have been covered, but I wish to have the Senator's view upon it.

I think there would be no disagreement with the main premise of the Senator from Idaho that Justice Van Devanter is still a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I do not think there can be any doubt about that. In fact, I think the Supreme Court in one case has held, in the case of a district court judge, that he still remained a judge; and in another case the Supreme Court refused to grant a writ of certiorari, which would have reviewed that decision. So it must be taken that the Supreme Court has passed upon the question.

Is it not a permissible view, however—and I submit it to the Senator without having previously explored it—that when the Congress passed the act authorizing the retirement of a Justice of the Supreme Court, and authorizing the President to appoint a successor, by necessary implication the Congress increased the number of Justices of the Supreme Court from 9 to 10, or increased the number of Associate Justices from 8 to 9, and that by necessary implication the Congress has given the Executive the power to make an additional appointment? It is not expressly so stated in the act, and of course I understand that the Senator would not favor construction of an act by invoking the doctrine of implication; but it seems to me that of necessity what we have done is to increase the number of Justices of the Supreme Court by each retirement under the terms of the act.

I should like to have the Senator's view on that question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should entertain great doubt whether we could, by implication, increase the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States. We did not undertake to do so. We did not assume to do so. What we did was to permit a Justice to retire subject to the call of the Chief Justice, thereby retaining the position of a Justice of the Supreme Court. We might have gone further, possibly, and said that the Court thereafter should consist of 10 members, and that the retiring Justice should not be called upon thereafter to discharge the duties of a Justice. It might be possible that we could do such a thing; but why do that? Why go about it in that way?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. All in the world we need to do is to pass a law providing that upon the resignation of a Justice of the Supreme Court he shall be allowed, during his lifetime, the salary which he theretofore enjoyed. That is all there is to it. If he does not want to resign, let him do his work. If he does resign, give him his pay. Let us have it settled, plain, clear-cut. Let us not have a man wabbling between a justiceship of the Supreme Court and the duties of a circuit judge, and nobody knowing what his duties are except as the Chief Justice assigns him.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it occurs to me that although we might provide for the resignation of a Justice and his salary thereafter, nevertheless it would be within the power of subsequent Congresses to reduce his salary after he had actually resigned; and I presume the thought of permitting a judge to retire came about in order to forestall any congressional action in reducing or increasing or changing or modifying his salary.

Mr. ASHURST. That is precisely it.

Mr. BORAH. I know; but there is no vested right on the part of any man in the world to draw a salary, and he cannot trade off an office for a vested right, because he has no vested right to hold the office.

Mr. GEORGE. While the Senator is correct in that, I think as long as a man remains a Justice of the Supreme Court Congress as least regards his salary as fixed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Idaho is correct in his contention that Justice Van Devanter is still a member of the Supreme Court, there might be difficulty, if the Constitution itself fixed the number of Supreme Court Justices at 9, in reaching the conclusion that by an act of Congress we might by implication have increased it to 10. Inasmuch, however, as the size of the Court is subject to congressional regulation, and if we may assume that Justice Van Devanter is still technically a Justice of the Supreme Court—though he may be regarded as a Justice emeritus, or something of the sort—I think there is much force in the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] that by implication, if not automatically, we have increased the membership of the Court from 9 to 10.

Mr. BORAH. I think the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] desired to interrupt.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think I understand the position which he takes, and there is logic behind the position. If the law provides that the Supreme Court shall consist of one Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices, and if that law has not been amended or modified, then, of course, it would not be possible for me to answer the argument which has been advanced by the Senator from Idaho. But would not this follow from the interpretation which the Senator places upon it? There are six Justices who are eligible to retire. Congress has said they may retire, so there can be no odium attached to them if they quit work. Following that a step further, Congress has said that it takes six members of the Supreme Court to constitute a quorum. We have said six may retire, which leaves only three, which is not a quorum. So if one follows the argument of the distinguished Senator from Idaho, it amounts to the assertion that Congress has already abolished the Supreme Court, and that we have been debating questions which are not pertinent.

If the position of the Senator from Idaho is sound, let me ask him this question: If a Justice will not resign, and we cannot make him do so, and if Congress authorizes him to retire and he still remains a Justice, is there any way to have a Supreme Court which will function properly other than by increasing the number of Justices?

Mr. BORAH. I am not sure I understand the proposition. I start out with this: That whether we like it or not, whether we would have made the Constitution differently or not, the Constitution provides that the Justices of the Supreme Court shall remain on that bench during good behavior.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. That is fundamental. There is no way to get them off that bench so long as they observe the rules of good behavior.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. BORAH. What we have undertaken to do is to provide a retirement provision. I say that that does not amount to taking a judge off the Supreme Court.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with that.

Mr. BORAH. Then he is on the Supreme Court.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. And we have a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices there, and the President has no vacancy to fill.

Mr. LOGAN. That is where I agree with the Senator from Georgia rather than with the Senator from Idaho. We have done this already, and it has been complained about so much by the people and in the Senate; we have, under the act of Congress, a Supreme Court, not of a fixed number of 9, but a Supreme Court which may vary anywhere between 6 and 18 members, under chapter 21 of the laws of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress. It provides that when one of the Justices retires the President shall appoint a successor. By implication, according to my interpretation of the law, that amends section 203 of the statute, or whatever section it is, providing that the Supreme Court shall consist of one Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the escape from the position is that we have now increased the Supreme Court to 10. Nobody supposed we were undertaking to do any such thing, and I venture to say that the President of the United States is appointing upon the theory that the Court still consists of nine, and I venture to say that the Attorney General is making his recommendation upon the theory that the Court still consists of nine.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not intend to interrupt the speech of the Senator at all, but I have something which fits it so perfectly that I ask his indulgence to insert it at this point. It is the current, practical construction placed upon this matter by the Justice involved, Mr. Justice Van Devanter. In his retirement he stated:

> I desire to avail myself of the • • • judicial service specified in the act of March 1, 1937.

Of course he said other things, too, but he recognized that he was still a Justice, and he desired to avail himself of the judicial service specified in the act.

If the Senator will permit, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a copy of the letter of resignation of Justice Van Devanter and a copy of the acceptance by the President, which purport to have been published in the New York Times of May 19, 1937.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Having held my commission as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and served in that Court for 26 years, and having come to be 78 years of age, I desire to avail myself of the rights, privileges, and judicial service specified in the act of March 1, 1937, entitled "An act to provide for retirement of Justices of the Supreme Court", and to that end I hereby retire from regular active service on the bench—this retirement to be effective on and after the 2d day of June 1937, that being the day next following the adjournment of the present term of the Court.

I have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully yours,

WILLIS VAN DEVANTER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 18, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER: I have received your letter of this morning, telling me that you are retiring from regular active service on the bench on June 2, 1937.

May I as one who has had the privilege of knowing you for many years extend to you every good wish.

Before you leave Washington for the summer it would give me great personal pleasure if you would come in to see me.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. Does the Senator from Idaho contend that the status of the judges of the inferior courts established by the Congress is any different from that of the Justices of the Supreme Court?

Mr. BORAH. No; if I understand the Senator's question on the fundamental proposition, those on the lower courts are there during good behavior, the same as those on the Supreme Bench.

Mr. DIETERICH. The same as those on the Supreme Court?

Mr. BORAH. I suppose so. The Constitution so provides.

Mr. DIETERICH. Will the Senator pardon me while I read that section of the Constitution, so that we may have a clear idea of it?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but I reread it this morning.

Mr. DIETERICH. It provides:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services, a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

If the contention of the Senator from Idaho is correct, then every time there has been a retirement under the act permitting judges of the circuit court and district courts to retire—and I understand this statute is identical as to them, and gives them the same privilege—the President, or the appointive power of the Senate, have violated the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we are not passing upon what this and that branch of Government has done, but during my brief stay in the Senate of the United States I have always taken the position that a Federal judge could not be gotten out of his position except through impeachment or by his resignation, and when the different measures relating to that subject have come before the Committee on the Judiciary I have urged that view. I am presenting it today for the consideration of the Senate. Of course, I realize my fallibility with reference to all these questions, but I will ask the Senator from Illinois, and I will ask all other lawyers here, what they are to do with that provision of the Constitution which provides that these judges shall remain in their places during good behavior? What are they to do with that?

Mr. DIETERICH. Make them amenable to the act of Congress which created the courts and provided that judges should be appointed.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, in taking that position the Senator utterly disregards the Constitution. He treats the Constitution as no higher than a statute. He assumes that when the Constitution provides that they shall remain in their places during good behavior we may take them off the bench at will. I do not pause to argue that.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho misunderstands my position and rather states a position which I do not occupy. If the Congress has a right to create inferior courts and fix the number of judges, as they have done, then any act of Congress dealing with that is certainly within the constitutional right of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator a question. When the Constitution provides that Congress shall create these courts, then the Constitution itself says, and does not leave it to the Congress, that the judges of those courts which we create shall remain in their positions during good behavior. It is not a statutory provision; it is a constitutional provision.

Mr. DIETERICH. That is true, and we are not removing them; we are not removing a single judge, but we are providing for an active court when a judge is incapacitated, or when he has reached the age of retirement.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator then admits, I suppose, what I have been contending for.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I do not want to get into a controversy with the learned Senator from Idaho, but I do not admit his contention to be sound.

Mr. BORAH. I say that Justice Van Devanter is still a member of the Supreme Court. That is what the Senator says, so we have no difference.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, that is also true of every justice of the circuit court and every justice of the district court who has taken advantage of the act and retired, and for whom there has been a successor appointed to perform the duties of his office. They stand in the same position, and I do not believe that, if that was error, we would have waited until this late day to discover it. A question certainly would have been raised before.

Mr. BORAH. It has been raised before. Just a word, now, with reference to another point, and I will be very brief.

Assuming that there is a vacancy which must be filled, section 2 of article 2 of the Constitution among other things provides, regarding the President:

> He shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for.

That clause in the Constitution provides for the general power of appointment. It assumes that the appointment takes place in cooperation with the Senate of the United States, which is in session and ready to confirm. But the framers of the Constitution had to provide for another situation, namely, when the Senate was not in session, when a vacancy would occur during a recess; and the framers provided for it in very plain terms. They said:

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate.

When did Mr. Justice Van Devanter's vacancy happen? It happened during the session of the Senate. That is when it transpired. To happen is to take place. To happen is for something to take place unexpectedly; and this vacancy happened or took place while the Senate was in session. That is one of the things which is provided for in the general appointing power which I previously read. The clause I have just read provides for an instance which takes place after the Senate has departed and when there is a recess.

I understand that the able Attorney General has rendered an opinion to the effect that the President may appoint during the recess of the Senate. Mr. President, I know there are precedents for that contention. I have not seen the Attorney General's argument, and I do not know upon what he bases it; but he can, beginning back with the great William Wirt, find precedents to the effect that the President may appoint during the recess although the vacancy occurred before the recess took place. Mr. Wirt, as I recall, construed "happen during the recess" to mean to continue to exist during the recess, and thereby got around what seems to me the perfectly plain provision of the Constitution.

To happen is to take place—to take place, as I said, unexpectedly. Therefore, when the Senate is gone, if a vacancy takes place, the President may fill the vacancy. The commission of the appointee expires with the end of the recess, which again shows that the framers had in mind nothing more than taking care of a recess situation.

Mr. President, it cannot be said that a thing has happened during a recess which was complete, finished, before the recess began. So I take the position that if there is a vacancy, it must either be filled during this session or filled when the Senate comes back in January. If Justice Van Devanter had retired after we had left the city or had adjourned, undoubtedly the President could have filled the vacancy. I repeat, that of course there are plenty of precedents. When those precedents are studied, however, so much politics will be found connected with the establishment of the precedents that one hesitates to accept the precedents in place of the plain, simple, unmistakable language of the Constitution.

Mr. WALSH obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WALSH. Unless the Senator from California desires to reply to the Senator from Idaho, or to comment upon the observations made by the Senator from Idaho, I should like to proceed with the discussion of the pending legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I should like to occupy just a few minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I never participate here in a legal argument. I think, first, that probably I am ill-fitted to do so, and, secondly, I think I realize the inutility of anyone participating here in an argument of the law. However, there is one case which it seems to me conclusively bears out the contention of the Senator from Idaho and to him and my colleagues I cite it. That is the case of Booth against United States, decided not so long ago, in Two Hundred and Ninety-first United States Reports, page 339. In that case it was held distinctly that a retiring judge does not lose his status as a judge, but continues to hold during good behavior—that is, during life—and hence his retirement allowance cannot be diminished by the Congress either by direct diminution or by levy of an income tax thereon.

The Booth case involved an act of Congress which had attempted to decrease the allowance of retired judges. Judge Booth, a circuit judge, and Judge Amidon, district judge, who had retired under the above-mentioned act of February 25, 1919, but had not resigned, brought suit to recover the amounts of which they had been deprived by the act of Congress. The judges claimed that, despite their retirement, they still held office as circuit judge and district judge, respectively, and that the provision of section 1 of article 3 of the Constitution forbade decrease of their compensation. The Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision—not 6 to 3, nor 5 to 4, nor 7 to 1, but in a unanimous decision—upheld the contention of the judges. The case decided that neither of the judges by retiring without resigning have vacated office or ceased to be a judge, and in consequence the compensation of each judge was protected against diminution by section 1.

I have before me a long quotation from the case, but it suffices to say that in the case of Mr. Justice Van Devanter, when he retired, stating with meticulous care why he retired, and under what law he retired and left the Supreme Court Bench, he did not cease to be a Supreme Court Justice, and that is the argument, as I understand it, that is made by the Senator from Idaho.

I am not going to take time by saying what route may be pursued to accomplish the result that is sought by the Senate or by the Congress of the United States in selecting his successor, but suffice it to say that we do it in the teeth of a decision of the United States Supreme Court that was unanimous in a case decided a very few years ago, saying that a judge who retired had not ceased to be a judge by virtue of retiring.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The discussion which has occurred today is of deep interest and concern to the Congress of the United States, and the existence of this very question that has been argued and discussed in the Senate today is one of the reasons which prompted the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and me to introduce a resolution the other day providing for a complete investigation and study of this and all other questions relating to the Federal judicial system. The argument made by the Senator from Idaho presents clearly to me one of the defects arising out of the life-tenure clause.

I have today presented a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee on the resolution to which I have referred, and I trust the Senate will shortly have the opportunity to debate it, and that a study may be made of it in the meanwhile.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask the Senator to yield, and I also ask the indulgence of the Chair in order that I may have the opportunity to offer some amendments to the amendment to the bill in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee, because the amendments I desire to offer embody suggestions made by various Senators yesterday, and in a way will serve to perfect the bill, so far as I, as the introducer of the measure, would like to see it perfected.

May I have permission of the Senate to do that, if the Senator from Massachusetts will yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. WALSH. The difficulty is, I will say in answer to the Senator from New York, that I desire to discuss briefly the bill itself, and action on his amendments would require perhaps from half to three-quarters of an hour, and I would be obliged to delay making my remarks for that length of time.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator does not desire to yield, very well.

Mr. WALSH. If there were some assurance that the amendments would be acted upon without discussion, I should be willing to yield to the Senator for the purpose of presenting the amendments, but I cannot conceive that 10 or 15 amendments could be disposed of in less than half or three-quarters of an hour, and meanwhile I should be obliged to defer my discussion of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendments in question were practically agreed upon during the discussion yesterday, and in view of that fact I thought that the Senator would perhaps prefer to make his remarks based upon the amendments which would be included in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will offer the amendments and no Senator will ask questions concerning the amendments I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. KING. Of course, Mr. President, that could not occur.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, it cannot be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that several of the Senators who engaged in the discussion yesterday and in response to whose questions the amendments were drawn, are absent now at luncheon. I should like to suggest to the Senator that he wait until about half past 1 or a quarter to 2 in order that those Senators may return to the Senate Chamber. Probably then we shall be able to act upon a number of amendments without duplication of discussion. I have no desire to divert the Senator from what he wishes to do, but I believe it will be helpful to the necessary action upon the amendments if the Senator will delay until the Senators I referred to have returned to the Senate Chamber.

Mr. WALSH. I want my position to be entirely clear. I would gladly and cheerfully yield to the Senator from New York if I had some assurance that there would be no debate on the various amendments he has in mind.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator knows very well that debate will be had on the amendments.

Mr. WALSH. Of course there will be.

Mr. President, I was chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor last year when extensive hearings were held on a bill similar in character to the one now pending. This year, because of the unfortunate illness of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], it fell to my lot to preside over the hearings on the pending bill, which were also of several days' duration. I rise now not merely for the purpose of seeking to influence the Members of the Senate in favor of this proposed legislation but rather to perform what I think is a very important duty for a member of an important committee dealing with an important bill, namely, to put in the RECORD the viewpoint of the committee and the viewpoint of at least some Members of the Senate with respect to certain features of the authority and power granted by the bill. I also feel that this occasion ought not to be permitted to pass without a brief review of what has been done by way of providing low-cost houses for people with low incomes and without discussing what has and can be done in the way of abolishing slums.

Mr. President, first and foremost, I wish to impress upon the Senate the fact that there is no need whatever of Federal legislation in order to abolish any slums or slum dwellings. There is ample authority in every State in the Union to enable it to proceed with the abolition of all slums within the area of any of its municipalities or any of its urban sections. Indeed, so far has State legislation gone in this direction, that in the State of New York there is a law which gives the housing authority power to enter into a dwelling that is insanitary and unsafe and to repair and modernize it, and retain a lien on the property for the money thus expended. I cite this for the purpose of indicating, before we come to the question of what the Federal Government ought to do, that if there is the disposition and the will to abolish slums, it can be done by local authorities.

In my own State of Massachusetts and in the city of Boston, there has been during recent years much done looking to demolishing the slums. They have the authority there as elsewhere to order the destruction of any insanitary, unsafe, unhealthy house or dwelling.

Many Senators no doubt noticed the picture in a morning newspaper and the account of a very shocking accident that happened in the city of New York yesterday, involving two young girls, who, while passing from one tenement house to another, and walking over a screen which was weak and unsafe, fell into a pit, both being killed. That indicates that an unsafe condition existed which the public authorities, in all probability, had not taken steps to remove.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it not possible that there was a failure on the part of the tenement-house inspectors to do their part to see that the premises were safe?

Mr. WALSH. That is quite possible.

Mr. President, I am discussing this matter for the purpose of focusing the attention of the Congress upon what may be done without Federal aid and assistance, and also to indicate what assistance the Federal Government ought to give and what assistance is necessary to be given in order to help slum clearance.

I wish to repeat that there has been very little done in this country in the way of abolition of slums, either by private authority or by public authority. I will come to the reasons shortly why I think so little has been done and why the powers already possessed by local authorities have not been exercised. In my humble opinion, they have not been exercised partly because many of the owners of these slums are wealthy property owners who pay taxes to the city and have power to prevent the tenement authorities or other authorities, such as those concerned with health, actually condemning their properties.

There is not a slum in the city of Washington out of which the proper authority in this city could not tomorrow order the tenants. There is not an unsafe, insanitary dwelling that cannot be closed. An unsafe, insanitary dwelling is as much a public nuisance as is an open sewer. Does not the Senator from New York agree with that statement?

Mr. COPELAND. I do agree with it, and, if the Senator will permit me to do so, I should like to add that one reason why there has been hesitation on the part of authorities in some cities actually to close and eliminate slum areas is that there has been no other place to which to locate the people who reside in such areas.

Mr. WALSH. I am coming to that. The Senator has put his finger upon and calls attention to the relationship of this problem to the Federal Government. The claim is made by the local authorities that they have no place to which to locate slum dwellers if they destroy the slums, and that they have not the money with which to provide proper housing facilities for those who now dwell in the slums.

The mayor of the city of New York emphatically so asserted before the committee, as did the mayors of many other cities and other officials of municipal and State governments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not wish to interrupt the able address of the Senator from Massachusetts, but it seems to me that New York City, with its great wealth, and New York State with its still greater wealth, the city alone paying 25 percent of all Federal taxes, ought to have no difficulty whatever, if it so desires, in obtaining credit, by the issuance of bonds or otherwise, and solving the housing problem which it has put at the door of the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH. I am impressed with the statement made by the Senator from Utah, and with it I am somewhat in sympathy. The assertion of municipal officials is that their power of levying taxes is limited largely to real estate, and they have not the means and the sources of income sufficient to undertake the debt that would necessarily be incurred by an effort to replace the present slum dwellings with proper houses for the low-income tenants of New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree with what the Senator from Utah has said. I have long believed that there was wealth enough in the city of New York to do a great many things that are not being done, and which should be done, but with regard to housing the Senator from Utah must remember that whatever authority the municipal government in New York City has is derived from the State, from the legislature; and the difficulty the city finds itself in very frequently in undertaking humane and forward-looking projects is the lack of authority due to failure to get legislation from the State legislature.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as the able junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has pointed out again and again in the discussion of this subject, there can be no question about the social-welfare value of the abolition of slums. I am not going to take any time to discuss that phase of the matter. Neither can there be any question about the economic-recovery factor in connection with the abolition of slums. There can be no question whatever that the governments of Europe, which for more than 80 years have been dealing with this problem, have considered it a serious problem and one of national moment and national consequence.

The very fact that our local authorities have not been in a position to engage in this work, have not had the funds with which to replace in proper surroundings the tenants ousted from the slums of the crowded cities, does not relieve the Federal Government, in my opinion, of the obligation of stimulating, encouraging, and promoting the abolition of slums.

Before I discuss the bill I wish to point out what has been done by private authorities in this country to bring about the abolition of slums, or, at least, to provide comfortable housing for persons with low incomes. I wish also to point out some successes that have been attained by activities of the Federal Government in the housing field.

We have now at least five Federal agencies in the housing field, engaging in one aspect or another. I wish to point out what to me is the most striking example that has come to my attention in the study of this question. I refer to what has been done by the Alley Authority in the District of Columbia. I should like to tell that story briefly, as the photographs hanging on the wall of the Senate Chamber refer to that activity.

Only a few years ago—I think 3 years ago—the President set up, under the discretionary power he had under the emergency relief appropriation, what is known as the District of Columbia Alley Authority for the purpose of abolishing slums in the alleys of the District of Columbia.

They have been given two grants of money amounting to $850,000. The pictures which I have had placed on the wall tell the story of the abolishment of slums in the alleys of the District of Columbia, the remodeling of some of the old buildings, the construction of new buildings, and the retention of some of the land which was purchased and from which the buildings were removed, which was converted into auto-parking spaces and income thereby obtained. The dwellings, averaging four rooms, are rented at a rental of between $13.50 and $15.50 a month to the people who formerly lived in the alley slums.

Now, this is the startling fact. If that Alley Authority liquidated tomorrow, there would not be one cent of loss to the Federal Government. They could liquidate for something in excess of the amount of money which was granted to them.

Why am I referring to this undertaking? It is because I want the power of the board directed as far as humanly possible to the actual problem of slum clearance. I want the houses built to be of that modest character which is illustrated by the pictures on the wall to which I have just referred, and to avoid what has been done in some of the Federal housing activities, namely, building better homes for people of low income, so-called, that any moderately comfortable workingman in America can afford. Not that I would deny all wage earners the best kind of houses possible, but I do not want to discourage or put at a disadvantage the owners of small homes.

I shall not take the time to explain the pictures further, but they are very illuminating. Sometimes the alley property was taken and made use of by the authorities for parking cars, thus proving a profitable investment; sometimes for garages; sometimes for playground purposes. It has not been a very heavy undertaking, only $850,000, but it has been remarkably encouraging, and is an evidence of what can be done, what helpful work in this direction can be done for the people of any city.

So much for the only public activity which has been called to my attention that has been purely slum clearance. I think the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] will agree with me that some real slum clearance, with the detail of which I am not familiar, has been done on the part of Mr. Post in New York. Am I correct?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and I think there is one in Georgia and one in Florida which have reached the low-income group.

Mr. WALSH. Was that by Federal authority?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Under which department?

Mr. WAGNER. The Housing Division of the Public Works Administration.

Mr. WALSH. In these limited cases a slum-clearance project was involved, as well as the construction of housing facilities for the persons who lived in the slums.

Concerning what I have said about how little we have touched the problem, I think the junior Senator from New York will agree with me that there are two groups, as I discern from the hearings, of well-intentioned, public-spirited, patriotic, deeply interested groups in this problem, who have two distinct points of view. One emphasized the point of view of building houses for people of low incomes. That group think in terms of building houses. That is commendable.

The other group, unfortunately small in number and not so vocal, say, "Slum clearance! Slum clearance! Slum clearance!" That is what they want. They say the primary object of any movement of this kind is slum clearance, and in conjunction with this should be houses for rehousing those dehoused. I am in particular sympathy with the objectives of that group.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wish to suggest that the housing division of the Public Works Administration carried on two projects in Georgia and did a very good job, so far as construction of units was concerned.

Mr. WALSH. As a physical property?

Mr. GEORGE. As a physical property, yes; but I think it is true—in fact, I know it to be true—that in order to bring each unit within the reach of people of low incomes there had to be a voluntary writing off or reduction under the actual cost of the construction of the buildings.

The other was a housing project undertaken for the colored people of the city of Atlanta. I am not sure whether they wrote down the value of the property in order to bring it within the reach of people of low incomes. In the main housing project carried on by Mr. Ickes the physical construction was most excellent, but had to be written down considerably in order to bring it within the reach of the people of low income.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator if I am stating correctly the situation in regard to that and many other undertakings by the Housing Division in the Interior Department? Money was assigned for housing projects during the depression, in part for the purpose of increasing employment in the building crafts. When it came time to rent the property, the Comptroller General ruled that no authority was possessed by the Secretary of the Interior to rent the property for less than what would be a reasonable return on the investment by the Federal Government.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. WALSH. Thereafter the Senator and others, in order to prevent the properties remaining vacant because of the high rentals to be charged, introduced a bill giving authority to rent the property on the basis of 40 percent of the capital cost, the Federal Government having made a grant of that amount, or the capital invested for the purpose of having low rentals.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is quite right. I introduced the bill myself and the Senator was one of the conferees when the bill was in conference between the two Houses.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with what the Senator from Georgia has said about projects in Georgia which were constructed by the Public Works Administration, I happen to have here a table showing that for the Techwood Homes in Atlanta the shelter rent per room is $5.52; heat and water, 63 cents; making a total of $6.15 per room. For the University Homes the shelter rent is $5.11 plus 54 cents for heat and water, making $5.65 per room. The average annual income of the persons who have been accepted as tenants in the Techwood Homes is $1,130 and in the University Homes is $917.

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased to have that information. In connection with that information I am going to turn at once to money privately invested in projects, where the rents are less than on these Government-financed projects.

Mr. President, I call attention, first of all, to a card with several photographs of single dwellings upon it, furnished me by request by the Federal Housing Administration that insures mortgages on private houses. The central picture shows the complete lay-out and the large number of single dwellings that were built in that locality by private capital. I read the description of the properties on this chart:

This development contains a total of 202 dwelling units. The average rent is $7.65 per room per month, with 4-, 5-, and 6-room houses. The total capitalization of the project is $1,012,000, or an average of $5,000 per family. The insured mortgage is $800,000.

In this case private capital applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan. They obtained the loan, and the result is this development. The Federal Housing Administration insured it without its costing the Federal Government a single, solitary cent. Here is a private enterprise, with private money invested, conducted and carried on profitably by a private concern with low rentals.

I will give the Senate one illustration better than that; and in this connection I cannot praise too highly the wonderful contribution made by the isurance provisions of the law permitting the Federal Housing Administration to insure mortgages upon properties of individuals and groups of individuals and families. Do Senators know that the Federal Housing Administration has insured mortgages in amount of $200,000 to 100,000 individuals who each have only a single home, with an income of less than $2,500 per year? We shall have to be careful, or under this measure we shall be building better houses than these people have who are paying for their own properties and asking only the aid of the provision of our law for Government insurance of the mortgages.

One of these projects is across the river in Virginia, a magnificent development. The other is right at the end of Sixteenth Street, here in the city of Washington; but those are expensive houses for the moderate-income groups. I want to call attention to these where the rent is low. I call attention to this one:

Here is a development at Crossett, Ark. This development provides housing for 125 white families and 74 Negro families in detached frame houses, ranging in size from three to six rooms. The average rent is $4.70 per room per month, or $16.70 per house, for white persons. The average rent is $3.18 per room per month for Negroes. The project is capitalized at $440,000, or an average of approximately $2,200 a family. The first mortgage insured by the Federal Housing Administration was $320,000.

There is a project that does not cost the Federal Government one dollar, that will never have any subsidies, where private investment has built comfortable private homes, with a mortgage granted by either the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or some bank or some private concern, but insured by the Federal Housing Administration to 85 percent of the value of the project.

Here is another project that I want to put in the RECORD, because what I am trying to develop here is that though I favor the Federal Government undertaking this work, I am disturbed and troubled at the tendencies I have seen to build expensive and unnecessarily elaborate dwellings.

I take the position that the Federal Government has no authority whatever to take 200 families in any community, unless they come from the slums and have the lowest incomes in the city, and put them in Government-erected homes for 50 percent of the normal rent a private enterprise or private owner would have to charge. If we are going into that business, I want all families to have that advantage and that subsidy; and that would mean, if I understand anything, that we should be right on the road to socialism and ultimately have complete Government ownership of all private dwelling property.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. So, I am concerned in this bill, to limit it to what is commendable, what is defensible, what is legal in my opinion, holding it down to nothing but what has been done in England and other countries—the abolition of slums first, and the rehousing of people if there are not existing facilities for them.

I go further than that. I think we ought to remodel a lot of the slums. This alley project shows the remodeling of buildings; not all the buildings that were taken over were destroyed, but in many cases they were remodeled. If we do that, if we proceed to remodel existing slums, we shall be doing two things at once—providing more housing by remodeling present homes and building new ones.

I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the Senator prepared to offer some amendments to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I am.

Now I wish to present one more of these developments in my own State of Massachusetts. This is very interesting.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator in his presentation. As has been so often stated, he and I are together in this proposition; but to insure absolutely that none but the lowest-income group will secure occupancy of these homes I may say to the Senator that I am going to offer another amendment in which I shall provide that the occupancy shall be confined to those who are in the lowest-income group. In other words, each area will be limited to the lowest-income group. We cannot very well go below that. I mean, that is absolute assurance.

Mr. WALSH. That will help.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that in substance the amendment that the Senator from Massachusetts is going to offer?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; it is along the same line.

Now, let us come to this development at Chicopee Falls, Mass. I think this will be a revelation to Senators. It was to me. Nothing has impressed me more of the fine possibilities than this alley development without costing the Federal Government anything, and these developments by private initiative that do not cost the Federal Government a single cent and provide low rents.

After the Senator from Georgia took his seat, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky referred to the Georgia development and gave us the rentals of the property there, where there has been a 40-percent grant on the capital; and yet, even with that concession, the rents are higher than in the private developments to which I have referred.

This chart shows the Chicopee Falls Housing Corporation development. This project involves the modernization and improvement of 216 dwelling units. Chicopee Falls is situated in the western part of Massachusetts, in the city of Chicopee, a city of about 40,000 people. Chicopee Falls is distinctly and strictly a manufacturing section of that city. There probably is not a person, outside of the local merchants, who lives at Chicopee Falls, who does not work in one of the mills in that locality. It is a simon-pure industrial center, and the persons who occupy these homes, therefore, would be of that class only.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, is this a governmental authority?

Mr. WALSH. No; this is a private investment, private work, done with private funds. The project involves the modernization and improvement of 216 dwelling houses. The project is sponsored by the Massachusetts State Housing Board. The Massachusetts State Housing Board examined it, approved it, said it was desirable, and encouraged these private investors to put their money into it. The limited-dividend corporation has been organized by the Chicopee Falls Manufacturing Co., a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson, surgical manufacturers. The remodeled properties will furnish accommodations for 216 families, and a large lodging house with 27 rooms in addition. The basic rent will be $4 per room per month, or an average of $14.54 per family. The cost of remodeling the properties is estimated at approximately $1,000 per dwelling unit provided by the operation.

The same families that were living in these properties before modernization will be rehoused with modern housing facilities. The insured mortgage covering the property is for $190,000.

Just look at this chart and see how presentable and how attractive those homes are at that low rent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Some years ago I was a member of the World Housing Conference in London. The delegates went out to visit various garden cities in England, where manufacturing enterprises would establish communities and there erect housing such as the Senator has shown for the use of the employees, and put the rents on such a reasonable basis that they would be within the reach of those who were engaged in the various industries.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I know that in my own State, through the refinancing which was obtained, the insurance of the houses, a large number of houses were constructed by private persons at very low cost. If the Government had constructed the houses to which I am now referring, I am sure the cost would have been perhaps 25 to 50 percent, if not more, higher than it was.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he passes on from the very interesting exhibit to which he has just referred?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I think everybody is agreed that the great danger of any housing movement is that instead of benefiting the persons who are most in need of assistance, the next most needy class will move back into the new construction.

I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he knows what method was taken in the particular case to which he has just referred to see that the same families were allowed to occupy the new houses. In other words, when there is demolition, there must be some families moved out, and I should like to know, if possible, in order that the Government may employ the same method, just what method was followed to insure that the same families or the same class of families would be allowed to occupy the dwellings. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I wanted to get the information.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has asked a very important question, and at an appropriate time. Let me read the questions and answers in an interview I had with Mr. John Ihlder, the executive authority of the Alley Authority here in Washington, because this would answer the question the Senator had asked. Mr. Ihlder said:

The primary purpose of our Authority is to get rid of slums and we substitute for those dwellings demolished those things that belong in that neighborhood, such as repair shops, automobile parking lots, garages, etc. We must, however, assure the rehousing of those whom we de-house. So far as private houses are available they are used and we build only when necessary in order to provide decent shelter and prevent a housing shortage. We have completed two housing developments and have two more under construction.

The Hopkins Place development is on L Street between Twelfth and Thirteenth Streets SE., which is designed for the poorest people. In building new houses or apartments you must keep two things in mind, keep it as inexpensive as possible and fix it to the character of the neighborhood. The Hopkins Place had both these ideas carried out. It typifies the least Washington would accept as proper housing. All the occupants are colored.

Q. (By Senator WALSH). What rents do they pay?

A. Differerent rents for reconditioned houses and new houses. A four-room, one-family, reconditioned brick house rents from $13.50 to $15.50 per month, while the new houses rent from $25 to $27.50 per month, but they have larger rooms, complete bathrooms, good kitchen equipment and, as far as I know, are the lowest rentals in Washington. That rent includes all operating, maintenance, repairs, taxes (which we cannot pay), and insurance.

Q. In these two new building or housing projects, where is the title?

A. In the Federal Government with the Alley Dwelling Authority acting as agent.

Q. You state your Authority has built houses for the poor people of the District. What is their incomes?

A. Among our tenants we have four on relief, one P. W. A., one getting old-age assistance. This is the lowest level of income.

Q. For each dwelling you reconditioned or built new, have you destroyed an unsafe or insanitary slum house?

A. We have done more than that. We have destroyed many more than we built. As I said, we have availed ourselves of vacancies in private houses and built only where necessary. We should build more right now but our funds are exhausted.

By the way, he told me that under the bill as originally drafted, not under the amendment offered, he never could get any of the money provided for in this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point? I wish to speak of the fact that it is necessary to have an amendment to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Let me finish this, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Q. What rents had these people been paying in the alley houses?

A. Alley rentals are about $11.50, average.

Q. How many of these alley houses have you demolished?

A. We have eliminated approximately 130 to 150 slum houses.

This is a remarkable record, that all this was done without costing a dollar. We gave them the use of money to start with, but the total of their assets now is equal to what we gave them originally.

Question. And how have you taken care of these people?

Answer. In Hopkins Place we have 24 one-family dwellings. In the W Street apartment we have 31 apartments. We have now under construction another apartment house of 24 apartments and another 1-family house development of 16 houses.

Question. Am I correct in my understanding that all this is done without any subsidy for rent?

Answer. That is correct.

Question. What is the value of the property that has come into the Federal Government when compared with your appropriation?

Of course, no profit is expected on the low-rent houses.

Answer. That is a matter of estimate until we sell. Our objective is that our whole program shall end with a credit balance or at least break even, but we now look forward to making a profit. Of course, no profit is expected on the low-rent houses.

Question. If you were to liquidate today——

Answer. The present assets and cash total more than $850,000. The income today practically equals our operating expenses.

There is no charge even for operating.

May I state here further that of the 11 reconditioned houses, 9 are occupied by the former tenants who occupied the houses at the time we acquired title to them.

I trust we will not be looked upon with suspicion by making these observations and by suggestions that may strengthen the bill. The local authorities, who wrote the bill, in large part, and who deserve great credit for promoting the legislation, are naturally more concerned about the local point of view than the Federal financial point of view. I am concerned about both the Federal point of view and the local activities to provide proper housing facilities.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Perhaps I should wait until later. I did not know what the Senator meant by referring to some who were not much interested in slum clearance.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps I did not express myself accurately. I have attended the hearings, and I have not had the partisan point of view of the Senator from New York, perhaps; the Senator drafted the bill, he introduced it, and he has been deeply interested in the subject and has worked earnestly for it, and I cannot compliment him enough for his effort. But I sat in the hearings more or less saying to myself, "I am a Federal officer. Where can I strengthen this bill? How can I prevent what I have seen in the Public Works Administration, where I have seen 40-percent grants made, where I have seen certain limited numbers given a rent subsidy of approximately 50 percent and no slums removed? What can be done to make this bill what the Senator from New York and I want it to be, a slum clearance bill, rather than a general housing bill?"

Mr. WAGNER. I think that before we are through we will have such a bill.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure we will.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator's presentation is so illuminating that we ought to have a quorum. May I suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think it is necessary. Why am I making this presentation? It will not affect action on the bill. I am going to support the bill. I am for the bill. I think that in the case of a bill of this magnitude and importance, when the record is made, it may be helpful to the board in understanding how much pressure there was and with what earnestness some of us in the Congress desired to have them pursue the objective which I hope they will pursue, namely, real slum clearance. That is my purpose. Otherwise I should take my seat and remain silent. But I hope I am making a contribution which will be of service when the law is in operation by calling attention to these things.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator two or three questions in order to elicit information as to a phase of the bill on which I am somewhat in doubt.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator mind if we had a quorum called first?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULKLEY in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, one of the features of the housing bill is what is called the rent-subsidy provision; and I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts two or three questions about the provisions in the bill dealing with that subject. First of all, as I understand, the Federal authority is created, and it has the power to give assistance to insure low rentals of the houses constructed in a slum-clearance program. I notice on page 45 of the bill that the annual contribution for any such project shall be fixed, and uniform amounts shall be paid in such amount over a fixed period of years. Does not the Senator feel it would be wise to have the period of years limited in the bill? The only limitation in the bill that I have been able to find is that the period shall not be more than 20 years in the first instance, but that after the first period has been terminated then the board shall have authority to continue the subsidies in 10-year intervals by resolution each time, and make a new contract for another 10 years, so that the chain is endless. It seems to me that there ought to be some limitation in the bill as to how long the Federal Government will give grants in assistance to reduce operating expenses, as it were, so that the low rents will be sufficient to carry the project.

Does the Senator from Massachusetts agree with that suggestion?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. It was my desire to treat the subjects separately. Will the Senator permit me to begin at the beginning with one of the most important features of this bill, namely, its financial provisions, and present them as I understand them to the Senate? That presentation will embrace an answer in part to the question of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to conform to the Senator's request, but of course the provision I have reference to is not in the section dealing with the financial provisions. The financial provisions come at the end of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is referring to the subsidy?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am referring to the subsidy.

Mr. WALSH. I shall discuss that out of order because of the Senator's question rather than to begin in what seems to me to be the orderly way to discuss the financial features of the measure. The bill provides for an appropriation of $5,000,000 the first year for subsidies, and $7,500,000 the two subsequent years. As the life of the law is to be only 3 years there is no appropriation for subsidies for more than 3 years contained in this bill, but the bill does permit the United States Housing Authority to contract for these subsidies for a period extending to 60 years. It not only permits and authorizes that, but it in solemn language makes it a solemn obligation of the Government to meet that obligation for 60 years.

Mr. WAGNER. For 20 years.

Mr. WALSH. With a right of review in 20 years.

Mr. WAGNER. With a right of review at the end of 20 years.

Mr. WALSH. But the contract can be made for 60 years. However, at the end of 20 years the terms of the contract can be reviewed for the purpose of determining whether new conditions have arisen which should cause a readjustment. I suppose the real purpose, as the Senator will agree with me, is that in case there has been a reduction of rentals in the particular locality the subsidy might be reduced.

Mr. WAGNER. Or if conditions have improved so in the locality that a higher rent may be charged the low-income group than the rental that was made at the time the contract was entered into. Those occupying the houses may have improved their conditions, and therefore a modification of rentals ought to be made. An increase of rentals and a reduction of the subsidy should then be made.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill provides that in no case shall any contract be made for a period exceeding 60 years. In the section I first read to the Senator there is no limitation placed upon the time to run, so that the original contract could run for 60 years. It could be divided up into 20-year periods at first and then renewals for periods of 10 years made.

It seems to me, as the Senator has well said, that this program is as yet largely an experimental program, and to permit the Goverment for a period of even 20 years to make these contracts is, in my judgment, stretching the rubber band a right good long distance. I think if we continue this subsidy for 5 years, we would be wiser, and then review the program and extend the subsidy for 5 more years, if necessary, or 10 more years, rather than to commit ourselves to an ultimate program of 60 years, when we all know that the program takes in only a certain number of the unemployed. Does not the Senator think there is something in that point?

Mr. WALSH. The local housing authority must contribute 20 percent to the new housing project. The Federal Government contributes 80 percent. The 20 percent is assumed to be probably the cost of the real estate. This bill is based upon the presumption that in large cities, such as New York and other large cities, it is impossible to build suitable dwellings through private funds for persons of low income to live in at a rental they can afford to pay. Therefore, instead of doing what has been done in the case of the Housing Authority under the Public Works Administration, giving an outright grant, the bill substitutes this idea of a subsidy, and the amount of the subsidy is reached by first of all determining the cost of the project, and next the income that will be realized from the tenants. That difference multiplied by 3½ percent is the maximum subsidy that can be gotten on any project.

Mr. TYDINGS. One and a half percent.

Mr. WALSH. No; 1½ percent plus 2 percent, making 3½ percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is at the prevailing rate of interest at the time the lease is made, whatever it may be.

Mr. WALSH. If the difference in the cost of the contemplated project and the income from rents leaves a balance of $10,000,000, the maximum subsidy would be $350,000, or 3½ percent of $10,000,000. Does the Senator agree?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. That is not quite true.

Mr. WALSH. The maximum.

Mr. WAGNER. No subsidy might be required, depending upon the court's instruction. The Senator has stated it very clearly, except that I think the calculations that the Senator mentioned are in reverse order.

What we first determine is what are the carrying charges of the projects, and what rents would have to be charged per room in order to get sufficient funds to pay all the expenses of operation and amortization. As the result of that calculation it may be that it will be determined that a $6-per-room rent is required. Then there will be ascertained what the lowest-income group—because it is the lowest-income group that is to be served—is able to pay under the income which it receives. Say that would be $4 per room. Then we take the difference between $4 and $5, $1 per room, and that would be the Federal Government's contribution toward the poor family to help the poor family pay the rent.

I do not know whether or not I have made myself clear, but that is the method of calculation.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator from Maryland if it were possible to prevent this obligation extending over 60 years it would be most desirable. The bill last year had no subsidy provision.

Mr. WAGNER. It had no subsidy provision, but had a capital grant provision.

Mr. WALSH. The capital grant would be paid immediately. It was in the nature of a subsidy, but did not cover 60 years, as it would have been paid instantly and immediately.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to bring out the point that there is an alternative method set up in the bill called "capital grants in assistance of low rentals." As I read that provision, instead of having an arrangement under which the Government would contribute so much each year for a period of years under the alternative the Government could make a direct outlay. Thus there would be no yearly contract for low-rent appropriations or subsidy, but the Government would make a donation, and there would be no further connection between the Government and the finished project except to collect the loan which it had guaranteed.

I wish to suggest to the Senator that, in my judgment, it would be well to study the elimination of the first alternative and substitute for it the second alternative as the one way, because if we are to go into the business of making a subsidy for a period of 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 or 60 years, we are committing the Government to a tremendously long program.

I can see that there must be some financial assistance given to these undertakings to permit the low rents desired to be fixed. My question is, Would not the Government be better off, would not the project be better off, and would not all concerned be better off if the Government refrained from contributing to the rent of a citizen of the United States, which is really what it would be doing? We would be saying to Bill Jones, for instance, "For 20 years we will pay a part of your rent on a particular building if you will occupy it. The rent is $6 a month per room. It would have been six and a half, but we are going to contribute every month, 50 cents of your rent per room." I would much rather, if we are going to enter the field, contribute a definite sum toward the construction of the building and then withdraw, rather than see the Government committed to a 30- or 40- or 50- or 60-year period. I am asking the Senator if he believes that such a policy would not be better than the one now set up in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. The alternatives were given very serious consideration, but the preponderance of opinion was in favor of the provision as found in the bill. There is the disadvantage of time, as the Senator has pointed out, but there is also the advantage that the Federal Government would have control over the rent to a degree, whereas if it should give a capital grant it would not have such control; its control would be ended. Secondly, the Federal Government may be able, if the proper kind of officials are placed on the board, men of financial astuteness, to save money by a subsidy toward the rentals rather than by a capital grant.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is possible.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, when the project comes before the board for their consideration they can so change the plans and specifications as to cut down the cost, and therefore save something on the subsidy.

Mr. TYDINGS. On the other hand, if the Government were to make a grant of money to the cost of the building equivalent to the aggregate of the subsidy over a period, say, of 20 years, would not the Government still have jurisdiction over the rents through its loaning policy of putting up 80 percent of the money for the construction of the building? It could certainly put the money up under such terms as those who get it would provide that they would not charge more than a certain amount per room per month. So that, so far as the Government having control of the rents is concerned, it would have just as much control under a grant-in-aid as it would under a subsidy payable monthly over a period of years.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator mean that the Government in its loan should impose terms and conditions with regard to low rents, and if the conditions were not lived up to the Government would be in a position to take over the property?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; to make it a condition in the mortgage. The point I am making is that, so far as the tenant is concerned, he does not care whether the Government enters into a 20-year contract or makes a direct grant at the time the building is started. What he is interested in and what the Senator is interested in, I imagine, is finishing the building and turning it over to the tenant at the lowest possible rent that good business will permit. If we are going to give the tenant a subsidy running for 20, 30, 40, or 50 years, the amount can be ascertained at the time the contract is let; and if we are going to pay a subsidy, anyway, I should much prefer to pay it in the form of an equivalent sum of money in cash, and wind the matter up, rather than have the Federal Government committed to a policy of helping to pay the rent for a part of its citizens over a period of 60 years.

Mr. WALSH. A distinguished authority, who is familiar with the slum and housing problem of England, appeared before the committee, and he and others who have studied the European method of handling the problem think that the rent subsidy method is the better one.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Is it not very much simpler to have a contract under which, if there is a violation of its terms in the form of an increase of the rent charged, the Government can say, "Very well, we withdraw our subsidy"? Is not that much simpler than to have a provision in the loaning contract by which in case of a violation the United States Government will have to take over the property and operate it? I think there is no comparison between the two.

Mr. TYDINGS. My answer to the Senator from New York now can be definite, because the Senator from Massachusetts and, as I recall, the Senator from New York both contended—and I believe with facts to support their contention—that the people who were doing the best job were the local authorities and not the Federal Government. So I have no hesitancy at all in asserting that if the houses can be turned over to the local authorities to rent and operate, they having done so well up to now, I would prefer to enable them to get the slums cleared and the new buildings up, and then terminate our interest in the matter, rather than for 30 or 40 or 50 or 60 years having the Government continue its activity in the form of a subsidy which would commit the Government to pay a part of the rent, so to speak, of certain citizens of the country. I think that principle is dangerous, and I want to avoid it if I can.

Mr. WAGNER. In both instances the Government would constantly supervise the rent, because, under the Senator's theory, the contract providing for the loan would require supervision over the project.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; it would not. The Senator misunderstood me. What I contend for is that when the application for the loan came in, the applicant would have to submit the terms and conditions under which the finished room could be rented to the tenant, and if the applicant, taking into consideration the Government grant, taking into consideration the Government loan, could not erect the building and comply with the governmental rent terms, then the loan would not be forthcoming. If he claimed that he could comply, the loan would be made, but in the loan it would be stipulated, as a covenant running with the loan so long as that loan remained unpaid, that the rent should not be beyond a certain figure.

Mr. WAGNER. Under that plan the Government would have constantly to supervise the operators to ascertain the rental being charged.

Mr. TYDINGS. The applicant could be required every 6 months or once every year to state under oath what rentals were being paid in the building.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not wish to interfere further with the Senator from Massachusetts except to say that I think, under this bill, the locality has an option to proceed under the theory of capital grants or under the other; but I think that the more extravagant scheme is the capital-grant scheme, because under it the money is given all at once and there is no control, except as it is mentioned in the contract, whereas under the contributory system we could at any time withdraw the subsidy if economic conditions became better and the situation of the low-income group should improve so that they could afford to pay a higher rent. So, in view of the experience of England and all the other countries that have dealt with this problem, an experience which is much greater than ours, the committee finally adopted the plan which is suggested

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator, of course, is entitled to his viewpoint, but I may say that, as for myself, I do not think it would be cheaper for the United States to enter into a contract extending over a period of 60 years to subsidize the rent of a certain small group of people for the houses to be erected than it would be to make an outright grant and then get out of the proposition, except to see that the ethics and purposes of the act were observed in the future relationship.

I want to offer this suggestion to the Senator——

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there to state something which it is important the Senate should know?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will not interrupt the Senator much further.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is contributing to this discussion, but it is important for the Senator to know that one of the reasons why there is a subsidy in the bill rather than an outright grant is because of a matter the Senator is very much interested in.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know what it is.

Mr. WALSH. Under the plan of the Senator we would have to appropriate annually large sums of money and we would put the Budget more out of balance.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator, as I started to say to the Senator from New York, I want to stretch a point so far as I can in favor of this very worthy undertaking, but at the same time I do not want to surrender what I consider to be desirable principles of government; and I doubt very much, I may say to the Senator from New York, the feasibility of the Federal Government embarking on a policy by which it pledges itself to pay the rent of certain tenants in the United States over a period of 60 years.

I think when we do that we are starting something that may be extremely expensive in the long run. What right have we to do it while there are more applicants for these houses than there are houses? What right have we to give them the first houses that more people than they want, on the one hand, and then make a contribution toward the rent, upon the other hand, while someone else not so fortunate can get neither the room nor the subsidy? Certainly that is not democracy. It is picking out a person and giving him preferred quarters and then helping to pay the rent. I would much rather make a contribution to further such slum projects, and call it a day, than to have the Federal Government interested in renting houses in New York City, Baltimore, Philadelphia, or any other place.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to enable me to ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator from Maryland see any parallel between that and paying subsidies to shipping lines over a long period of years?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I do see a great deal of difference between granting subsidies to shipping lines, and the building of a small number of houses in this way.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator think the masses of Americans who are dangerously near the bread line would draw that distinction?

Mr. TYDINGS. Even so, I have never been a particular advocate of paying shipping subsidies or subsidies to anybody else. My thought is that the Government will be wise to pay as few subsidies as circumstances will permit.

The man who uses the pretext that because there is a subsidy for one thing, there is carte blanche for the granting of subsidies everywhere, is doing his Government a disservice and asking it to venture upon a program which would be ruinous in the end.

Mr. BONE. Since we have made it our policy to subsidize steamship lines for years, we certainly are justified in adopting the principle very completely.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is not very forthright in his suggestion, because he figures that if, for example, 10 men in the Senate are horse thieves, that justifies everybody else in the Senate turning horse thief.

Mr. BONE. I am not in favor of subsidies and have voted against them every time the question has arisen. Every time we establish a subsidy we take a further step toward establishing the principle of subsidies, and if we follow that principle sufficiently far we will have opened a veritable Pandora's box.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to say to the Senator from New York that so far as I am concerned my reluctance to support the measure, if such there is, comes from the proposal for subsidies on rents, rather than because of any other feature of the bill. I do not know how long it will be, if the measure is incorporated into law, and I do not want to invade the realms of prophecy, but I predict if it remains in the law and is employed, it will be the entering wedge to subsidies to a tremendous number of people who will not even live in slum-clearance projects, because once the principle has been adopted in national law it will be carried to the extreme limit.

My own thought is that I would rather appropriate more money now than the bill will appropriate, or go at it a little more slowly if necessary, and not have the Government adopt the policy of paying rent for a part of its citizens, but a policy of making a larger grant outright to some of the slum-clearance projects and then getting out of the local situation entirely. It is not the business of the National Government to bother with rents in New York City or Baltimore or any other place except in the aggregate. It is not our purpose to construct certain buildings. We recognize that by allowing the State authority to do it, and therefore, if we want to help, I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that I think he would gain a considerable amount of support for the bill if some policy other than this continual 60-year rent subsidy could be set up. As for myself, I would much rather vote for a grant and call it a day, to help these slum-clearance projects than I would to espouse a policy which will commit the Government to pay the rent of part of the citizens of the country for a period of 60 years.

Mr. WALSH. This is an administration bill and sympathetic consideration to the financial views of the administration has been given by the committee in determining the financial policy of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS rose.

Mr. WALSH. I have tried to be generous to the Senator with my time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am going to ask the Senator only one more question.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are two alternative proposals in the bill. One is a direct-rent subsidy over a period of 60 years, and the other a capital grant in assistance of low rentals. Has the Senator any information, either in the experience of England or in the estimation of the experts who helped prepare the measure, as to which of the two propositions would be more frequently employed?

Mr. WALSH. The preponderance of evidence, as I said, is in favor of the rent subsidy.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's thought is, therefore, that the rent subsidy is preferable?

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why would that be? Why not have a large sum of money appropriated outright, which would not have to be repaid, rather than a contract of so many percent a year of operating costs?

Mr. WALSH. I assume the financial provisions of the bill were deliberately and intentionally shaped and formulated so as to avoid immediate large appropriations from the Federal Treasury in the way of grants. Based upon the authorized appropriations for the first 3 years fixed in the bill, the outright grant from the Federal Treasury, which, of course, would have to be met at once, would have been $315,000,000. In view of the condition of the Budget the Senator can appreciate how reluctant the administration was to start it upon that basis.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator consider it fatal to the bill if the provisions for rent subsidies should be stricken out and the ones relating to capital grants of assistance retained?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I think the President would veto the bill and would reject it. Perhaps I should not say the President, but I think the administration would reject the bill and I think the Senator from New York would ask to have the bill defeated. Am I correct, may I ask the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator consider if we may not shorten the period of 60 years to something more reasonable?

Mr. WALSH. I would be glad if the Senator would study that suggestion.

Mr. President, several Senators asked me yesterday and today to explain or to summarize the financial provisions of the bill. I think the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] was interrupted so much yesterday that he did not have a chance to do it. I desire for the RECORD and for the information of Senators to recite the principal financial features of the bill.

First of all, we have authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 the first year and $250,000,000 for each of the 2 succeeding years for the purpose of making loans to public-housing agencies.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood the Senator to say the bill authorizes appropriations. Is it not correct that it authorizes the housing authority to borrow the amounts stated, rather than that it authorizes a direct appropriation?

Mr. WALSH. That is correct, and I thank the Senator. The bill authorizes the borrowing by the United States Federal Housing Authority of $200,000,000 the first year and $250,000,000 for each of the 2 succeeding years for the purpose of making loans to public housing agencies, private limited-profit housing agencies, or consumers' housing societies, at a rate of interest not less than the going Federal rate and for a period of 60 years.

In this connection let me say that I expect to offer an amendment increasing the rate to be charged to one-half of 1 percent more than the going Federal rate. That will be done at the suggestion of high authorities in the administration who have reached the conclusion, and I think properly so, that we ought not to continue to loan, at the going rate of interest, money raised by the Federal Government, which in many cases subjects the Federal Government to losses and to the cost of administration. That is an amendment to which I assume there will be no objection.

In this connection I want to commend the policy which is now to be inaugurated, as I understand, to carry out the policy of the administration that hereafter loans made by the Federal Government to local and other authorities for various activities will be fixed at one-half of 1 percent more than the going Federal rate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, that does not protect the Government at all against loss on the interest charge over the term of years.

Mr. WALSH. Not at all. It helps to minimize it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. We have had a very sad experience on that subject, as the Senator knows, because when the going Federal interest rate is down to one-half of 1 percent, as it was when the original Merchant Marine Act prevailed, and private loans are made at that rate for 20 years, we are bound to suffer a tremendous loss in the interest rate over the 20 years. My attention has been attracted repeatedly by this language, which manifestly does intend that the Government shall not lose money on the interest; yet I think it inevitably will lose money unless we discover some kind of a formula for an average rate instead of the temporary going rate. The temporary going rate may have no relationship to the average rate for 20 years.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is right; but I assume the Senator agrees that this is a movement in the proper direction, a direction that improves the policy of the past.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, yes; but it does not go far enough.

Mr. WALSH. The second important financial provision: The bill authorizes $25,000,000 of these funds, amounting to $700,000,000, which the United States Federal Housing Authority will raise, to be utilized for loans to limited private housing agencies.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that he need not consider that provision any further, because I have here an amendment which strikes that provision from the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I am very much pleased to learn that. The bill as it is before the Senate without the proposal of the Senator permitted the loaning of $25,000,000 to private housing agencies; and I may say to the Senator that there was another very fatal defect in that provision of the bill, which I had an amendment to cure in case the Senator insisted upon keeping it in the bill. We provided in the bill for loaning money to a private loaning agency for the same rate of interest—namely, the prevailing Federal rate—as to municipalities and States.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator, however, that that is no longer a matter of relevancy; for while originally some Senators were interested in the subject, I have an amendment ready to strike it out.

Mr. WALSH. It is a matter of relevancy for me to explain why I put in an amendment to change the rate of interest.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes! I did not think the Senator understood my statement.

Mr. WALSH. I understood it.

What is the situation? The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is now loaning money to these limited-dividend housing agencies at 4½ percent, and the Federal Housing Administration is insuring the loans. If we had let this provision stand—and I am very happy the Senator from New York is removing it—my amendment proposed to make the rate which they would have to pay the same rate that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation charges. If we let this provision stand, we would allow these private housing agencies to go to the United States Housing Administration and get loans at 2¾ percent, whereas if they went to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation they would have to pay 4½ percent. But that is eliminated now by the Senator's very appropriate and very timely amendment.

The benefit of the charts I have produced here is plain. It seems to me that one of the results of the opportunity to make loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is demonstrated in these charts, which show that there has been a very remarkable growth and increase in loans made to private housing agencies which have been able to take care of housing facilities for persons of low income.

The third provision: The bill provides that the United States Housing Authority is authorized to enter into contracts for annual contributions of not more than $5,000,000 per annum during the first year, and an additional $7,500,000 in any of the 2 succeeding years, for grants or subsidies to the local housing authorities to be used for the payment of the expenses of such local authorities, including payments on account of debt service. That is a subject to which the Senator referred.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that this provision will operate in the following manner:

The local housing authorities will bring a project to the United States Housing Authority for approval, and assert how much it is going to cost, and how much income they may be able to obtain, and receive authority to use a portion of this $5,000,000 to meet the deficit; and the grant is limited to the amount necessary to produce low rents. It is my opinion—in that the Senator does not agree with me—that the maximum will usually be granted in the way of subsidy, so as to make the rent as low as possible.

Mr. WAGNER. In the grants?

Mr. WALSH. No; in this subsidy. The maximum amount permitted in a given project to give as a subsidy will be granted, because it will be desirable to have the rent as low as possible.

Mr. WAGNER. That may be.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator apparently is referring to the capital grants in assistance, rather than to the contracts of yearly subsidy. The Senator himself says that the grant would be as large as possible in order to insure low rents.

Mr. WALSH. I mean, a certain amount of the $5,000,000 is taken to be taken out each year and granted to local authorities to meet the deficit of the undertakings by reason of the low rent they charge. I say the tendency will be to make that the maximum rather than the minimum, in order to keep the rents down as low as possible.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is, on the yearly subsidy basis?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; exactly.

In connection with the capital grant, there is a provision which requires the local housing authorities to contribute 20 percent; but in connection with the annual contributions there is no requirement for any contribution on the part of the local authority. This 20 percent probably would represent about the value of the land.

The sums authorized to be appropriated, or appropriated, are cumulative. This means that any unexpended balance left over from one year may be utilized the next year, so that at the end of the 3 years for which authorizations are made the Government is committed to an annual outlay not exceeding $20,000,000 a year for grants, and loans not in excess of $700,000,000 may be made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator now discussing section 11 (a)?

Mr. WALSH. I am discussing every financial feature of the bill.

The bill provides that at the end of 20 years the Federal Authority shall have a chance to restudy the operations of the project and to determine whether the subsidy grant will continue or be reduced. To be sure, at the end of 3 years the Authority is not authorized to make any further commitments without action of Congress. However, while the bill provides for the financing of the United States Housing Authority for only 3 years, contracts which it enters into for subsidies, grants, and loans may be made for a period not exceeding 60 years.

Obligations, including interest thereon, issued by public-housing agencies, and income derived by such agencies on such projects are to be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States. In other words, the bill gives the public housing agencies the right to issue tax-exempt bonds, which means they are free from income tax, surtax, estate, gift, and inheritance taxes.

I think the summary of the financial features I have given presents it—or, at least, I hope it does—rather clearly.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand, the local authorities will be granted some $700,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. There will be that amount of money available for the United States Housing Authority to loan to the local authorities throughout the country.

Mr. DAVIS. The grant, so to speak, for reducing the rental of the rooms will be, the first year, $5,000,000, and the second year seven and a half million dollars, and the third year seven and a half million dollars?

Mr. WALSH. That is a separate appropriation; and in 3 years it will amount to $20,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. And $20,000,000 is the top. They cannot appropriate any more?

Mr. WALSH. Until Congress acts at the end of 3 years.

Mr. President, I think I am now prepared to submit the few amendments I have to offer. Before doing so, however, I should like to call attention to the very excellent record that has been made by individuals of low income in establishing homes for themselves. Fifty-one and four-tenths percent of all the mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration have been to individual home owners whose income is less than $2,500. I think that is quite remarkable. The number of families that have incomes of less than $1,000 who have mortgages on their homes, and have applied for the benefits of the insurance provisions of the Federal Housing Administration, is 1.5 percent of all borrowers. The number where the annual family income is between $1,000 and $1,500 is 10.5 percent of all the borrowers. The number whose family income is between $1,500 and $2,000 is 19.9 percent of all the borrowers. The number whose family income in between $2,000 and $2,500 is 21.7 percent.

That has impressed me very much indeed, as showing the thrift of our people, and the disposition of many of them to establish homes at great sacrifice. Another table, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD, shows how much per month these mortgages have cost the families who have insured their homes. The borrowers with an income of less than $1,000 have to pay $12.74 on their mortgages each month. Those with incomes between $1,000 and $1,500 have to pay $17.68 per month. Those with incomes between $1,500 and $2,000 have to pay $22.36 per month.

I ask that these tables and certain others be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. Stewart McDonald undoubtedly has made a remarkable record for the class of people who have been enumerated by the Senator, and Mr. McDonald also heartily favors the proposed legislation, because he appreciates that we are reaching a class of people whom the Federal Housing Administration under its present authority cannot possibly reach.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say to the Senator that Mr. McDonald and every person with whom I have come in contact who has had anything to do with the various Federal housing activities has favored the proposed legislation.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. I thank the Senator for that statement.

Mr. WALSH. And Mr. McDonald so testified.

Mr. WAGNER. As did Mr. Fahey.

Mr. WALSH. I think they are all as deeply concerned as the Senator and myself in making it, as far as humanly possible, a slum-clearance undertaking.

Mr. WAGNER. Slum clearance and housing for the low-income group.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator for a bit of information in which I am interested; that is, an estimate of the actual annual cost to the Federal Government. A certain part of the moneys which are borrowed will be lost, necessarily; that is, loans will not be fully repaid. There will be certain loss in handling, and there are certain contributions to be made, as I understand. I am wondering whether the Senator could furnish a range of the estimated actual cost to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it is assumed that the $700,000,000 that is to be raised by bonds issued by the United States Federal Housing Authority will come back into the public treasury; that they are loans, and that the projects on which the loans are made, in view of the subsidy in the bill to help pay the rents, should be paid in due time. I should not anticipate any loss in that direction; yet it is possible. At any rate, it is not possible to make any estimate, if there is a loss from inability to collect the loans.

There will be a steady growing and increasing obligation in the nature of the payments which must be made through appropriations each year for these rent subsidies. The bill authorizes the subsidies to go as high as $20,000,000 the first 3 years of the life of the law. It authorizes the board to continue that for 60 years. The Senator can multiply 60 by $20,000,000 and get the figure of what it will cost in 60 years.

Mr. ADAMS. It is probable that beyond 3 years the amount would increase as the housing program developed.

Mr. WALSH. If at the end of 3 years there shall be a reenactment of legislation of this kind, and larger and new housing projects to be substituted for slums are undertaken, and new rent subsidies granted, the amount will continue to accumulate just as rapidly as we build new houses and authorize loans to be made through the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is there any automatic limitation of 3 years? It seems to me, as I read the bill, it is one in perpetuity; at any rate, the authority goes on forever and a day.

Mr. WALSH. The authorization for raising the $700,000,000 is confined to 3 years. The making of loans by the Federal Housing Administration is confined to 3 years. Of course, after 3 years some agency must collect these loans, either the Federal housing authority or somebody else, and some agency is going to pay the subsidies, and the subsidies, of course, will go on for 60 years. I think the Senator is correct that probably the fairest interpretation of the bill would be that there is only a limitation for the time being of the amount of money that can be loaned; and if the law is a success, and meets with the approval of a future Congress, there will undoubtedly be a movement to continue it beyond the 3 years.

Mr. WAGNER. I think one correction ought to be made of a statement probably inadvertently made. The bill provides that only during the period of 3 years is there to be the appropriation, but thereafter there shall be no other appropriation of $20,000,000 a year for the subsidies. I am absolutely sure about that. In other words, this is a 3-year program.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, you can meet the maximum of subsidies at the end of 3 years of $20,000,000 that year.

Mr. WAGNER. Twenty million dollars a year, but it provides that thereafter there shall be no more than $20,000,000 a year.

Mr. WALSH. Is there language to that effect?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, there cannot be under this bill, because at the end of 3 years there are no more grants.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But if the Congress provides for further grants, then there will have to be more subsidies, and it will increase.

Mr. WAGNER. Unless Congress acts again, under the proposed legislation there can be no more than $20,000,000 a year for subsidies over the entire period of time.

Mr. KING. However, the bill commits the Government first to $700,000,000; secondly, to subsidies of one billion three or four hundred million dollars during the 60-year period; thirdly, five million, plus five million, plus seven million five hundred thousand dollars, as a cash subsidy to be paid during the 3 years. Is not that correct?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has substantially stated what the financial provisions of the bill are. Of course, the $700,000,000 is to be raised by the United States Housing Authority by issuing bonds.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. It is not to become an item in the Budget.

Mr. KING. But the Government of the United States does not have the $700,000,000. It has to issue bonds and solemnly agree to pay them. So that after all it has to incur an indebtedness in order to meet the $700,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, let me make this statement, that the municipalities and States borrowed from the Federal Government during the depression years, and in no case was there any default by any municipality or political subdivision. On the contrary, the Federal Government has actually made a profit on these loans, because they have sold the securities upon the market at a higher rate than they paid for them when they took them as collateral. I wish to protest against any suggestion that this loan is in the form of a gift. I think it is as safe a collateral as the collateral behind the loans, in at least 90 percent of the cases.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator, so far as the loans are concerned.

Now, I send to the desk the first amendment which I ask to have presented to the Senate, and I ask to have action taken on it.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with my remarks this afternoon on the pending bill, I ask that certain documents of an informative character from authorities on the subject, and certain tables and briefs, may appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY OF WAGNER HOUSING BILL, S. 1685, REPORTED OUT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR JULY 22, 1937

FINDINGS AND POLICY

Section 1: The existence in the United States of an acute shortage of acceptable dwellings within the financial reach of families of low income is inimical to the general welfare.

The failure to remedy this situation has produced stagnation of business in important lines of activity, accompanied by recurring unemployment.

Private industry is unable to produce acceptable dwellings for families of low income and neither the several States nor their political subdivisions are able to alleviate these conditions without financial assistance.

It is declared to be the policy of the United States to promote the general welfare by employing its funds and credit in the alleviation of these detrimental housing conditions and the attendant ills.

PENALTIES

Sections 23 through Section 30 cover penalties and other standard provisions not affecting the purposes of the act.

THE RIGHT TO CONDEMN AND CLOSE DWELLINGS WHICH ARE UNFIT FOR HUMAN HABITATION

So far as the sovereign power is concerned, whether it be Federal or State, only two legal methods exist to close up, condemn, appropriate, or otherwise impede the use of a dwelling unit or units. They are, respectively, the police power and the power of eminent domain. Though widely variant at their extreme poles, they narrow into confused similarity toward their centers, and a discussion of the one without the other would be unsatisfactory from the points of view of this brief. Within the limitations of each and across the face of both are many convincing implications that should meet the demand of housing authorities for stern action.

The police power springs from the fundamental principle that every property owner must so use his own as not to endanger the safety, health, and general welfare of the community at large (Lewis, Eminent Domain, 2d edition). It operates upon an existing evil that injuriously affects the health, morals, or general welfare, and is a power to which every person and corporation must yield and from which not even the State itself can grant an exemption (Cincinnati Railroad Company v. Connellsville, 170 Ind. 316; 83 N. E. 503). The expanse of this power reaches even to the destruction of property, as, for example, to prevent the spreading of fire or disease.

Since the element of calamity or disaster or regulation in some degree or other is involved, land owners who suffer from the exercise of the police power are not entitled to compensation of any kind since the imposition, whether it be destruction or prohibition of the use amounting to destruction, or regulation amounting to a specific loss in property value, it is not in any sense a taking for public use but rather to conserve the general welfare of the community. The law either regards his loss as damnum absque injuria or considers him sufficiently compensated by sharing in the general benefits resulting from the exercise of this power (Com. v. Plymouth Coal Company, 232 Pa. 141, 81 A. 148; 43 La. Ann. 275, 9 S. 473).

Under the Police Power dwellings which constitute a public nuisance because they constitute a menace to the general public because of their unsafe or insanitary condition may be condemned, closed, demolished, or otherwise abated by the State acting through its duly constituted agencies and authorities. This power, while ample from a legal standpoint to effect the demolition of slums, has been little used. The fact that the power has not been used except to a very limited extent, however, is not significant. The significant fact is that the power which exists is a constitutional power and can be exercised whenever educated public opinion demands action from the local public authorities. Particularly with reference to slum clearance and public housing, the police power may be an effective means to an end. Both New York State (sec. 309, multiple-dwelling law, as amended May 17, 1937) and Pennsylvania (53 Purdon's Annotated Codes, sec. 3943) have statutes which permit administrative authorities to vacate tenements unfit for human habitation. New York's statute goes a step further by permitting the State to correct the condition of unfitness itself should the owner prove to be recalcitrant and fail to do so and in this event the law provides that the State may attach an effective lien against the property involved for the expenses incurred.

While neither of the statutes mentioned have been judicially interpreted, their constitutionality is undoubtedly sound. Similar statutes have usually been held valid and within the police power of the State. As long ago as 1897 the laws of New York contained a provision permitting the Board of Health to vacate tenements unfit for human habitation. Pursuant to this law the Health Department closed the tenement of one Egan and prohibited its further use without the Board's consent. The recital in the order is of special interest since it reveals the extent to which the State may go in the exercise of its regulatory power: The building is "unfit and not reasonably capable of being made fit for human habitation by reason of want of proper ventilation and repair and defects in the drainage and plumbing and because of the existence of a nuisance on the premises which is likely to cause sickness among its occupants and that the occupancy of the said building is dangerous to life and detrimental to health." The plaintiff contended that without proper notice and a day in court the execution of this order under the act was a deprivation of property without due process of law and therefore unconstitutional. The court found the statute constitutional and the order a proper exercise of the police power of the State.

"It was the function of the Board exclusively confided to it by the legislature to determine whether an occasion existed for the exercise of the power—and having so determined the court will not assume to reverse its action unless it appears—arbitrary, oppressive, or repugnant to justice" (Egan v. Health Department of the City of New York, 45 N. Y. S. 325; 20 Misc. Rep. 38).

Of even greater significance is the case of New York v. Hagardine (171 N. W. 773, 3 A. L. R. 1627). The Egan case went no further than to declare the right of the State to vacate an uninhabitable tenement. New York against Hagardine, however, is substantial authority to the effect that the police power may not only vacate but destroy, as well, a building which is deemed unfit and unsafe for human habitation, without compensation to the owner. New York against Hagardine arose from a Minnesota statute (ch. 469, laws 1917) which authorized the fire marshal to condemn and order torn down any building which, by reason of age, dilapidated condition, or other defect, is liable to fire and is so situated as to endanger life and limb * * *. Pursuant to this statute the fire marshal condemned and ordered torn down the plaintiff's wooden building. The plaintiff insisted that the law was unconstitutional since the police power does not extend to destruction without due compensation. The court declared the validity of the statute and commented as follows:

"Regulating or compelling the repair or alteration of buildings that have become a nuisance to persons or surrounding property is conceded * * * to be a proper exercise of the police power of the State. Whether as a result of the compulsory repair or alteration, or the manner in which it is required to be done, the owner suffers a pecuniary loss, thus depriving him of his property, is of no vital consequence. In principle there would seem to be no room for making a distinction between the right under the police power to compel the alteration of the building and the right to compel its reduction into lumber."

"Such abatement is not in any sense a taking for public use, entitling the owner to compensation. The public takes nothing, it simply causes one who maintains upon his land that which unduly endangers life and property to remove it." To the same effect is the case of Runge v. Glerum (64 N. W. 284).

It must not be supposed that this branch of the police power is in any way limited. The same that has been done with reference to fire hazard has been done to prevent the spread of disease. In the case of Sings v. City of Joliet (86 N. E. 663, 237 Ill. 300), the plaintiff sued the city for the damages resulting from the destruction of his apartment house. The destruction occurred pursuant to a city ordinance which was specifically passed for the destruction of this tenement as a nuisance because it was overcrowded and infected to such an extent that it could not be disinfected. The court declared that the city in the exercise of its police power may destroy such a nuisance without any compensation to the owner thereof.

Certainly if police power extends to the extreme right of destroying a nuisance, it must obviously include the right to vacate and prohibit the use of a tenement which by virtue of its physical conditions amounts to a nuisance.

To deny the existence of the police power in this respect is to concede that there may exist a vested interest in a public nuisance. The mere statement of this proposition is its own refutation.

PRACTICE OF THE ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Primary purpose: To rid Washington of its alley slums.

Corollary: To assure rehousing of those whose dwellings it demolishes.

Objective: By supplementing the work of other Government agencies (health department, building inspector, etc.) and the work of private enterprise, to assure that every dwelling in the District of Columbia shall be a fit place in which to live.

Methods:

1. Acquisition and the redevelopment of slum areas for those uses that will most benefit the neighborhood and the city as a whole.

2. Assurance of proper rehousing, utilizing private houses so far as available, building low-rent dwellings itself when necessary.

The Alley Dwelling Authority is handicapped in the second part of its work by being restricted to squares that contain inhabited alleys. That means it can operate only in built-up sections of the city where vacant land is scarce. Consequently when alley slum dwellings are demolished in a business section or other area not adapted to low-rent housing (the existing old houses are a hang-over from a past stage of the city's development and the character of their neighborhoods often has changed) the Authority finds difficulty in securing sites for dwellings to replace those demolished.

THE ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY, FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
July 28, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In response to your question I—

1. Am having prepared a series of large placards containing before and after photographs of the Alley Dwelling Authority's work in slum reclamation and provision of low-rental housing.

2. Repeat what I said this morning, that the Alley Dwelling Authority could not participate in the benefits of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill as now worded. On this I have secured the advice of counsel. A slight modification of wording would probably include the Authority legally, but a few other modifications would be necessary to enable it to carry on its present program with funds secured from the United States Housing Authority.

Before going further, in order to prevent any possibility of misunderstanding, may I inject the statement that personally—the Authority as such has taken no position—I sincerely desire enactment of legislation embodying the purposes of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, and that if the choice is between accepting that bill as printed under date of July 22, 1937, and getting no such legislation at this session, I emphatically support the bill. This, in spite of my belief that the Alley Dwelling Authority cannot participate in the benefits of the bill as now worded.

The program of the Alley Dwelling Authority is based upon slum reclamation and assuring rehousing of those whose dwellings it demolishes.

Slum reclamation involves redevelopment of slum sites for uses that will benefit the neighborhood and the community as a whole. These uses may be residential, or they may be recreational, commercial, or industrial, depending upon the character of the neighborhood.

The Authority may sell its acquisitions to private developers or it may itself carry the development to completion. It has done both. In case any of its acquisitions fit into the program for park and playground extension prepared by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, the Authority would turn them over to the Commission at cost. But parks and playgrounds will at best occupy only a small proportion of the slums. Other uses of community benefit must be found for the rest if they are not to lie vacant and have a depressing effect.

The financial objective of the Alley Dwelling Authority for its whole work is to close that work with cash and assets equal to the total amount of appropriations given it, profits on some projects balancing losses on others. This is possible only because reclaimed sites can be devoted to uses which will best serve the community.

Our books show that on June 30, 1937, there was a net decrease in our assets of $51,627.94. We have received a net total of $863,825.67 since the Authority began in November 1934. The book decrease includes not only all administrative expenses of the Authority from the beginning but also depreciation on properties, maintenance and repairs, water rent, reserve for taxes, fire insurance, etc. But it does not include the enhanced value of the properties we have redeveloped. This would more than cover the deficit. We carry our properties on our books at their actual cost to us.

The financial objective of the Alley Dwelling Authority in its low-rent housing projects—which are located on sites adapted to low-rent housing—is to make each individual project break even. The method is to design and construct the least expensive acceptable dwellings—bearing in mind the future character of the neighborhood—and then fix the rentals at figures that will pay operating costs and upkeep, amortization, taxes, insurance, and 3-percent interest on the actual total cost.

It may be necessary in some cases to write down part of the acquisition cost, as the site when acquired contains unfit buildings that, nevertheless, have a capital value and produce revenue but which must be razed. In such redevelopments as low-rent housing projects it is believed to be against public policy that the cost of these demolished buildings should be included in the rent of those who later occupy the site. This write-down would, of course, be a subsidy, such as is provided for in the housing bill and, unless it is compensated for by profits on other reclamation projects, would result in a deficit.

While each project (reclaimed square) is a complete unit in itself, all the projects together contribute toward our work objective of ridding Washington of its slums and assuring proper housing for the poorest people. One of the simplest illustrations is given by the projects now known as Bland's Court No. 1 and Bland's Court No. 2. In Bland's Court No. 2 we are acquiring property containing 25 old dwellings. All these we shall demolish and on their sites construct other dwellings. Meanwhile, however, because of the shortage of housing, especially for Negroes, we have acquired a site in the next square that was largely vacant (it contained two houses, which we demolished) and there have erected a three-story multiple dwelling with 31 living units.

Because of the present housing shortage we should and would build more low-rent houses if we were not restricted to squares containing inhabited alleys, squares that with very few exceptions are now closely built. The basis of our work, however, would remain slum reclamation and rehousing.

Your interest being so definitely in elimination of slums I would call your attention to the definition. Again there is no difference of purpose or of policy, but only a question of whether the present wording achieves the purpose. As worded there is some confusion because the word "which" refers to "area" but the following description applies to individual dwellings. Because "slum" is so difficult to define it is important that its application to any given area shall be definite. The following wording is designed to meet these requirements:

"(3) The term 'slum' means an area containing dwellings, which is detrimental to public health, safety, or morals by reason of insanitary conditions or land overcrowding, or by reason of dilapidation of the dwellings or of their faulty arrangement, design, poor construction, lack of ventilation, light, or sanitary conveniences.

"The boundaries of a slum shall, for the purposes of this act, be those determined by the local legislative body, State or municipal, or, outside incorporated communities, by the county legislative body, or by the local public housing agency, which shall file with the Authority a finding of fact showing the existence within these boundaries of slum conditions as defined in this act. These findings and boundaries shall be subject to approval by the Authority."

You asked me to indicate why the Alley Dwelling Authority would be excluded from participation in the benefits of the act.

The Authority, being an agency created by act of Congress, would, I am informed by counsel, be excluded by the definition of a public housing agency (sec. 2 (10), p. 36, line 23), which contemplates that the public housing agency shall derive its authority from a State. Though the District of Columbia is specifically mentioned under the definition of the word "State" (14, p. 38, lines 1–3), this, I am informed, has no bearing, as the District of Columbia is merely an administrative agency of Congress, which exercises exclusive legislative jurisdiction. This condition could be remedied by changing the position of the words "State, county, municipality" so the definition will read:

"(10) The term 'public housing agency' means any governmental entity or public body, including any State, county, or municipality, but excluding the authority, which is authorized to engage in the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum clearance."

The definition of "slum clearance" excludes a considerable part of the Alley Dwelling Authority's work, as a cleared slum area may be devoted to only a few uses. If not adapted to these, it will lie vacant unless and until purchased by a private owner. As you know, there are many such cleared areas in Boston where the building department has been active in securing the demolition of unsafe buildings. The building department, acting under the police power, can do no more than demolish. So the property lies unproductive.

Sincerely,

JOHN IHLDER, Executive Officer.

THE NEW YORK LAW

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: On May 11, 1937, when Mr. Henry Winters, of New York City, was testifying before the Committee on Education and Labor against the Wagner housing bill, he made reference to a New York State bill which provides that if the owner fails to make the necessary sanitary repairs, the tenement house commissioner has authority to make them, and that constitutes a lien next to taxes on the property.

At that time you stated that you would like to have a copy of the bill referred to. Enclosed is a copy of the bill which has been sent by Mr. Winters.

Very respectfully,

KENNETH E. HAIGLER, Clerk.

An act to amend the multiple-dwelling law, in relation to assessments for the abatement of nuisances in old law tenements, and authorizing the issuance of bonds therefor

The people of the State of New York, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Subdivision 1 of section 309 of chapter 713 of the laws of 1929, entitled "An act in relation to multiple dwellings, constituting chapter 61 (a) of the consolidated laws", is hereby amended to read as follows:

1. Whenever any multiple dwelling or the plumbing, sewerage, drainage, light, or ventilation thereof, is in the opinion of the department charged with the enforcement of this chapter in a condition or in effect dangerous to life or health, the said department may declare that the same, to the extent it may specify, is a public nuisance, and may order the same to be removed, abated, suspended, altered, or otherwise improved or purified as the order shall specify. The said department may order or cause any multiple dwelling or part thereof, or any excavation, building, structure, sewer, plumping, pipe, passage, premises, ground, matter, or thing in or about a multiple dwelling, or the lot on which it is situated, to be purified, cleansed, disinfected, removed, altered, repaired, or improved. Any order of the department may be served in the manner provided in this chapter, except that in the event that said department elects to exercise the powers conferred on it by subdivision 6 of this section it shall also serve a copy of such order on any mortgagee or other encumbrancer of record by sending it by registered mail to the address given in the recorded instrument evidencing such encumbrance, or if no address be given therein, to the person at whose request such instrument was recorded; such order shall be accompanied by a copy of this section and by a notice stating that unless the said order is complied with within 21 days after the mailing thereof, such department may exercise the powers conferred on it by subdivision 6 of this section. If any order of the department is not complied with or not so far complied with as the said department may regard as reasonable, within 21 days after the service thereof, then such order may be executed by said department through its officers, agents, or employees, or contractors. The said department may, in its discretion, let out contracts for the repairs to be done pursuant to this section, in accordance with the provisions of the charter, ordinance, and local laws of the city applicable to letting of contracts for public works.

SEC. 2. Section 309 of such chapter is hereby amended by adding thereto a new subdivision, to be subdivision 6, to read as follows:

6. (a) Notwithstanding and in addition to the other provisions of this section or any other provisions of law, the board of estimate and apportionment, or other governing body charged with the duty of appropriating the funds of any city, may create, establish, and maintain a revolving fund, to be known and designated by the term "Old Law Tenement Assessment Fund."

(b) Such "Old Law Tenement Assessment Fund" shall consist of—

(1) All moneys hereafter collected by such city for or on account of the principal or interest of assessments made pursuant to this subdivision.

(2) All moneys received from the sale of old-law tenement assessment bonds issued and sold under the authority of this section, including accrued interest and premiums thereon.

(3) Such sums as may be appropriated in the budget to such fund or as may be raised by taxation in such city to meet the expenses specified in paragraph (f) of this subdivision.

(4) Such other sums as may by law be required to be paid into such fund.

(c) It shall be lawful for the controller, treasurer, or chief fiscal officer of such city, when authorized by such board or body, to issue old law tenement assessment bonds at not less than par, for such period as he may determine, not exceeding 10 years and bearing interest at the rate prescribed by such board or body, for the purpose of meeting the expenses specified in paragraph (f) of this subdivision.

(d) Bonds issued pursuant to this section shall constitute general obligations of such city for the payment of which the full faith, credit, and resources of such city shall be pledged.

(e) All such bonds together with the interest thereon, shall, when due, be paid from such fund, and in case such fund shall be insufficient for such purpose, it shall be lawful for such controller, treasurer or other chief fiscal officer of any such city when thereto authorized by such board or body, without the concurrence or approval of any other board or public body, to issue certificates of indebtedness of such city in an amount sufficient to pay from the proceeds thereof the principal or interest of such bonds. Such certificates of indebtedness shall be termed "tax notes" and shall be in such form, bear such rates of interest and interest payment dates, and recite such terms and conditions as such controller, treasurer, or other chief fiscal officer may determine. Such "tax notes" or any renewal thereof shall be redeemed out of the tax levy for the fiscal year next succeeding the fiscal year of their issue.

(f) Upon the establishment of such fund, the moneys therein may be used to defray the expenses incurred in the execution of orders issued under this section affecting old-law tenements under the provisions of titles I, II, and III of article 7 of this chapter. Such expenses shall be deemed to mean the cost and expense of making improvements pursuant to such orders.

(g) The board of assessors, or other body of such city charged with the making of assessments for local improvements other than those confirmed by a court of record, shall, upon the certificate of the department charged with the enforcement of this chapter, assess the amount of such expenses against the property upon and with respect to which the work was performed, which property shall be deemed benefited to the extent of such expenses. Such certificate shall be accompanied by a copy of the order and notice served pursuant to subdivision 1 of this section and a copy of the affidavit executed and filed pursuant to subdivision 4 of this section, and such certificate, when accompanied by such papers, shall be binding and conclusive on such board or body. Except as in this subdivision otherwise provided, subsequent proceedings with regard to such assessments shall in all respects be as prescribed by the charter, local laws, or ordinances of such city. Confirmation of such assessments by such board of assessors, or other like body, exercising original power of confirmation, shall be deemed final. Every such assessment, after confirmation, shall be a lien or charge upon the property or premises in respect to which the same may have been made, which lien shall have priority over all other liens and encumbrances, including mortgages, whether or not recorded previously to the levying of such assessment, except that the lien of such assessment shall not have priority over taxes and assessments for other public or local improvements levied pursuant to law. If such an assessment be made payable in installments pursuant to law, and if any installment remain unpaid for a period of more than 90 days after it shall have become due and payable, then the entire unpaid principal of such assessment shall be reinstated forthwith as a lien and shall immediately become due and payable with interest at the rate of 7 percent per annum from the time the original assessment became a lien, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding.

(h) The powers conferred upon such department by this subdivision shall be exercised up to and including December 31, 1939.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately.

COPY OF LETTER TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is one aspect of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill which has given me very grave concern, and on which I should like your advice.

It is my earnest conviction that any housing program of the Federal Government involving the expenditure of Government funds should be focused primarily upon the elimination of our slum areas. Careful consideration of the bill as reported out of the Committee on Labor and Education leaves great doubt in my mind as to whether the bill will so direct the Federal Government's efforts.

As you know, there is a wide divergence of view between those engaged in the problems of so-called slum clearance. One group of local housing authorities thinks in terms of construction of new houses and seeks Federal funds for such new construction. The other group desires to keep foremost in mind the destruction or reconstruction of slum areas. I am in sympathy with this latter group.

Because of political or other pressure, some cities, while talking much about slum clearance, have done nothing in that direction. That the authority exists, under police powers, to wipe out slums cannot be questioned. It is the cities that do this—that are willing to exercise their authority to abolish slums, to which I desire Federal grants to be made.

To my mind, if you leave slum houses standing they will be occupied, and the idea that you can drain slums by building houses elsewhere is a fallacy. What I desire is that the subsidies provided in this bill and which may rapidly increase and reach, in a few years, tremendous proportions unless great caution is exercised, shall be given to those who are forced through economic conditions to live in slums rather than those who through political or other sources of favoritism, may be given the rent subsidies and permitted to live in new homes constructed with Federal grants.

It is really surprising what can be done in the way of demolishing slums, repairing old houses, or reconstructing new houses without any appreciable cost to the Government or the community.

There exists in Washington the Alley Dwelling Authority. This Authority informs me they have spent or committed to date $850,000 in actual slum clearance. The primary purpose of this Authority is to get rid of slums and substitute therefor dwellings, automobile parking lots, garages, etc. For each slum dwelling demolished they assure the rehousing of those whom they have dehoused. It has completed two housing developments and has two more under construction. The Alley Dwelling Authority claims that if forced to liquidate today, its assets would be more than the $850,000 appropriated to it.

I cite this merely to show what can be done, if efforts are exerted in the right direction.

I propose, therefore, to move an amendment offered in the committee or on the floor of the Senate which will strengthen this aspect of the bill. I am convinced that this amendment will not seriously handicap the operations of local housing authorities except in cases in which these authorities consider their task primarily that of building new houses rather than that of eliminating slums.

You will note that the amendment forces these local housing authorities who wish financial assistance from the Government in the form of loans, grants, or subsidies, to move definitely toward the elimination of unsafe and insanitary dwellings in their area. They have the alternative of demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or compulsory repair and improvement.

I have discussed this amendment with a number of persons whom I consider to be eminently qualified to advise me on it, including the executive officer of the Alley Dwelling Authority. I feel confident that the provisions of the amendment are not unduly drastic and that they will accomplish what I stated in the beginning I believed to be the major objective of the Federal Government's housing program.

Will you be good enough to give me your counsel in the matter?

Very respectfully yours,

DAVID I. WALSH.

REASONS FOR THE WALSH AMENDMENT

The bill as reported does not accomplish the purposes for which the amendment to be proposed by Senator WALSH was designed, for the following reasons:

(1) The proposed amendment is placed in section 15 under Standards. The standards are not compulsory but the section requires that "the Authority shall be guided by these considerations." The provision for the elimination of unsafe or insanitary dwelling units is only one of nine considerations which the Authority is to be guided by.

(2) The subsection contains a saving clause as follows: "Provided that such elimination may be deferred in case of a shortage of housing of a low-rent character."

My proposal is to amend section 9 of the original bill with respect to grants and section 11 with respect to demonstration projects, by limiting the power of the Authority to make a grant or to construct a demonstration project unless and until insanitary or unsafe dwelling units, substantially equal in number to the number of dwelling units provided by a project, were either actually eliminated or the Authority was assured that upon the completion of the project they would be eliminated.

It is absurd to limit the operation of the proposed amendment to those situations in which there is "a case of a shortage of housing of a low-rent character." For the proposed amendment does not require the demolition of houses; it only requires the elimination of unfit housing by any one of three alternatives, namely, (a) demolition, (b) condemnation and effective closing, (c) compulsory repair or improvement.

If the last alternative is utilized, the improvement in housing conditions would proceed at twice as rapid a rate as it would otherwise. That is, for every new dwelling unit constructed, an old dwelling unit can be made fit, sanitary, safe, and wholesome.

The bill as amended would be entirely ineffective in securing the elimination of unfit housing. If the purpose of the bill is primarily to encourage new construction rather than to improve general housing conditions and secure as widespread and immediate an attack on the worst housing conditions in our cities as possible, then it should be left in its present form. If the purpose of the bill is to put the influence of the Federal Government and of the money grants which it gives to local housing authorities squarely and irresistibly behind a program for the improvement of housing conditions through the elimination of slums and of insanitary and unsafe dwellings, then the amendment must be inserted as a compulsory limitation of the powers of the Authority in sections 10, 11, and 12 of the proposed bill as reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 9 (a) on page 45, line 3, by inserting after the word "made", the words "plus one-half of 1 percent."

ADJUDICATION OF INDIAN CLAIMS UNDER ORIGINAL JURISDICTIONAL ACTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1379) authorizing any nation, tribe, or band of Indians, in suits heretofore filed under their original jurisdictional acts, to present claims to the United States Court of Claims, by amended petitions at any time before final submission of said suits, to conform to the evidence; and authorizing the said court to adjudicate such claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in suits heretofore filed in the United States Court of Claims by the Five Civilized Tribes under their respective jurisdictional acts (Cherokee Nation, act approved Mar. 19, 1924, 43 Stat. 27; Seminole Nation, act approved May 20, 1924, 43 Stat. 133; Creek Nation, act approved May 24, 1924, 43 Stat. 139; Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, act approved June 7, 1924, 43 Stat. 537, as amended by joint resolutions approved May 19, 1926, 44 Stat. 568; and Feb. 19, 1929, 45 Stat. 1229), plaintiffs therein shall have the right, prior to January 1, 1938, to amend their petitions to conform to any evidence heretofore filed in said suits, whether such amended petitions develop original claims or present new claims based upon said evidence; and jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon said Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims which may have been presented by said Indian nations in any amended petitions heretofore filed, or which may be filed under the terms of this act; and claims so presented shall be adjudicated by said court upon their merits as though presented by petition filed within the time limited by said respective original jurisdictional acts, as amended; and any case presenting claims which may have been dismissed upon the ground that new claims were set up by amended petition, after the expiration of the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts, as amended, shall be reinstated and retried by said court on their merits.

And to amend the title so as to read:

An act to authorize the Five Civilized Tribes, in suits heretofore filed under their original jurisdictional acts, to present claims to the United States Court of Claims by amended petitions to conform to the evidence; and to authorize said court to adjudicate such claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LOANS ON COTTON AND OTHER AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before we take further action on the slum-clearance bill I should like to make some remarks on a matter of importance which has arisen.

Several resolutions and bills have been introduced looking toward the Federal Government taking care of the surplus crops. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] has risen from time to time and called the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the pending disaster, which it is claimed will result in excessively low prices on account of the large crop of cotton in my section, and the large crop of wheat and corn in other sections.

I did not feel that it was necessary for me to call the attention of Senators to existing law. The public ought to be advised, and certainly Members of this body ought to be advised, as to what provisions have been made to meet an emergency of the kind suggested. Someone showed me today a resolution which has been introduced by two Members of this body.

In view of this situation, I have had a digest made of the laws which have been enacted looking to relief in such an emergency, and I have prepared some remarks in order that there may be no misunderstanding on the part of the farmers as to whom they should go to in order to obtain the relief which they are insisting Congress shall pass legislation to afford.

Since the decline in cotton prices and wheat prices, which has been startlingly drastic, I have received numerous letters from cotton and other farmers demanding legislation which would enable the Government to come to their assistance by making loans on cotton or wheat so that the pressure on the market could be relieved. The size of the cotton crop, or its estimated size, is the result of a slight increase of acreage, but more largely is due to the good growing season. However, the size of the crop is not by any means as yet determined. The critical period for a cotton crop, as all cotton producers know, is the month of August, and no one can tell what effect weather and the boll weevil have had until the picking begins. Bolls that seem to be mature, when opened, disclose, perhaps, that half or more of the lint has been destroyed by the weevil. The prediction of a fourteen and a half million bale crop is a pure, unadulterated guess. The greatest expert in the Department of Agriculture and the wisest old Negro in the cotton field cannot tell what a crop is going to be until it is picked and ginned.

Mr. President, in reply to those who are clamoring for legislation, I want to take this opportunity of stating to them and the public generally that there is ample legislation without any additional legislation to take care of the situation, and that ample funds are available.

Therefore, if the cotton planters desire loans, they should write to the parties indicated by me and insist that loans be made.

THE COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION, UNDER EXISTING LAW, HAS SUFFICIENT LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY AND FUNDS TO MAKE LOANS ON CROPS HARVESTED DURING 1937

The Commodity Credit Corporation was organized on October 17, 1933, pursuant to the President's Executive Order No. 6340, dated October 16, 1933, for the purpose of making loans to producers to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of agricultural commodities.

Section 7 of the act extending the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), approved January 31, 1935, ratified the organization of the Commodity Credit Corporation and extended its life as a governmental agency to April 1, 1937, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President by Executive order. Section 7 of said act reads as follows:

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, Commodity Credit Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware as an agency of the United States pursuant to the Executive order of the President of October 16, 1933, shall continue, until April 1, 1937, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President by Executive order, to be an agency of the United States. During the continuance of such agency, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration are authorized and directed to continue, for the use and benefit of the United States, the present investment in the capital stock of Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Corporation is hereby authorized to use all its assets, including capital and net earnings therefrom, and all moneys which have been or may hereafter be allocated to or borrowed by it, in the exercise of its functions as such agency, including the making of loans on agricultural commodities.

Section 2 of the act extending the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (Public, No. 2, 75th Cong.), approved January 26, 1937, again extended the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation as a governmental agency until the close of business on June 30, 1939.

The governing body, which consists of a board of directors composed of 12 members, is as follows:

Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture;

W. I. Myers, Governor, Farm Credit Administration;

J. E. Wells, Jr., deputy cooperative bank commissioner, Farm Credit Administration;

Lynn P. Talley, assistant to the directors, Reconstruction Finance Corporation;

Oscar Johnston, manager, Cotton Producers Pool, Agricultural Adjustment Administration;

Ward M. Buckles, Director of Division of Finance, Agricultural Adjustment Administration;

Ben Johnson, special assistant to the directors, Reconstruction Finance Corporation;

Wilford J. Johnson, Assistant Chief of Examining Division, Reconstruction Finance Corporation;

Warren Lee Pierson, president, Export-Import Bank;

Clifford J. Durr, assistant general counsel, Reconstruction Finance Corporation;

John D. Goodloe, vice president and general counsel, Commodity Credit Corporation; and

H. R. Tolley, Administrator, Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

The present capital of the Corporation is $100,000,000. The original capital of $3,000,000 was subscribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, who hold it jointly for the use and benefit of the United States. The remaining capital of $97,000,000 was subscribed and is held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation pursuant to the provisions of the act of April 10, 1936 (Public, No. 489, 74th Cong.).

The Commodity Credit Corporation is essentially a lending institution. Its affairs are managed by a board of 12 directors, chosen by the stockholders. Under its charter the Corporation is empowered to buy, hold, sell, lend upon, or otherwise deal in commodities, agricultural or otherwise.

In section 7 of Public Law No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, the Commodity Credit Corporation is expressly empowered to make agricultural loans by using all of its assets, including capital and net earnings. In enacting this law, the Congress, in the exercise of its judgment, left the decision, as to whether to make these loans, to the Corporation, the authority conferred with respect to this matter being optional and not mandatory. However, as the purpose of the Corporation, as provided in its charter, is to provide for loans to enable farmers to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of agicultural commodities, now, under the present circumstances, when we are faced with increased production and the eminent possibility of lower prices for commodities this fall, it seems to me only proper that by action on the part of the board of directors, a loan for the crops produced this year, if desired by cotton producers, should be announced forthwith.

From the above-quoted sections of law relating to the creation of the Commodity Credit Corporation, it is evident that there is ample legislative authority for loans to be made, if the Corporation decides such loans are needed, and from the present trend of prices, it appears that the loans should be made, as they would have a tendency to offset precipitate price declines and bring about a stabilization of prices on the commodities upon which loans are available.

With respect to the availability of funds to make these loans, in a letter from Mr. Jesse H. Jones, Chairman, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under date of July 31, last Saturday, I was advised that the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have ample funds to meet the commodity-loan needs of the present crops. He says, however, in substance, that the loans will not be made unless the "necessity for them develops." Mr. Jones' letter is as follows:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, July 31, 1937.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: In reply to your inquiry, I wish to advise that the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have ample funds to meet the commodity-loan needs of the present crops, should the necessity develop.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE H. JONES, Chairman.

That was written on July 31.

As the Commodity Credit Corporation already has ample legislative authority and ample funds to effectuate these loans, it is, in my opinion, not necessary to enact a new law at the present time, but we should concentrate our efforts on Mr. Jones and other officials connected with the R. F. C. and the Commodity Credit Corporation, who have ample law and ample funds to meet the situation, so that they will take the necessary steps to do what the law empowers them to do.

Mr. President, I have letters from all over my State and from other States criticizing me for not urging farm legislation to enable the farmers to secure loans, when we find ample law provided, and a board set up for that very purpose. We are fond of delegating our powers to a board. Here we have one armed with ample authority to say how much should be loaned on a pound of cotton. I have quoted the law, and now I am glad it is in the RECORD. I shall suggest to those who may hereafter write to me that they communicate with those whom we have clothed with the authority to do that which the farmers are asking us to duplicate here in the Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I may ask the Senator from South Carolina who constitute the board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. SMITH. I have given their names. They are in the RECORD.

Mr. GEORGE. The Agricultural Department is represented on the board, is it not?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; the Department of Agriculture is represented on the board by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GEORGE. I was not here at the beginning of the Senator's remarks. Is the Senator advised of the present price of cotton in the primary market for this year's crop, which is already beginning to come on the market?

Mr. SMITH. About 10½ cents basis, Middling.

Mr. GEORGE. About 10½ cents.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator, of course, knows that this year's crop, and indeed all crops of cotton under existing conditions when an inflation of values exists, is certainly worth 12 cents or better?

Mr. SMITH. Surely.

Mr. GEORGE. So that the sale of this year's crop of cotton at a 10- or 10½-cent basis, Middling, in the primary market represents an actual loss to the cotton producers in the South.

Mr. SMITH. It represents an actual loss. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has raised the question as to the price of cotton. Just a few months ago the Agricultural Department, taking the average cost of the things the farmer has to buy, placed what they call a parity price of 16 cents a pound as an average return for the grades from Good Ordinary to Middling Fair. That would represent about 17½ or 18 cents a pound for Middling, because all the grades below are discounted and all above bear a premium.

The object of orderly marketing was that the Government should so relieve the pressure on the market as to let farm commodities which were available for the market reach parity. Cotton is the only farm commodity that has not even approximated parity. Corn has gone above parity; wheat has gone above it; hogs have gone above it. But the fact that the Government has 6,000,000 bales of the farmer's cotton stored and financed, and every time the price of cotton showed a tendency to rise toward parity the cotton owned by the Government was dumped on the market or offered for sale. The Senator from Georgia knows that to be so.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether cotton has ever sold at parity, even adding to the price received all the benefit payments and all the rental payments?

Mr. SMITH. It has never even approximated parity. It has been anywhere from ten to twenty dollars a bale below parity.

Mr. GEORGE. All the while?

Mr. SMITH. All the while.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator also if there is any possibility of saving the value of this year's crop to the farmer at this date—for cotton is now coming on the market—except by a loan or by some operation under the Commodity Credit Corporation or some other agency of the Government performing a similar function?

Mr. SMITH. There is none whatever. The cotton from the extreme Southwest is now being hedged on the future market.

Mr. GEORGE. And I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that the cotton of the extreme Southeast is daily coming on the market now and is being sold, so that the Senator believes, I am sure—for he is very familiar with the matter—that nothing in the form of legislation could now be helpful save some operation which the Commodity Credit Corporation is now empowered to undertake.

Mr. SMITH. Nothing will be helpful, save the exercise of the full and plenary powers that they have now in their hands.

Mr. GEORGE. They have not only the authority but the money and the credit with which to carry on helpful operations.

Mr. SMITH. They have both the money and the credit and are directed to so use them so as to take care of a declining market.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will permit me to say so, I agree with him thoroughly. On yesterday I gave out a statement, which was carried in my State, that requisite power does exist in the Commodity Credit Corporation; that the Secretary of Agriculture is a member of the board of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and that the Commodity Credit Corporation has both the money and the credit with which, at least, to make this year's crop of cotton sell at the cost of production.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I should like to ask the Senator two or three questions. Is the Senator's recollection the same as mine—I did not hear the first part of his remarks—that the Commodity Credit Corporation is chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware under an Executive order of the President rather than by legislative act?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. GILLETTE. And that it now has the authority to which the Senator has directed attention to make loans on the commodities designated by the President?

Mr. SMITH. I have read the statute to the Senate conferring that authority on the Corporation.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am also informed that there is included in the list of commodities which have already been designated by the President as eligible for loans almost everything in which as representatives of farm constituencies we are interested; that the Farm Credit Corporation has $600,000,000 available for that purpose; that it has full authority, as the Senator has pointed out, to make the loans; that it has the money with which to make them; but that it is against the policy of the board of directors to make this type of loan. Is not that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know what the policy of the Corporation is, but I know that loans are not being made.

Mr. GILLETTE. There is pending, I believe, before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the Senator is chairman, a bill to direct the Commodity Credit Corporation to make such loans.

Mr. SMITH. It is already directed to do so by the law.

Mr. GILLETTE. It is authorized and directed?

Mr. SMITH. It is authorized by the law.

Mr. GILLETTE. But does it not seem to the Senator that a mandatory act, which could not possibly be construed as being discretionary, to make the loans, under such rules and regulations and under the authority the Corporation now has, is essential in order to make the present law effective, and that such a law would be necessary to accomplish the desired purpose?

Mr. SMITH. The corporation is created under a State law, and its functions are defined, the primary one which interests us being, when for any reason there is a declining market that it is authorized and directed to make these loans.

Mr. GILLETTE. There is no doubt that is the law, just as the Senator has stated, but the Corporation construes it to be discretionary.

Mr. SMITH. It is discretionary, but, in the name of common sense, when we create a board why should its judgment run contrary to the actual facts as they exist perhaps in the West and in the South, and why should it determine the necessity rather than we?

Mr. GILLETTE. I heartily agree with the Senator. I think it is necessary to pass additional legislation so that there will be no question but that the Commodity Credit Corporation will have to make the loans.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we create boards and boards and boards, and all they are used for is to spank their creator. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator, of course, knows more about this question than I do, but my recollection is that it was through this same Corporation that early in the present administration loans were made on cotton?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they have now the same authority they had then to make loans?

Mr. SMITH. They have the same authority.

Mr. BARKLEY. And no authority has been taken from them?

Mr. SMITH. None whatever.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the Senator contends that they have ample funds?

Mr. SMITH. Do not let us say "the Senator contends." Jesse Jones, the Administrator, says they have. Here [exhibiting] is his letter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will change my phrase and say that it is admitted they have ample funds?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; that is better.

Mr. BARKLEY. That pertains, of course, to the present crop. I wanted to inquire of the Senator with reference to a broader phase of the subject, so that we may have information as to the probability of legislation dealing with the entire agricultural situation in the near future. The Senator knows that all of us who represent agricultural commodities have realized that if we have this year an unusual season, resulting in large crops, not only of cotton but of corn and wheat and tobacco and other farm products ordinarily denominated as basic products, unless there is provided some program by which there may be further regulation of production and sale—I mean feeding the surplus to the market—next year there may be a considerable slump in the price of cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, and other agricultural commodities. Looking that far ahead, efforts have been made during the present session to try to work out a general agricultural bill, not in the hope that it could affect this year's crops but that it might take effect soon enough to have some influence on production and prices in 1938.

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the Senator is chairman, recently adopted a resolution providing for regional hearings on the entire subject of agricultural commodities, and I think there is pending in the Senate a resolution providing an appropriation of $10,000 to pay the expenses of the committee for that purpose.

In view of the admitted possibility of danger that might occur if we should have a bumper crop next year without any additional legislation, may we be assured by the Senator and by his committee that the hearings which have been provided for will be speedily held and that the committee will make every possible effort to have legislation ready for Congress when it reassembles, whether in January or at an earlier date—and I assume now that it will be in January. May we confidently hope and expect that the committee will have a comprehensive agricultural measure ready for the consideration of Congress as item no. 1 when we meet at the next session?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know what item 1 will be, but I know that my committee was thoroughly convinced that heretofore farm legislation had been considered and enacted in such a piecemeal fashion that every year we were back here with some plan to take care of conditions temporarily. So after full and free discussion, the committee unanimously agreed that it would be better to take the question to the farmers themselves and use the interim between the time when Congress shall adjourn—if it ever shall—and the time when it shall reconvene, which it is bound to do, in an effort to get to the fundamentals of the proposition and come back prepared with a bill, formulated by the members of the committee, with the assistance of the farmers who make the crops. That is what we are going to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that, and I think the Senator and his committee are well advised in attempting to get the best possible information from all available sources in order that a comprehensive and wise permanent plan may be worked out.

Mr. SMITH. That is what we propose to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator will at the same time agree that there may be cause for apprehension in some quarters lest the enactment of legislation may be delayed until next year's crop is in the ground—tobacco, which is planted in the spring, cotton in the early spring, corn, and wheat, especially spring wheat. What we ought to try to guard against is delaying the enactment of legislation until the crop is in the ground, because then we would have to go through the same process of attempting to destroy something that has already been planted or that is partially matured. Therefore I wish to emphasize the desirability of having a comprehensive bill enacted into law in time to embrace whatever action may be necessary in order to provide for 1938 crops, so that if there should be another excellent season and an overproduction or unsalable surplus, we may have legislation enabling us to protect the farmers against drastic reductions in their prices.

Mr. SMITH. The leader of the majority may rest assured that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate are thoroughly alive to the situation and that we are going to leave nothing undone. We will have ready for Congress when it reconvenes, perhaps not a complete bill, but a bill that will meet the endorsement of the majority, if not all, of our committee. Two things we want to get rid of—one, patchwork legislation for farmers, and the other, being railroaded by old hacks who come here from time to time with all sorts of plans and schemes which are about as workable as their brains—just about as workable as that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no information concerning that situation. I suppose whoever are here representing the farmers are sent here by the farmers and authorized to do whatever they are undertaking to do. I do not know the methods of their selection.

Mr. SMITH. Not only they, but a host of others who think they know more about farming than the man in the field, but who do not know a cotton stalk from a jimson weed, nor a stalk of corn from a fishing pole, and yet they can tell the farmer exactly how to make a fortune on the farm, though if I should turn my farm over to them I have no doubt they would starve to death in a couple of years.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to thank the Senator for the assurance, which it was not really necessary for him to give, that every possible effort will be made to deal with the situation.

Mr. SMITH. And I wish to take this occasion to say that I do not take with good grace the whip and spur that were applied to my committee to act. It was not a question of what we did, but "Go and do something." A bill was brought here which did not meet the approval of some of us who sometimes think, and yet we were told, "You must approve it." I knew there was ample law to take care of the situation for this crop year.

Do not make any mistake about it. The next time a bill comes here it will be the result of investigations by that splendid body of men known as the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate. That committee includes the only woman in the Senate, and in that respect it is more fortunate than are other committees.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry if in its deliberations as to legislation which should be proposed at the next session the committee proposes to examine the subject of sugar.

Mr. SMITH. No; we are sweet enough without that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Some think their pocketbooks are not full enough without subsidies. Is the Senator willing to judge of sugar as an agricultural product and deal with it according to its deserts as his committee may find them to be?

Mr. SMITH. I do not think I ought to commit myself to any one commodity one way or the other. In the course of the investigations of the committee, if it seems to be necessary, we will take a little sugar in ours. [Laughter.] Otherwise I cannot promise the Senator or anyone else just what we are going to consider. We intend to consider the agricultural problem. That is what we are going to undertake to do, and to find out why it is Congress has never passed an agricultural bill which proved effective much longer than 1 year.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I ask the Senator to yield so that I may make a statement which I am sure he himself would not make. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I heard him make the assertion, which I think he was perfectly justified in making, that, while the representatives of farm organizations had various ideas about farm legislation—and the Senator from South Carolina as chairman of the committee has always given them respectful hearing and has been glad to get their views—yet he had in mind that over 80 percent of the farmers of the Nation do not belong to any organization and the purpose of the action the committee has taken on the recommendation of the chairman is to try to learn what the other 80 percent of the farmers want in the way of farm legislation and to make certain that they are represented through their Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have tried, as chairman of the committee and as a farmer, to meet the problem. I have tried to meet the problem in the best interests of those engaged in agriculture. Of course, I laid myself open to the criticism of those whose views do not run along with mine, but I resent having imputed to me the idea that I was taking the action I did because I was indifferent to the farmer. I believe I am the only man here who is an unadulterated, simon-pure farmer. I would wager that every other so-called farmer in the Senate has some side line outside of farming. I know some of them commit an assault with intent to be lawyers. [Laughter.]

I take this occasion to resent the implication that an honest man, for any reason whatever, would refuse to do the right thing for the very group to which he belongs.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I interpret correctly the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina, I understand he resents very strongly the statement that he is not interested in agriculture. Am I correct?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am glad to have had this opportunity of having the matter brought to a point where it may be known in all its aspects. With this statement I yield the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, will he let me ask him a further question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, according to the knowledge or intention or inclination of its chairman, propose to offer to the Senate any measure with respect to the restriction of any agricultural commodity being grown in the United States when the United States does not grow and produce enough of that commodity to meet the requirements of human consumption?

Mr. SMITH. I suspect that question will come up incidentally in our varied investigations. I think the Senator is intimating some very high protective tariff ideas. I do not know, but I think perhaps that is what he is doing.

Mr. PEPPER. On the contrary. I am directing my inquiry to the question of whether or not American farmers will be permitted to produce sufficient quantities of American agricultural commodities to meet American consumption, or whether they will be denied that right. I represent some commodities which are denied that right.

Mr. SMITH. We will take that under prayerful consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am very sorry I was not in the Chamber when the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] made his first remarks about the cotton situation. I will state, however, that it is very gratifying that he has given to the Senate and to the country the information that there is a way in which we may bring relief to the cotton farmers of the South without additional legislation.

A few days ago, on the floor of the Senate, I asked the Senator to make these remarks in order that the farmers of the South may be assured that the Congress will do everything in its power to give them relief from the present situation. I am afraid the Senator is a little bit too enthusiastic about the procedure. I grant you that the authority is ample in the legislation already enacted, and that the funds provided for are adequate to meet the situation. I am afraid, however, there is a discretionary power on the part of those who have the authority to act in this case. For that reason the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and I have agreed upon a joint resolution which was introduced and sent to the committee which I am sure will meet with the approval of the chairman and the committee members, knowing their great desire to do something for the cotton farmer, calling on this constituted authority to act, and to act immediately.

Heretofore loans have been provided for the farmer, but not until the month of September. Because of the peculiarity of the present season, cotton is now being picked in the fields and ginned and put on the market. Especially in the extreme southern part of Texas they are practically through with the picking, and the cotton is being sold, and it is being absorbed by the cotton speculators of the country. I had a notice from my home State, a little farther north, that they are already ginning the cotton, and the cotton is being sold on the market; and that is true in southern Georgia and southern Alabama and Florida and Louisiana.

The thing we are trying to get those in authority to do is to act immediately, because it will do the farmer no good if he sells his cotton on a low market which has been beaten down by the cotton speculators for speculative purposes until the cotton gets into the hands of the speculators; and after that is done we have the assurance that the price of cotton will immediately be boosted, and those who are engaged in speculating on the cotton farmer will gather in their golden shekels.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to another fact; and I appreciate the observation made by the leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]:

The power to make these loans to the farmers is discretionary; and one reason why they have been hesitating is because, so far, the Congress has not enacted any permanent farm legislation at this session. We have been in session over 7 months, and we have not done anything about it. We already have about a 6,000,000-bale carry-over, and I am afraid the report which is to be made on the 8th of August will show about a thirteen- or fourteen-million-bale crop, which will assure another surplus with the present domestic consumption and our exports. We cannot expect these men representing the taxpayers to rush in and loan this money to the farmers unless they have some assurance that the Government is not going to lose in the transaction; but they would have the assurance if we had a permanent farm program that would guarantee or give some promise of control of the cotton crop next year.

For that reason I send to the desk a second concurrent resolution, in which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] joins with me, in which we ask the Congress to place itself upon record that because of the fear of accumulated surpluses next year which would make it bad business on the part of the Government to loan the farmer 12 cents a pound on his cotton this year, the first business of the Congress in January will be the consideration of this bill and legislation which the Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of our committee, assures us will be ready for action at that time.

At this time I ask that the concurrent resolution I have sent to the desk be read, in order that the Senate may know exactly what we propose to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator does not ask to have action taken on the resolution today?

Mr. BILBO. Oh, no; I am just asking that it be read.

First, I ask consent of the Senate to have the first resolution read, so that the Senate will understand the second one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the first resolution has gone to the Secretary's office.

Mr. BILBO. Very well. Then we will not waste the time of the Senate. I ask to have the second resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 19), as follows:

Whereas no permanent agricultural program has been adopted at this session of the Congress because of the unavailability of the data necessary to enable the Congress to formulate such a program; and

Whereas action has been taken with a view to authorizing subcommittees of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate and the Committee on Agriculture of the House to hold regional hearings during the fall of 1937 for the purpose of obtaining such data; and

Whereas due to the lack of such a program, surpluses of the basic agricultural commodities, particularly of cotton, are accumulating; and

Whereas such surpluses have the effect of reducing the prices received by farmers for such commodities below the parity prices thereof; and

Whereas it is in the interest of all the people of the Nation that the Government should take such action, by exercise of its lending power or otherwise, as will result in raising the prices received by farmers for such commodities to the parity prices of such commodities; and

Whereas the proper action to be taken is dependent for its success upon the control in the future of such surpluses; and

Whereas it is desirable, in the interest of making plans for the future, that farmers should now be advised of the intention of Congress to adopt a permanent agricultural program in the early months of 1938: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that a permanent agricultural program should be the first legislation to engage the attention of the Congress upon its convening in January 1938.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should hate to have that resolution interpreted as being necessary, in view of what has taken place here today. I did not know the resolution was in existence. The resolution states what the Agricultural Committee have already definitely decided to do; and, as chairman of the committee, I do not like to be put in the attitude that whatever action we may take subsequently is taken on account of this resolution, when we had already, as a committee, decided to do that very thing, and had appointed a subcommittee to carry it into effect.

I know the resolution will sound pretty well out amongst the boys, but I hope the situation will be taken care of by those who purvey the news to the people.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am sure my distinguished friend, the Senator from South Carolina, need have no fear that he had not put himself on record before this concurrent resolution was ever presented. There is no man in the country who will think that the concurrent resolution was the stimulus that caused him to act or caused the committee to act on the proposed legislation.

Mr. President, in this connection, for the information of the Senate and the public, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a report from the Division of Statistical and Historical Research of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics showing the world carry-over from year to year from 1920 up to the present time, and the average price of middling ⅞-inch cotton during those years, and also the parity price that should have been received during these years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Cotton, world carry-over of American, price per pound of Middling ⅞-inch at 10 markets, and parity farm price, specified seasons

Season beginning Aug. 1	World carry-over of American cotton at beginning of season	Average price of Middling ⅞-inch cotton at 10 designated markets	Average United States parity farm price [1]

[1] Average United States farm price in the 5 years, August 1909 to July 14, of 12.4 cents times the index of prices paid by farmers for the commodities purchased.

Division of Statistical and Historical Research of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Compiled from official and trade sources.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, you will appreciate the fact that the price of spot cotton today is about 10 cents a pound, which is about 6.6 percent below parity. When we realize that the gold dollar has been devalued, I do not think we have made much progress in the way of helping the farmer. We never will reach the ideal price for cotton to give the cotton grower a square deal until he gets 25 cents a pound for his cotton. When he gets 12 cents a pound, the statisticians have estimated that the farmer is getting 12½ cents an hour for his work.

Just the other day we passed a bill in which our ideal, our goal, is 40 cents an hour for those who toil in industry; and yet, at 12 cents a pound for cotton, the farmer is getting only 12 cents an hour for his labor. Certainly he is entitled to 25 cents an hour; and in order to receive that he must get 25 cents a pound for his cotton. I say to you frankly that my ideal, my dream, is so to shape my action on the floor of the Senate in reference to farm policies and legislation that when I shall have finished my term of service here the farmer's compensation may be somewhere in the neighborhood of the compensation of those who work in industry when it comes to payment for honest and hard toil in the cotton fields of the South.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Mississippi desire to have done with the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BILBO. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, so that any correction may be made to suit the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

MEDICAL AND DENTAL OFFICERS FOR THE ARMY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2463) to authorize an additional number of medical and dental officers for the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the amendment of the House be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity; to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have certain amendments, all of which are really a result of the very profitable discussion of yesterday.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have an amendment pending, and when that is disposed of I wish to offer another one. Then I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, it is proposed to amend section 9 (a), page 45, line 3, by inserting after the word "made", the following words:

Plus one-half of 1 percent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present another amendment. This is a very important amendment, in that it assures, insofar as language can, that the undertakings of the Federal Housing Authority will be accompanied by slum-clearance projects as well as housing projects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, it is proposed, on page 46, line 3, after the word "period", to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe and insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project.

On page 48, line 21, after the word "character", insert a colon and the following:

Provided, however, That no capital grant shall be made for the development of any low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwelling units provided by the project.

On page 50, line 22, after "$25,000,000", insert a colon and the following:

And provided further, That no such projects shall be commenced in any locality unless such projects include the elimination by demolition of insanitary or unsafe dwellings in the locality or metropolitan area substantially equal in number to the number of new dwelling units provided by the project, or unless and until the appropriate governing body having jurisdiction over such locality, or the appropriate public housing agency shall enter into an agreement with the Authority under which the Authority is assured that upon the completion of such demonstration project insanitary or unsafe dwelling units in the locality or metropolitan area substantially equal in number to the number provided by such demonstration project will be eliminated by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or compulsory repair or improvement.

On page 56, strike out lines 10 to 19, inclusive, as follows:

(3) In the case of a low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, that provision is or has been made (either as a part of the project or otherwise as a condition to its initiation) for the elimination, by demolition, condemnation, effective closing, reconstruction, remodeling, or repair of unsafe or insanitary dwelling units in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, substantially equivalent in number to the new dwelling units constructed: Provided, That such elimination may be deferred in case of a shortage of housing of a low-rent character.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with respect to section 12, I have a motion to strike out the provisions as to "demonstration projects." I have conferred with the chairman of the committee, and I understand it is agreeable to him.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am proposing an amendment to the bill as it now stands, inserting several provisos, so as to make certain that slum-clearance projects will accompany the new housing projects. As the bill now stands, the substance of my amendment is in the bill, but it is made optional. My amendment makes it compulsory. Later, when the motion is made to strike out the whole paragraph, that part of my amendment which modifies it will be stricken out if the amendment prevails.

Mr. WAGNER rose.

Mr. KING. I am referring to section 12, I may say to the Senator from New York, and I have stated that I will move later to eliminate that section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desire to offer several amendments.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator desire a vote on the amendments at this time?

Mr. WAGNER. I think there will be no objection to the amendments I am about to offer. They result from the very profitable discussion yesterday, and I am attempting to perfect the bill in accordance with the fine suggestions made at that time.

The first amendment I offer merely provides that where there is a slum-clearance project, the lowest-income group shall occupy the new dwellings. Some question was raised yesterday as to whether there was definite assurance to this effect. In order to make it perfectly clear and mandatory, I am offering the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, line 10, after the word "families", it is proposed to insert the words "who are in the lowest-income group and."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from New York is of the opinion that the adoption of the amendment will strengthen the bill and accomplish the purpose we have in mind, namely, that preference in the granting of the subsidies provided for and in the occupation of the tenements erected by the local housing authorities shall go to those families of the very lowest-income groups.

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly what the amendment provides.

Mr. WALSH. There is no longer any question as to the local authority having discretionary power to choose between a large number of persons of low income, but they must choose those with the lowest incomes.

Mr. WAGNER. Those with the lowest incomes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I take it this carries out the same thought that was suggested to me, that at all times the families with low income shall have the preference.

Mr. WAGNER. My amendment is even more mandatory, because it requires the selection of the lowest-income families.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is very wise.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, does this absolutely take away all discretion from the authority having the placing of families to apply any other test than that of income? The fact that one family may have no children and another family have 6, another may have 10, one family may be engaged in an illegitimate occupation, another in a legitimate occupation, that there may be character differentials, and that there may be differentials as to things they are trying to do—all those things would be wiped out, and it is to be limited solely to the test of the lowest income?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, people of ill-repute will not be permitted to occupy the premises. The question has been raised as to whether the lowest-income group would be helped or whether the discretion would rest with the local authorities to pick from a higher stratum. This amendment merely guards against that.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator does not specify the group range. There might be a family with an income of $700, obviously in a low-income group. There might be another family with an income of $500, and another with an income of $400. The family with the income of $500 might be, upon all other bases, more entitled to consideration than the one with a $400 income. That is, the $400 income might be due to the very fault of the family themselves, dissipation or other things. I am wondering whether the Senator is proposing to absolutely tie this down so that the least able, the least competent, the least worthy may get the premises over some others who have been unfortunate but are slightly better off financially and yet in the low-income group.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment speaks for itself. It appears to be the sentiment of this body, and it is my sentiment, that those having the lowest income are those for whom we are legislating. We are not justified in spending public money for the construction of projects for the benefit of people with incomes enabling them to afford to live in buildings erected by private industry. In order that we may take care of the poorest first, we provide that those with the lowest incomes shall have the preference, and when they are disposed of, we may take care of those with the next highest incomes, and so on. Questions of character, of course, will always have consideration.

Mr. ADAMS. Why should it not be provided in the amendment, then, rather than limit the prohibition against consideration to anything but income?

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator raises a very insignificant consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator is to apply on page 35, and is an amplification of the definition of families of low income.

Mr. WAGNER. It is a limitation, I should say.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; it is a limitation. The text of the bill provides:

> The term "families of low income" means families who cannot afford to pay enough to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for their use.

That does not specify whether the families of low income are respectable people or not respectable, whether they are deserving or not deserving. All the Senator's amendment does is to cover the families who have the lowest incomes. Am I correct?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And he cannot afford to pay in excess thereof.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I understand that the word "lowest" means the lowest; that is the ones who are at the very bottom of the income field.

Mr. WAGNER. Who need help most.

Mr. PEPPER. So I suppose that all the people making $3 a month would have the first legal preference to these quarters?

Mr. WAGNER. That would depend.

Mr. PEPPER. Are we not going to run into an inconsistency there in that regard as a practical matter? As I understand, quarters costing a certain amount of money will be provided, and a subsidy will be given which will make it impossible to rent those quarters at as low a figure as they could be rented if the subsidy were not provided. The amount of the subsidy will determine what the amount of the rental shall be, will it not? That rent may be $3 a month per room, as the Senator suggested.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. If the rent as a practical matter of necessity is $3 per room per month, and the language of the bill limits the availability of all those quarters to persons who are only making $3 a month, have we not as a matter of fact practically excluded those persons? If the Senator will indulge me, I wish to ask whether it would not be better instead of saying "the lowest" to say "the lower-income group", without making it a matter of law that the tenants all be selected from the very bottom of the income brackets?

Mr. WAGNER. There are some people whom we cannot possibly reach; I mean those who have no means to pay the rent minus the subsidy. This, after all, is a renting proposition, not a complete gift.

Mr. PEPPER. If that is what the Senator means, that is not what this paragraph will say.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure it will be so interpreted, because obviously this bill cannot provide housing for those who cannot pay the rent minus the subsidy allowed.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; and yet the language, if this amendment is adopted, will limit the availability of those quarters just to those people. That is not what the Senator had in mind.

Mr. WAGNER. I doubt whether it would be so interpreted. I think it would be interpreted to mean the lowest income group that the bill can reach.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator means then, if I may inquire further, the lowest income group which is able to pay the rentals which will be required by the authorities who administer this act?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to the committee amendment, on page 35, after line 10.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. I send to the desk certain amendments which will eliminate from the bill the limited-dividend housing companies and consumers' housing societies. Yesterday the question was raised by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], and I call his attention to the fact that I am now proposing amendments which comply with his suggestions.

Mr. GILLETTE. Limited-dividend companies?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and consumers' housing societies. I agree absolutely with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. I am now offering amendments eliminating them from the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the amendments remove from the bill the possibilities of any loans being made by the United States Housing Authority to Consumers' Housing societies or to limited-dividend companies.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I stated a moment ago, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. So that the bill, with this elimination, will provide only for loans to be made by the United States Housing Authority to State or municipal agencies.

Mr. WAGNER. To public agencies.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, line 18, before the word "housing", it is proposed to insert the word "public."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 37, it is proposed to strike out lines 3 through 24, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45 it is proposed to strike out lines 6 through 19, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, in line 16, it is proposed to insert a period after the word "agency" and strike out the remainder of line 16, all of lines 17 and 18, and the word "society" in line 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, it is proposed to change paragraph (14) to paragraph (11), and change paragraph (15) to paragraph (12).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment of the committe was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] can hold the floor and have amendments voted on and adopted and business transacted. I do not understand that he can have business transacted and still hold the floor. I raise the point of order that he did not yield for any amendments to be voted on as I understand.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am raising the question as to whether the Senator from New York can hold the floor and let the Senate transact business by having the Senate agree to amendments. I raise the question whether he can do that and still hold the floor. I have no objection to the Senator having the floor, but I do not think that what is now being done is good practice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may say to the Senator from Texas that had the question been raised I believe the Senator from New York would not have concurred in that practice.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not a question of whether the Senator would have concurred or not. It is a question of parliamentary law.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I asked permission of the Senate that I might offer the amendments which were drafted as the result of our discussion yesterday, and such permission was granted.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not trying to take the Senator from New York off the floor, but I do not think that the practice that has just been indulged in is good practice in the Senate. It ought not to be done.

Mr. WAGNER. What shall I do, Mr. President? Shall I sit down and then stand up again?

Mr. CONNALLY. The point I am raising is that one Senator cannot take charge of the proceedings in the Senate and hold the floor and have amendments voted on and agreed to and still hold the floor and speak. I think the Senator yields the floor when he asks the Senate to vote on an amendment, and that he must then rise and be recognized if he wishes to make any further remarks.

Mr. WAGNER. Shall I sit down now?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator does what he pleases. I am appealing to the Chair and not to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas is technically right. After a Senator has asked for action on an amendment, and the Senate has taken action on the amendment, if he does not then address the Chair and ask for the floor he does not have the floor. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] addressed the Chair first after the Senate had taken action on an amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I claim the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. COPELAND. I thought I was going to have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has ruled that the Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not want to offend against any rule of the Senate. If it is the direction of the Chair that at each instance after an amendment is acted upon I shall take my seat and then try to get the floor again I shall do so, but I understood permission had been granted to me to make offer of certain perfecting amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The practice which was just followed has been the invariable practice of the body. Nevertheless, when a Senator offers an amendment and action is taken on the amendment, and he then does not address the Chair for the purpose of getting the floor, and some other Senator addresses the Chair first, that other Senator is recognized and has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The objection made by the Senator from Texas is that he has not had an opportunity to speak upon a pending amendment, and it seems to me that his objection is well taken. The Senator from New York has a right to offer an amendment, but the Senator from Texas has the right to be recognized to speak on it.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not make any point on that, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas, under the strict ruling, has the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to know what is the difference between a strict ruling and any other kind of ruling. The Chair says I am technically right. What is the difference between being technically right and right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will answer that parliamentary inquiry by saying that before the Senator from Texas got the floor the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] had had the floor and had offered two perfecting amendments. It was agreed that he might do so, and that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] could then offer his perfecting amendments.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] offered his amendments, and then the junior Senator from New York offered certain perfecting amendments. After the amendments of the Senator from New York had been acted upon the Senator from Texas addressed the Chair and was recognized. Under the ordinary custom the Chair might state that the Senator from New York would not have been interfered with, and would have finished his presentation of his perfecting amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to make a reply to a previous parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from New York for a question.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not want to take the Senator off his feet. Is the Senator going to read all those books?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not all of them.

Mr. COPELAND. If so, I shall make my speech tomorrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall not read all of them.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator think it is safe for the Senator from New York to leave the floor now?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is dangerous to the welfare of the country, but personally it is safe.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield to me to put some matter in the RECORD?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield for a question.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator yield for the purpose of having an editorial inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield; but I do not think it is good practice for Senators to interrupt a Senator when he is speaking, in order to put things in the RECORD, because Senators can do that just before we conclude our session. However, I yield. I do not commend as a good practice in the Senate to interrupt a Senator's speech in order to put a newspaper article in the RECORD. That can be done most anytime. However, I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. I thought the Senator from Texas yielded to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I had yielded to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Then the Senator took me off the floor by yielding to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator from Pennsylvania was merely going to make a request that some matter be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose I do that?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is all right with me.

(At this point Mr. COPELAND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum on the partition of Palestine, which appears in the Appendix.)

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask one question, and then I will sit down. I should like to ask my leader whether it will be possible to take up Senate bill No. 2 sometime during the present week? It has to do with certain aviation agencies.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to save the leader any embarrassment, and I decline to yield for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. The RECORD will show that I made the inquiry, and I am much obliged to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The RECORD will show that the Senator was interested in the subject and wanted information but could not get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania still want to put an article in the RECORD? If so, I yield.

(At this point Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Evening Star and an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer, which appear in the Appendix.)

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. With the permission of the Senator from Texas, I should like to propose to be inserted at the proper place in the pending bill an amendment which reads as follows:

This act shall expire 2 years after the approval thereof: Provided, however, That all contracts entered into and all commitments made with the Board shall be carried out by such agency or authority as the Congress may designate.

I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I offer an amendment to the pending bill which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

APPOINTMENTS OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICES

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Chair, in ruling that the Senator from Texas is entitled to the floor, seemed rather to imply that, while he is entitled to it, he ought not to have it, or to the effect that it was not courteous because the Senator from Texas was not in the Chamber when the transaction took place. The Senator from Texas is not caring so much about the floor for himself at the present moment, but what provoked his inquiry was his conviction that the business of the Senate was not being transacted according to parliamentary practice and rules but was, to use a slang expression, "sort of being sloppily done." I never have seen in the House of Representatives or even in a State legislature one member get the floor and hold it all day and have amendments adopted in the middle of his speech and go right on with his speech. That is what I was objecting to. I was not objecting to the Senator from New York. I have very great admiration and personal esteem for him, but I think that when measures are under consideration, other Senators have a right to address the Senate. So that is why I was invoking the rule.

Mr. WAGNER. I would never undertake to deprive the Senator of any opportunity to speak.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure of that. I do not blame the Senator from New York. It is perfectly natural for Senators, just like ordinary people, to want all they can get [laughter], and if they have the floor to keep it until they get through with it. That is perfectly all right. But the rest of us, who are on the outside looking in, wanting the floor just as badly as the Senator from New York, feel that we ought to have it now and then.

Mr. President, yesterday I submitted some remarks to the Senate on the so-called Vandenberg resolution in relation to the nomination to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court. I had not had opportunity at that time to consult the precedents or the Court decisions. My position was violently assailed by Senators on both sides of the Chamber. I wish to cite certain precedents, however, at the present moment, but I shall not take up much time, and those who want to speak may soon have the floor, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. President, the precedents on this subject arose as early as the administration of President Monroe. Attorney General William Wirt made a ruling at that time, holding that a recess appointment may be made by the President just as other appointments may be made. I am not going to read all the rulings, but I do wish to read from one by Attorney General Taney, rendered July 19, 1832. I shall not read it all. It related to the appointment of a register of the Land Office in the State of Mississippi.

The facts in the case, I understand, to be these: After the adjournment of Congress, on the 3d of March, 1831, and before their meeting in December of the same year, a vacancy occurred in the above-mentioned office of register, and Samuel Gwinn was appointed to fill it. During the late session of Congress he was regularly nominated to the Senate, and rejected by them. The President having afterward received strong testimonials in his favor from the State of Mississippi, and being requested by one of the Senators from that State to renominate him, his name was again sent to the Senate, with the additional recommendations which had been forwarded to the President. The second nomination was made on the 11th of June last. It was considered on the 10th of July, and laid on the table. And on the 16th of July, the last day of the session, the following resolution was moved and considered:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be informed that it is not the intention of the Senate to take any proceeding on the renomination of Samuel Gwinn to be register of the Land Office at Mount Salus, in Mississippi, during the present session."

This resolution was ordered to lie on the table; and the Senate adjourned without taking any further order in the matter.

In this state of things, can the President, during the recess, appoint Mr. Gwinn, or anyone else, to the office before mentioned?

Omitting a paragraph that is not pertinent—

The Constitution gives him the right "to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."

The appointment of Mr. Gwinn during the last recess "filled up" the vacancy which had then happened, and the office remained full; and there was no vacancy, from the time of the appointment and acceptance, until the close of the late session. The nomination made not being confirmed by the Senate, the commission granted by the President expired at the end of the session; and the moment after it closed, the office again became vacant. This was a new vacancy.

Has this second vacancy happened during the recess of the Senate, so as to authorize the President to fill it, under the grant of power contained in the article of the Constitution above referred to?

It has, I know, been contended that, in order to enable the President to make the appointment, the vacancy must take place during the recess; in other words, that the office must be full at the time of the adjournment of the Senate and become vacant afterward.

I cannot think that this is the true interpretation of the article in question. The Constitution was formed for practical purposes, and a construction that defeats the very object of the grant of power cannot be the true one. It was the intention of the Constitution that the offices created by law, and necessary to carry on the operations of the Government, should always be full, or, at all events, that the vacancy should not be a protracted one. A government cannot go on, nor accomplish the purposes for which it is established, without having the services of proper officers to execute the various duties required by law. To guard against any abuse of the appointing power by the President, the approbation of the Senate is required. But as it was foreseen that, from the various contingencies and uncertainties to which human affairs are liable, vacancies might be found to exist, during the recess of the Senate, in offices which the public interest required to be filled, the power above mentioned was given to the President in order to provide against the evil of requiring a vacancy to continue in every case until the Senate could be convened, and the further evil of calling them together upon every one of the vacancies which might unexpectedly be found to exist during the recess. But the control of the Senate over appointments to such vacancies is effectually preserved by the limited term for which the President is authorized to make them.

Suppose an officer to die in a distant part of the United States and his death not be known at Washington until after the adjournment, must the office remain vacant until the Senate can be convened? It is admitted by everyone that the President may appoint in such cases, and the practice of the Government has continually conformed to that construction. But if the Constitution required that the office should be full at the time of the adjournment, and that the vacancy should take place afterward, then the President could not appoint; for, in the cases above mentioned, the vacancy happens during the session and the office is not full at the time of the adjournment. It becomes vacant the moment the incumbent dies; and the notice does nothing more than inform the President that a vacancy has happened; and it informs him at the same time that it took place while the Senate was in session, and not during the recess.

I am aware that it has been said that in these cases the vacancy must be regarded as happening when the notice of the death is received; and that, therefore, such a vacancy is to be considered as happening after the adjournment and during the recess. But how can it be so considered in opposition to the admitted fact? There are no words in the Constitution that justify such an interpretation. It does not speak of the notice of a vacancy, but of the existence of a vacancy. It does not say if a vacancy shall become known, but if a vacancy shall "happen"; and if the words of the Constitution give the power to fill those vacancies only which take place after the adjournment, then the vacancies I have just mentioned could not be filled.

I shall not read all the opinion, but go now to the pertinent part:

It is manifest, however, that the Constitution could not have intended to place such cases on a different footing from vacancies which occur after the adjournment. There is no reason for a distinction between them. And the words used in the Constitution do not, I think, by any fair construction, require a distinction to be taken. It was intended to provide for those vacancies which might arise from accident, and the contingencies to which human affairs must always be liable. And if it falls out that, from death, inadvertence, or mistake an office required by law to be filled is, in the recess, found to be vacant, then a vacancy has happened during the recess, and the President may fill it. This appears to be the common sense and natural import of the words used. They mean the same thing as if the Constitution had said, "If there happened to be any vacancies during the recess." The framers of the Constitution had provided for filling the offices with the concurrence of the Senate; but, foreseeing that, from the various casualties to which human concerns are exposed, vacancies would be found during the recess, they give power to fill them until an opportunity can be afforded of bringing the appointments before the Senate; and they use words which denote the character of the vacancies which they foresee may occur, and for which they are providing. He may fill up vacancies which "happen" during the recess. But vacancies are not designedly to be kept open by the President until the recess, for the purpose of avoiding the control of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I did not get the full import of that sentence. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes; the Senator did, but he did not think some other Senators did. The Senator from Nebraska got the full import because he has already read it. He has been waiting until I reached that point to ask the question. However, I shall read it again:

But vacancies are not designedly to be kept open by the President until the recess, for the purpose of avoiding the control of the Senate.

I shall read it again:

But vacancies are not designedly to be kept open by the President until the recess, for the purpose of avoiding the control of the Senate.

It does not matter how long the President holds up the appointments. He cannot avoid the control of the Senate because whenever the Senate convenes it can reject or confirm, so that he cannot avoid it in any event.

And the word "happen"—

I invite the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to this line also—

And the word "happen" is used to describe the class and kind of vacancies, and not the particular time at which they took place.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I came in after the Senator began. May I ask him what he is reading?

Mr. CONNALLY. From the opinion of Attorney General Taney, with which the Senator from Idaho is no doubt familiar.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief statement?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. During the course of my debate with the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] this morning, I adverted to the case of Mr. Justice Pitney. Upon reflection and examination, I believe that case could not be used as a precedent, because I find Justice Pitney resigned and did not retire. I thank the Senator from Texas for giving me the opportunity to correct my own erroneous impression under which I labored at that time.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Arizona is always welcome to interrupt the Senator from Texas.

I might suggest another case, showing the restricted construction contended for cannot be the one contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. Suppose a nomination made to a vacant office, and confirmed by the Senate: the office is not full until the person appointed accepts. Suppose he refuses to accept, and his refusal is not known until after the adjournment: In such a case, the original vacancy would remain unfilled; and as it took place during the session, and not after the adjournment, the President could not fill it. It cannot be imagined that such cases were intended to be excepted out of the power granted to him.

It has been said that this power, if possessed by the President, may be so used as to defeat the intention of the Constitution, and exclude the Senate from all share in appointments. The answer to such an objection appears to be a plain one. If the President willfully abuses a power given to him, the Constitution has provided a remedy. In this case, the Senate have had a full opportunity of acting, but have not acted, and have held the nomination under advisement, and left it to fall vacant as soon as they adjourned. They must be supposed to have had sufficient reasons for keeping the nomination in their power, and suspending their action upon it. The President could not nominate another person for the same office until this was disposed of, and was either withdrawn by him or finally acted on by the Senate. And as the Senate had had an opportunity of asking, but have determined to suspend the decision, I cannot see how an appointment now made by the President can be supposed to interfere with the rights of the Senate. There is nothing in the case that can be construed into a desire to avoid their constitutional control.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to get some information. The constitutional provision is that—

The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

My inquiry is, assuming the President had the right to make an appointment during the recess, regardless of when the vacancy happened or occurred, could the President allow the appointee to hold, without making a report to the Senate, until the end of the next session? It seems to me the literal meaning of the Constitution would permit the President to make an appointment during the recess, assuming it was a proper recess appointment, and not report the appointment to the Senate under the language of the Constitution, so the appointee would hold until the end of the next session, and then we would have no vacancy and the President could continue the process.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think he could continue it. I have not investigated the precedents on that point, but the Constitution contemplates that when he makes a recess appointment, as soon as the Senate convenes he shall transmit that nomination to the Senate. If the Senate rejects it, the appointee is out. He cannot continue even until the end of that session.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the opportunity exist to decline or omit sending the appointment to the Senate, so that the appointee would continue to hold until the end of the ensuing sessions of the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that that is a possibility, but the Congress ought not to assume that the President is going to do what would be a palpable violation of his duty. If the President makes a recess appointment, he ought to send that appointment to the Senate the first day it convenes; and if he does not he will lay himself open to the suspicion that he is trying to evade his responsibility and trying to avoid submitting his nomination for confirmation to the Senate, where the Constitution says it ought to be submitted. That is my answer to the Senator.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. But if that circumstance should arise the Senator from Texas takes the position that it would not be proper for any Senator to raise any point about that, because the sending of nominations to the Senate is the sole duty of the Executive, and no Senator ought to give any thought to that matter. Is that true?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not opposed to thought by Senators. In fact, I favor it; but what the Senator from Texas is undertaking to say is that we have no right to undertake to coerce or intimidate the President into making a nomination. If he appoints a man during the recess, the appointee cannot draw a dollar from the Treasury until he is confirmed by the Senate, and so he never would get any salary until the Senate confirmed him. I do not think the President would want to appoint a man, and I do not know many men who would want to accept the job, if he would not get any compensation until the Senate finally confirmed him. That is the law, is it not? I will ask the Senator from Nebraska whether that is not the law.

Mr. BURKE. The law or the precedents?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am talking about the statute law. The statute law—the act of 1869, I think it is—is that when a person is appointed in recess he cannot draw any salary until he is confirmed. After all, there is the power of Congress—the power of the purse, the control of money.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to answer a little more fully the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I will defer to my colleague.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield, then, to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am interested in the statement just made by the Senator from Texas. Not having hand an opportunity recently to consult the statutes, I am inclined to doubt the correctness of the Senator's statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Wyoming is on the Appropriations Committee; and if he does not know about the matter, he ought to find out. I am not on the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but it is not the Appropriations Committee which provides for the payment of detailed salaries. The Appropriations Committee appropriates a fund to take care of all salaries.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that that was the law. Whether or not it has been repealed, I do not know.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think it is a matter which should be investigated. I am under the impression that the law now is that a person appointed in recess may not draw salary after the adjournment of the next succeeding Senate, but he will certainly draw salary from the moment he obtains his commission to fill up the vacancy.

Mr. CONNALLY. If he served to the end of the Congress without being confirmed and then was reappointed, he would be another recess appointee; and why would not the same law to which the Senator refers apply? He would not get any money until the end of the next Congress.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But the Appropriations Committee upon numerous occasions has written into the law provisions to make certain that that shall not be done.

I am glad the Senator has now obtained the law. I think it will be illuminating.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has had the law all the time, but it is not his duty to go around and speak on the law. Here is what the law says; and a man on the Appropriations Committee ought to be advised about the safeguards on the Treasury.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I always learn from the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I am not addressing the Senator in anything but the best of humor.

The act of June 7, 1924, says:

> No money shall be paid from the Treasury as salary to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate, to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any person appointed as an original member of the Board of Tax Appeals, if such appointment was made prior to December 1, 1924.

Does the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] wish me to yield now?

Mr. ASHURST. No, Mr. President; the Senator has covered the point I was going to make.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The statute which the Senator has just read, of course, applies to the particular case which we are now discussing. It is not the rule which applies, as I understand, to general recess appointments; but so far as any discussion that is now engaging the attention of the Senate is concerned, of course, that is the controlling provision.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not advised as to all the statutes. I never try to learn much about the statutes, because I can look in the book and find out what the statutes are. I have tried to learn the general principles of law.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. What the able Senator read is, of course, existing law. There are a few exceptions—I think, three or four.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator to explain them.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no; but the exceptions do not apply to the instant case.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Therefore, Mr. President, the appointee in either case—the case suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] or the case suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE]—will not get any salary until he is confirmed by the Senate. I cannot conceive of a President appointing a man in recess and then not sending his name to the Senate for a whole session. I cannot conceive of any President doing that—not when he has a friendly Senate to deal with, as the President has in this case.

Mr. President, I desire to be very brief and conclude this opinion.

Speaking of Judge Taney, he cites a case under President John Adams, the case of Amos Binney. President Adams must have proceeded on the same conclusion that I have given as to the construction of the Constitution. The opinion says:

> The commission of Amos Binney, as Navy agent of the port of Boston, expired by operation of law February 15, 1825, during the session of Congress. He was nominated for the same office February 28, 1825. The session closed on the 3d of March, and the Senate adjourned without acting on the nomination. They were convened on the 4th of March, 1825, by the summons of the President; and on the 7th Mr. Binney was again nominated. On the 9th, this nomination was postponed by the Senate to the first Monday in December following; and they adjourned on the same day, leaving this vacancy unfilled. On the 22d of March 1825, during the recess, Mr. Binney was appointed by the President to the office above mentioned.
> Here, then, was a vacancy which occurred during the session; was known to have taken place; was left unfilled at the close of the session; and was afterward during the recess filled up by the President. I know of no precedent in favor of the opposite construction.

Mr. President, I shall not quote other rulings; but that ruling of the Attorney General has been followed in a long list of similar rulings:

H. S. Legare, Attorney General under Tyler (3 Op. 673).

J. Y. Mason, Attorney General under Polk (4 Op. 523).

C. Cushing, Attorney General under Pierce (7 Op. 187).

Edward Bates, Attorney General under Lincoln (10 Op. 356).

James Speed, Attorney General under Lincoln (11 Op. 179).

W. H. H. Miller, Attorney General under Harrison (19 Op. 261).

Mr. President, I have here two decisions of the Federal courts. I shall not read them, but I desire to quote from them.

In the matter of Henry P. Farrow and John S. Bigby, claimants of the office of United States attorney for the district of Georgia, Third Federal Reporter (1st series) 112, it was held:

> The phrase "vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate", found in section 2, article II, of the Constitution, and section 1769 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing the President to fill vacancies in office, means "vacancies that may happen to exist during the recess of the Senate."

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BURKE. The general power to make appointments is contained in paragraph 2 of section 2, and then follows subsection 3, from which the Senator has just read. Is not subsection 3 in the nature of a limitation on the broad power before stated, and must it not be strictly construed? If that is the rule, by what authority is the Senator able to add two words in order to make his meaning, so that "vacancy that may happen" really means a vacancy that may happen to exist?

Mr. CONNALLY. I was reading a decision of the court, I think, of a circuit court.

Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that I do not regard the last paragraph of section 2, article II, as being a limitation on the preceding paragraph. It might have been more skillfully drawn. If the makers of the Constitution had foreseen all the possibilities of construction in cases that might arise, they might have written it so that it would have been a little clearer. But my view is that the third paragraph was at least an effort to add to the preceding paragraph, and to provide in the second paragraph that the President should have the power by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They evidently contemplated that he would make such appointments while the Senate was in session. But someone says, "Wait a minute. That is all right so far as it goes, but suppose some of the vacancies exist during a recess? Shall we add another clause 'if they occur during a recess'?" It was probably an afterthought, an afterthought of some delegate who was cautious and wise and wanted to provide against some contingency. At least, that is what the Court says was the origin of it.

Mr. President, I desire to conclude. I have read one decision of the circuit court. I have here another one—in Twenty-eighth Federal Reporter, first series, page 445, the case of In re Yancy, where the Court held:

> Although the vacancy first happen during a session of the Senate, if it continue to exist during the subsequent recess, the President has power to fill it up, under the Constitution of the United States, article II, section 2, clause 3.

That answers the Senator from Nebraska as to clause 3.

Yancy had been appointed marshal of the United States for the western district of Tennessee.

I also wish to cite a textbook on constitutional law, Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States. This is what Mr. Willoughby says:

> By article II, section 2, of the Constitution, the President is given the power "to fill all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."
> The only constitutional controversy which has arisen with reference to this provision is as to when a vacancy may be said to have "happened" during a recess of the Senate, and therefore to have furnished an opportunity for a Presidential appointment.
> There are no decisions of the Supreme Court which bear upon this point, though there have been a considerable number of opinions of the Attorney General regarding it, and there has been the practice, in the premises, by the President. The circumstances attending one of the recess appointments may be mentioned.
> In 1902 a vacancy in the office of the collector of customs at Charleston, S. C., occurred during a recess of the Senate. During the next sitting of the Senate the President sent in the nomination of one William D. Crum for the office, but the Senate adjourned without acting upon it. When the Senate reconvened the nomination was again sent in, and again the Senate adjourned without action thereupon. The President then issued a temporary commission to Mr. Crum as collector, who took the oath of office and entered upon the discharge of his official duties but without receiving any compensation. The Senate having again convened in special session, Mr. Crum's nomination was again sent in. That session ended at noon on December 7, 1903, and at noon of the same day the regular session began. At that instant, Mr. Crum was again given a temporary commission as collector by President Roosevelt on the theory that the appointment was made during a "constructive recess" of the Senate, that is, during the constructive period of time between the ending of the special session and the beginning of the regular session of the Senate. In response to a resolution of inquiry on the part of the Senate the Secretary of the Treasury replied that Mr. Crum had taken office, was functioning as such, and that the question whether or not he was de jure as well as de facto in office was one for determination by the courts and by them only. In response to protests on the part of certain Senators that there had been no real recess during which a temporary appointment could be constitutionally made, a letter was sent to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate by Mr. Root, then Secretary of War, in which he called attention to the fact that similar recess appointments in the Regular Army had been made. In this letter he said that there were two possible views of the situation occurring when one session of the Senate ends and another immediately begins: either that the special session did not end at all but was merged in the regular session (which view he was inclined to accept) or that a constructive recess intervened between the two sessions. As to this second view he said: "There can be no end of a session until a time is reached when there is no session, and the time when there is no session is a recess. The recess may be called 'constructive' but is no more constructive than the end of a session which is assumed to happen. A constructive end involves a constructive recess. A real end involves a real recess. Necessarily, a vacancy caused by the expiration of a commission at the end of a session happens in the recess caused by the end of the session, and it is within the constitutional power of the President to fill up such vacancy." In other words, then, there was, in either case, a recess, if not real, then constructive, if not constructive, then real. In result no action was taken by the Senate.
> SEC. 989. DO VACANCIES "HAPPEN" WHEN THEY OCCUR DURING A SESSION OF THE SENATE?
> It has been contended that the constitutional provision regarding the granting of commissions by the President during recesses of the Senate does not apply when such vacancies occur while the Senate is in session, and which might therefore have been filled by the making of regular nominations by the President. The practice of a long line of Presidents, together with opinions of Attorneys General, support the view that this may be done. To the contention that such vacancies do not "happen" during the recess, the reply has been that the Constitution provision means "happen to exist" for any reason while the Senate is not in session.

Mr. President, I shall not encumber the RECORD with the reading of other cases and other authorities, but I think I may safely say that the overwhelming mass of precedents and the overwhelming weight of judicial opinion sustains the view that whether a vacancy actually happened during a session, or may happen after a session, the President may fill the vacancy during the recess by making a temporary appointment.

I desired to put these matters into the RECORD in order to fortify the position which I took yesterday.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Is the Senator able to say whether the authorities upon which he relies are the same, in extent, as those upon which the Attorney General relies, or does he have no information on that?

Mr. CONNALLY. Frankly, I will say to the Senator, I do not know what the Attorney General has in the way of authorities.

I called his office, and he said that the matter was included in a memorandum to the President which was of a confidential nature, and he could not give me a copy. So the Senator from Texas has had to look to other than the Department of Justice for his information.

Mr. BURKE. My only reason for making the inquiry is that, as the Senator will freely admit, I am sure, there are precedents on the other side.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure of that.

Mr. BURKE. And reasoning which ought to be presented, and at the appropriate time, unless someone else takes the opportunity of doing so, I will be glad to present the other side of the case.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it will be well presented if it is presented by the Senator from Nebraska. I am aware of the fact that there are, of course, precedents and decisions on the other side. A question upon which there is no divergence of view usually is a question of no importance whatever. Anything on which everybody agrees does not amount to much in this world.

I thank the Senate for its attention.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistahce to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to state the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill. There are no amendments pending.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator from New York will yield for the purpose, I desire to offer an amendment. I shall not discuss it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks the senior Senator from New York if he will yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for the purpose the Senator suggests.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On line 25, page 39, it is proposed to strike out "officers, attorneys, and experts" and in lieu thereof to insert "attorneys, and, under regulations to be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission, of such officers and experts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I may say that I am in favor of the amendment, but I desire to point out that I think it is the most restrictive provision yet offered to us on the question of appointments. Am I correct about that?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator exaggerates just a little. The amendment was drawn for the purpose of placing in the proposed statute the procedure which is now followed. There was a ruling of the Comptroller General with respect to the characterization of "experts", giving a definition of what constitutes an expert, and the amendment is offered merely to write that definition into the statute.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure it will improve the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not wish to interfere with my colleague, if he would rather go ahead with his bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to do so, unless the Senator feels that he wants to press his matter now.

Mr. COPELAND. I am much distressed about the term "United States Housing Authority" because of its effect upon the alley work, and I suggest to my colleague that he broaden the term "public housing agency" just a bit. The term "public housing agency" is defined to mean any governmental entity or public body, including any State, county, or municipality. In that way the term will take care of this organization in the District, which otherwise would not be taken care of; and the argument is this:

The Alley Dwelling Authority for the District of Columbia, being an agency created by act of Congress, would, it seems, be excluded by the definition of a "public housing agency" as used in the bill, which contemplates that the public housing agency shall derive its authority from a State. Though the District of Columbia is specifically mentioned under the definition of the word "State" on page 14, it is said that this has no bearing, as the District of Columbia is merely an administrative agency of Congress, which exercises exclusive legislative jurisdiction within the District. This condition could be remedied by changing the position of the word "State" as I have indicated.

Does what I have said appeal to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should want to consider that suggestion, because I do not want to make the term so broad as that. It might invite quasi-public corporations to come under the act. I should be perfectly willing to have this particular agency indicated, because it was created by Federal statute. I shall confer with the Senator, and I think we can agree upon an amendment which will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. WAGNER. I have no desire, of course, to exclude the District of Columbia; but we must be very careful about our definition.

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall ask that the amendment which I suggested be printed so that it may be understood, and I shall give a memorandum concerning it to the very able chairman of the District Committee of the Senate.

I now ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a statement concerning the amendment, at the end of which the amendment appears.

There being no objection, the statement and amendment were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Alley Dwelling Authority for the District of Columbia, being an agency created by act of Congress, would, I am informed by counsel, be excluded by the definition of a public-housing agency (sec. 2 (10), p. 36, line 23), which contemplates that the public-housing agency shall derive its authority from a State. Though the District of Columbia is specifically mentioned under the definition of the word "State" (14, p. 38, lines 1–3), this, I am informed, has no bearing as the District of Columbia is merely an administrative agency of Congress, which exercises exclusive legislative jurisdiction. This condition could be remedied by changing the position of the words "State, county, municipality", so the definition will read:

"(10) The term 'public housing agency' means any governmental entity or public body, including any State, county, or municipality, but excluding the authority which is authorized to engage in the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum clearance."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer another amendment in connection with a question raised by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] yesterday; namely that as the bill was drawn, while the directors were made subject to removal only for cause, the same provision was not made as to the administrator. I am offering an amendment to treat all equally, and also to reduce the number of members from five to three. I think three will be amply sufficient to administer this law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, it is proposed to strike out line 11 through and including line 25, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(b) The powers of the Authority shall be vested in a Board of Directors (hereinafter referred to as the Board) composed of an Administrator and two Directors. The Administrator and the two Directors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance, but for no other cause. One of the three original members of the Board shall serve for a term of 1 year, one for a term of 3 years, and one for a term of 5 years, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 5 years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed.

On page 39, in line 17, it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "two."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] whether he has consulted the majority leader with respect to this amendment. I am under the impression that an amendment was to be offered this afternoon to provide that the Housing Authority shall be under the general jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WAGNER. That amendment will come a little later on. I have the amendment on my desk.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator what the effect of that amendment will be upon this provision, because here we are providing for the appointment by the President of the Administrator and two directors, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. We will not change that provision by the amendment which will be offered later. That amendment, which our leader and I have under consideration, simply provides that the administrator and the board shall be responsible to and subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior; but the appointment of the members of the board remains in the President, like the appointment of the members of any other boards.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I then inquire of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to what extent it is proposed that the supervision of the Secretary shall extend?

Before the Senator answers, let me point out that in this bill we go to considerable lengths to define the powers and duties of the administrator and of the directors, and then by this amendment it is suggested that nevertheless they shall operate under the supervision of the Secretary. Does the Senator propose to define to what extent that supervision shall go?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course I did not draft this amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that the Senator did not.

Mr. WAGNER. But those who drafted it were satisfied with it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to say that I am in complete sympathy with the proposal. I think it is a part of the general scheme of reorganization, and that the proposed amendment should be adopted; but it does seem to me that we should have clearly in mind what the authority will be respectively of the head of the Department and of the Administrator and the directors.

Mr. WAGNER. I see your point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York does not change that situation. It simply reduces the number of directors. Under the bill, however, the four directors and the administrator must be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. If the amendment that is to be offered a little later is adopted, the same sort of jurisdiction will be provided that was provided the other day in the farm-tenancy bill, when we created in the Department of Agriculture a board to be under the general supervision of and to be responsible to the Secretary of Agriculture. It is difficult to go through the bill and outline each sentence so as to specify just what sort of supervision the Secretary of the Interior has; but the words "responsible" and "supervision", as applied to the Secretary of the Interior and this board, contemplate that the Secretary is to have general supervision over the board's activities, and that on any major matter that is contemplated, the board would have to secure his approval.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall trespass upon the time of the Senator from New York for just a moment more. The thought occurs to me that the reorganization bill, which is before the committee of which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is a member, contemplates that the independent agencies of the Government shall be grouped under the executive departments, but only with respect to what have been called their housekeeping functions; that is to say, with respect to appropriations and personnel and the like.

Mr. BARKLEY. That applies to the so-called quasi-judicial independent agencies, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and others.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. But as to the vast number of unrelated independent agencies, which perform no quasi-judicial functions, if we should pass a reorganization bill and they should be reallocated among the departments, they would, I assume, have the same status in those departments that divisions and bureaus now have which are under the jurisdiction of a Cabinet member.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would it not be the thought of the Senator from Kentucky that the housing administrator and the directors should be free to exercise all functions conveyed to them by this bill, but that the supervisory authority of the Secretary should be confined to so-called housekeeping functions?

Mr. BARKLEY. Frankly, I do not think so in this particular, because the duties here are almost wholly administrative. There already exists in the Department of the Interior a housing division, as we all know, which has functioned well. It has heretofore been engaged and is now engaged in slum-clearance work and in the carrying on of housing projects. They have an accumulation of experience and information that undoubtedly would be of great service to this new agency. It occurred to some of us, inasmuch as we have gone on for years creating independent agencies and setting them up without any responsibility to anybody, a situation which is responsible for the fact that we are asked to pass a reorganization bill, that now as we are creating new agencies we might ourselves allocate them to some department, because one of the criticisms being made against the reorganization bill is that Congress itself is not doing the reorganization, but is authorizing the President to do it.

I think the time has come when, in creating new agencies, instead of setting them loose to float around under their own steam, Congress ought to put them under some department, and not turn them loose to contribute to the complexity and confusion of the situation which calls for the reorganization measure.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The question I am propounding is whether or not, under the amendment which it is proposed to offer, we are in fact conveying to the Secretary of the Interior all the powers and duties and responsibilities which by this bill are invested in the administrator and the directors. In other words, the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints an administrator and two directors, and then, assuming the other amendment shall be adopted, if the Secretary of the Interior decides those three individuals, independently confirmed, are not exercising their functions and performing their duties as he would like to have them exercised and performed, he may cause them to abandon a course upon which they may have entered after full consideration.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, there is some slight ambiguity as to what "subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior" means. Personally I had preferred, and those who have been interested in the legislation have preferred, an independent agency. I think an agency of this kind would be more efficient if it were an independent agency. And there is much in what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] says. I have laid the amendment aside for the moment in order to confer with the majority leader upon that very point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Inasmuch as the amendment is not now pending we might defer further discussion of it until it is reached.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My discussion of the amendment may be a little premature.

Mr. WAGNER. But it is very useful.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to read the reorganization bill with a view to determining what powers and functions it is desired and designed to give the heads of the various departments. Then I shall confer with the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York with respect to succeeding amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course the directors are given the function of formulating the policy and the administrator is to do the actual executive work. Whatever amendment may be adopted ought not to paralyze these individuals in their work.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course we could change the bill so as to provide that a housing authority should be created with the Department of the Interior and that the Secretary of the Interior should appoint an administrator for it; but inasmuch as we are seeking to create a board to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, it seems that it presents a little different situation from that where we simply create a bureau within a department and provide that the Secretary of the department is authorized to make all appointments.

In this bill we provide that the Senate shall have a part in the appointments, and I think that provision should be retained because we are committing ourselves to the appropriation of quite a large sum of money over a period of years. I think it is not necessary for the Senate to give up its function in the appointment, so as to provide for these officers or the board of directors and the administrator to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. There are many things in which they can coordinate their work, and we have the housing experience in the Interior Department so as to make both of them more efficient.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I quite agree with the Senator from Kentucky on that point. My thought was simply that the supervisory authority of the Secretary ought to be limited to questions arising out of the Budget, for example, what we have called the housekeeping functions of the independent commissions and authorities. As a matter of fact, that is all the President's committee has recommended, and that is one of the purposes of the consolidation. It seems to me we might confine it to that.

Mr. WAGNER. I think there ought at least to be a limit upon the supervisory power.

Mr. BARKLEY. We can confer about it before tomorrow and agree on the matter.

Mr. WAGNER. Was the amendment adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, before the amendment is adopted I have a suggestion to offer. In the enumerated causes for removal I think the word "incompetence" should be added.

Mr. WAGNER. I have no objection to that. I have used the words which are usual in the laws we have enacted.

Mr. McADOO. I think the provision should be broadened to that extent, because incompetence is one of the most frequent difficulties with which we have to deal.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. May I ask the Senator a question on that point? In the case of nominations by the President and confirmed by the Senate, is it not going a little far to insert in the bill a provision that the appointee may be removed for incompetency? Is not their competence presumed upon their confirmation? Competent men might well get into the habit of neglect of duty.

Mr. McADOO. When we confirm a man we presume that he is competent, but it very frequently develops that he is hopelessly incompetent, and I think that is one of the causes for removal which should be included.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York accept the amendment of the Senator from California?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from California desires to add to my amendment the word "incompetence." I accept the modification.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall oppose the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee, after the words "malfeasance in office", it is proposed to insert the words "or incompetence", so as to make the sentence read:

> The Administrator and the two directors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office or incompetence, but for no other cause.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the words "or incompetence" may be eliminated entirely. Does the Senator from New York accept the amendment of the Senator from California?

Mr. WAGNER. I am in a very agreeable mood, and I see no serious objection to adding the word "incompetency."

Mr. McADOO. It will be necessary to have hearings to determine the basis for the charges, and I think incompetence should be considered as one of the causes for which a man may be haled before the board.

Mr. KING. What body would determine the incompetence of a member of the board?

Mr. McADOO. There is a provision for that in the amendment itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on that question.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I wish to hold the floor, but I yield for a question.

Mr. BURKE. It seems to me that, if we are to vest the President with authority to remove these members, we might as well eliminate this section altogether and let the President remove them at will. If the authority to remove is limited to neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, there is something upon which to stand; but if we put in the general statement that a member of this board may be removed for incompetence, there is no need for notice and hearing, and no need at all for the Senate to go to the trouble of acting in confirmation of the nominations of any of these men.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I inquire whether we are not wasting time on this question? As I recollect the Myers case, the Supreme Court of the United States said that whenever power is vested in the President to make an appointment, except a judicial appointment or a quasi-judicial appointment, he has the right to remove the appointee at any time, without notice and without cause, and that Congress cannot put limitations on that power.

Mr. BURKE. That case must be considered in connection with the Humphrey case, in which the language construed by that tribunal was the same as in this measure originally—that members of the Federal Trade Commission could be removed only for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. The removal was made without the allegation of either of those two things, and the Supreme Court unanimously said that the removal was illegal. It is to avoid exactly that situation that I object most seriously to including incompetence as a ground of removal.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, in that case the removal was based upon a statement in the President's own letter, as I recall, that Humphrey was not in sympathy with the President's policy. That is a very different thing from incompetence. Frequently we find in office incompetent men whom we have no way of removing. If we are going to specify the reasons or causes for which a man may be removed, I think the President's power ought not to be limited in any way in this case any more than in all the other cases.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say that the Senator from Colorado is correct and the Senator from Nebraska is correct. If the Senator wants to give the President full power to remove, let us not put in any clause at all. Just let the President remove.

Mr. McADOO. I agree with the Senator fully.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the Congress, in the exercise of its constitutional power to create these offices and define their duties, puts in the statute, as it did in the Federal Trade Commission Act, that the members may be removed only for cause or incompetence, the President is limited to those causes, and he has to establish those reasons; but if we do not put in any such requirement, he may remove the officials at will, because the power of appointment includes the power to remove and appoint somebody else.

Mr. McADOO. There is no doubt about the correctness of the statement of the Senator from Texas. I should prefer to leave out the provision entirely; but if we are going to enumerate the causes we certainly should include incompetence as a cause for removal, and the President, of course, should be the judge of that fact. It is the intention of the amendment that the President shall give any accused person a hearing.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. KING. Do I correctly understand the Senator to take the position that the President or some administrative officer will lodge a complaint against A or B, who is a director or has some other important position, and then the President of the United States is to sit and try a man to determine whether he is competent or incompetent?

Mr. McADOO. No.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the President of the United States is being placed in a humiliating position and made less than a jury.

Mr. McADOO. Not at all.

Mr. KING. I am very much opposed to the amendment. It seems to me a very improper one. Let me say to the Senator that in these cases it is proposed to make this a bureau of the Department of the Interior. That is all it is; and the President acts upon the suggestion or complaint of the head of the department in a case of this sort where he may be asked to act.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have personally inspected the housing programs in England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Germany, and Austria. Of the many housing proposals either in effect or pending, the committee proposal with amendments will constitute the best piece of legislation in this specific field that has been offered for our consideration.

As I understand, the housing authority is given the right to borrow $700,000,000 at the current Government rate. For the first year there is authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000, for the second year seven and a half million dollars, and for the third year seven and a half million dollars. For each succeeding year not more than $20,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated, the latter sums to be appropriated by Congress after the third year.

The pending legislation is directed toward abolishing slums and providing housing for those with low incomes. With the expenditure of such sums as the bill provides it will do but little in abolishing slums. The best plan for eradicating slums is to pay a wage that will enable our workers to own their own homes or to pay a rental that will cause our people to invest their money in this form of security.

Mr. President, an editorial in this morning's Philadelphia Inquirer entitled "Low-Cost Housing on a Business Basis" expresses my thought on this subject. I ask that it follow my brief remarks in the RECORD at this particular point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of Aug. 3, 1937]

LOW-COST HOUSING ON A BUSINESS BASIS

While Secretary Wallace has challenged the accuracy of Senator BYRD's latest figures on the high cost of a Government housing project in Virginia which indicate an average of nearly $8,000 for each home unit, the failure of the resettlement experiments as a whole is now generally admitted.

As Mr. BYRD renews his criticism of a well-intentioned plan which has proved impracticable, its contrast to pending legislation to provide low-cost, low-rent housing for city families with low incomes becomes more clearly apparent.

Resettlement involved building homes far too expensive for the meager incomes of the intended beneficiaries. One of its features was the moving of large numbers of families to new locations.

The Wagner housing bill would hold down building costs to a reasonable figure. In addition, it contains a specific safeguard against high rents. Besides Government loans at low interest for construction, there are to be direct grants conditioned on the maintenance of low rents. Many resettlement projects have meant a lifetime of debt for the tenants or nominal owners who accepted the Government's offer.

This new housing program with Government assistance is directed toward abolishing slums from our cities, but it is not designed to remove present residents from familiar locations. There is to be no wholesale resettlement nor the forced migration which has worked such hardship in some previous housing enterprises.

Families have been compelled to leave rebuilt neighborhoods because they could not afford to remain there. Wherever this has occurred it has meant the virtual failure of a public housing project, because it has not fulfilled its primary purpose.

The overwhelming need is for decent, sanitary, and comfortable housing to fit slender incomes. This need is to be supplied, if Congress takes the proper action, by a plan based on business principles. The Government loans, backed by ample security, should be paid back with interest. The comparatively modest outright grants will be the people's contribution to the welfare of the less fortunate.

Here is a piece of genuinely progressive legislation that will place no heavy tax on the public. Wretched housing at extortionate rents must be abolished. A moderate investment will enable the wiping out of this national disgrace forever.

Congress will be recreant to its duty if it fails to act at this session toward placing low-cost housing within the reach of a multitude of needy American families.

EXPENSES OF PARTICIPATION IN INTER-AMERICAN RADIO CONFERENCE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Inter-American Radio Conference to convene at Habana November 1, 1937.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 3, 1937.

[Enclosure: Report.]

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], as the Chair understands, was accepted by the Senator from New York as a modification of his own amendment, as he has a right to do. Therefore, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is claiming recognition; and if he does not ask for recognition, I shall ask for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which the Senator from New York has a right to discuss if he desires; or he may wait until the amendment is passed on and offer another amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not very fussy about whether or not I have the floor, but I should like to have it to keep at some time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not desire to take up the Senator's time, but it is getting late.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will not be modest about it. Nobody else has been. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD one or two amendments which I desire to offer, but which I shall not discuss at this time.

At the appropriate time I shall offer an amendment, on page 41, at the end of line 25, to add the following language:

But this use shall not be construed to include the distribution by mail of press releases.

On page 42, line 18, after the word "act", I shall move to add the following language:

Provided, That a showing of necessity therefor shall first be made to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress.

On page 43, line 22, after the words "publish and", I shall move to insert the words "upon request."

At the appropriate time I shall call up those amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, have I now the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] two questions before I proceed.

Did the committee give consideration to the idea of an advisory committee?

Mr. WAGNER. I am not a member of the committee, so I cannot tell about that. I have made no provision for it in the bill, because I take it that the advisory committee will be an advisory committee to the local authority; for under the bill, as I am sure my colleague understands, the construction from beginning to end and the management are exclusively within the authority of the locality where the project is erected.

Mr. COPELAND. I understand that Secretary Ickes, when he appeared before the Senate committee, suggested an advisory committee. I am also advised that the British, in their law, have made provision for such a committee, and that it includes some very important persons around the Empire who are interested in housing.

Let me say to my colleague that I am going to present at this point a form of the language to provide for such a committee, and I hope that tomorrow he will perhaps give the matter some study and revise the bill accordingly. So I will offer the proposed amendment. It reads as follows:

SEC. 23. There is hereby created a national housing advisory committee which shall consist of 16 members, 8 to be appointed by the Authority, and 8 to be named from organizations designated by the Authority, having due regard to a representation of public housing, mortgage credit, labor, and construction interests upon such advisory council. Each organization shall name its representative and all members of the committee shall serve without compensation, but shall be entitled to reimbursement from the Authority for traveling expenses incurred in attendance at meetings of such committee. The committee shall meet at Washington at least twice a year and oftener if requested by the Authority. The committee may select its own chairman, vice chairman, and secretary, and adopt methods of procedure and shall have power:

(1) To confer with the Authority and other public officials on any matter which may be referred by the Authority to the committee, dealing with the housing question, public or private, and any matters arising in connection with the execution of laws relating to housing.

(2) To request information and to make recommendations with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of the Authority and also to consider the operation of enactments relating to housing and make to the Authority such recommendations with respect to these matters as the committee thinks desirable. The recommendations here directed shall be printed as a part of the annual reports to Congress of the Authority.

One other question. My colleague is still pressing the rural aspects of the bill, I assume?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. He has not receded?

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to speak about that first. I happened to be here yesterday when there was a colloquy on this particular feature of the bill. The question was raised whether or not there is need in rural communities of such housing relief as the law would afford.

My answer to that question is yes, there is such need. I wish to use one example, which in a sense is a series of examples, to demonstrate the truth of what I say regarding the need of better housing in rural communities.

I was born on the banks of a beautiful river in Michigan, a river of considerable length, which develops a large amount of water power. In my youth there were numerous dams along this river from above the town where I lived on down to Lake Erie, where the Huron River runs into that body of water. Along this river were a number of mills—flour mills, saw mills, woolen mills, and perhaps other mills. I suppose along the length of the river there must have been 20 reservoirs and mill sites.

I recall one community, at Dover. In my youth there were about 8 or 10 houses in this hamlet. They were occupied by families, the men employees of the nearby farms in summer, and of the nearby mill in winter. Going on down the river, skipping Dexter, my birthplace, we came to another hamlet, Scio, where there were a number of houses, and on to Delhi and Fosters. Then there were a number of cities, large places, and so on down to Lake Erie.

Mr. President, the people who lived in these hamlets were in unincorporated villages. They were in every sense rural people, and their living places were rural in every sense of the word. I do not think I have ever seen, outside of the slums of cities, greater poverty that was evidenced in some of those homes. I do not know about the ownership. I think in some cases the homes were owned by those who occupied the houses, but they were struggling people, poor people.

There is exactly the same reason for decent houses for persons living in rural communities, such as I have named, as in the great cities. I am sure the bill does not contemplate at all that the housing authority will go out onto 160-acre or 320-acre or 640-acre farms and build houses. But there are little hamlets where human beings are living, families deserving the attention of Government. In no other way can they have the benefits of decent housing.

Some of those to whom I have referred were most benighted in the period of which I speak. I recall being told by a missionary who used to travel around in the country that in one of these hamlets he found a boy 10 years old, a normal boy mentally and physically, who never had heard of God except in profanity. If there were anywhere in the world neglected, forgotten people, they were those who were living in the tiny hamlets of the sort I have mentioned.

I know that there are hamlets like that today in my own State of New York. I have no doubt that they are to be found in other parts of the country. So I hope that there will be no retreat on this particular part of the bill, and that those who live in rural communities may have the same type of relief as is being proposed for the cities.

Mr. President, I come now to the city. I think I know the slums of the cities as well as any man can possibly know them unless he was born in the slums. The nature of my work for years, as health commissioner of the biggest city in the world, made me learn, first through the employees of the department, 4,000 of them, then later by personal visits to these places, how too many human beings live.

We used to have 1 square mile in New York City—I say we used to have it, because in the last few years there has been slum-clearance activity in New York—a square mile where lived 500,000 persons. Think of it, a half million persons in 1 square mile. How did those persons live? Twelve in three rooms, perhaps, four sleeping in the kitchen every night.

Poverty, such poverty! New York is spoken of as the richest city in the world. It is not only the richest city in the world, but it is the poorest city in the world. I have never seen anywhere, except in Dublin, Ireland, slums more terrible than those found in New York. One night I paid a visit to the slums of Dublin with the Minister of Health. I saw 1 single room in a sub-basement—not a basement, but a sub-basement—with a wooden shaft which brought some air down from the street, where lived 11 persons, father and mother and 9 children, and the father had tuberculosis. I do not need to recite even to a lay audience what that means. It means that all of them will die; no doubt they have already died of tuberculosis.

Mr. President, it is not right to demand of people that they live in such places, as I have suggested. We should not permit thousands of families to be forgotten. If a way can be found, such as I believe this bill provides, to make it possible to replace those indecent, insanitary, vermin-infested, rat-overrun, leaky-roofed houses by decent sanitary dwellings, I shall be proud to have had any part in the legislation.

I happened to be commissioner of health in the city of New York during the war and following the war, when there was no construction, and yet when we were receiving large numbers of persons through immigration, which was then practically unrestricted. I saw people living in places where I would not put sheep or goats. Under the code of the city those places could have been closed; they could have been padlocked. But there was no place for these people to go; there was no place to put them. We had to permit them to continue to live under these conditions because there was no other place for them to go.

Mr. President, any housing bill is an incomplete bill unless it provides not alone for the building of decent homes but also for the destruction and the elimination of the indecent ones; and that is contemplated by this bill.

I regard bad housing as an attack not alone upon the health of the people, but an attack upon morals and upon the stability of government itself. Families cannot be put on one floor of a tenement house—a tenement house of the kind that we call a "railroad flat", where there is no corridor, but where persons go through from one room to another as is done in a railroad car—people cannot live in such "homes" and have morals and decency and righteousness prevail. Through this proposed legislation we are seeking to make it impossible for conditions such as I have named to continue in America.

What do I mean when I say that bad housing is an attack upon the fundamentals of government, involving the very stability of the Government? I mean that where the population is most dense, where the men and women and children are crowded into close quarters, there is found delinquency, particularly juvenile delinquency.

Take the map of any city in America and draw upon that map concentric rings, having as the center of this series of rings the business part and the most crowded residential part of the city. Then make a dot upon that map of every case of juvenile delinquency. In unbroken sequence from the first circle to the outer one there will be a diminution of those dots as you approach the periphery.

The most important of all American social troubles is the problem of juvenile delinquency. Common as it is among adults, crime is more prevalent among youths than in the older age groups. The average age of the criminal is 23; the largest age group is found at 19, and the next at 18.

Delinquency has been studied with reference to every possible cause, but, as I view it, not enough in its relationship to bad housing. The community, neighborhood area, and environmental conditions have been considered; but no one has quite thought the thing through to determine the relationship of delinquency to the quality and location of the housing of the victims.

The problem of delinquency is not a simple one by any means. No single factor can be fixed as the chief cause of bad behavior and lack of character. The physical, mental, and emotional nature of the individual cannot be divorced from his social contacts and companionships. Let us look into this a bit.

Crime is found where there is denseness of population. When you get out to the suburbs, where the people have detached houses, where they have playgrounds, where they have supervised play for the children, there is little delinquency. But where people are crowded by the thousands into indecent tenament houses, where the children have to play upon the streets, the morals of that community are in danger.

The farther the homes are removed from the slum districts, the fewer are the cases of children and youths demanding police attention. The densely populated centers lack social and cultural advantages; the dwelling places are crowded and unattractive, and crime abounds. As the outskirts are approached, the detached homes increase in number. Door yards and playgrounds multiply. Gangs are less numerous, and delinquency is infrequently met.

Many persons of high character and splendid qualities of heart and mind have come from the crowded city streets. The worst of slums has contributed real greatness. But the child born in a decent home has vastly more chances for health and goodness.

I plead with Senators to pass the bill. I am sure I do not need to do that, because I am confident that Senators are in full agreement with the purposes of the bill. But living as I do in a great crowded community, I know what it will mean to our people if they can be taken out of these dangerous places and moved into decent homes.

Mr. President, unless absolutely necessary I would not have the Government assume the burden of this work. I can see no reason why my community, through its public and private resources, cannot go very far with work of this sort.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] ably presented the cause today. He is a Senator whom I have known through long years, and I know his heart. I know that all of his impulses and all of his efforts are in the direction of passing a reasonable, workable, sensible bill.

The Senator from Massachusetts said that the amendments we have proposed here today have been amendments to perfect the bill, not to impair its usefulness. He has wisely drawn the line to show the distinction between what the Government should do on the one hand and what private organizations should do on the other. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to our thanks for the part he took today in developing the bill. It will be the better for the whole country because of his contribution.

My colleague [Mr. WAGNER] has been a leader for many years in social welfare legislation. If he can succeed in having this bill passed and made into law, he will have added another star to his crown.

I was speaking about the rich cities in America. For instance, in my own city of New York we cannot do any more than the State permits us to do. We have in New York City one-half the population of the State, but we have one-third of the legislators. We, in New York City, must depend upon the bounty, the courtesy, and sometimes the indulgence of the up-State people. We cannot always do what we want to do. But through the operation of this measure there can be carried out, in New York City and other great cities, the great work of slum clearance, the replacement of those slums with houses which will be decent and livable and which will make for the health and the morals of the people and, as I have said, for the stability of government.

If I had my way, every family in America would live in its own home. There is nothing that makes the husband and wife more interested in government than home ownership. When they own the home they want to know about the operation of local government and the reason for taxes. They are interested in knowing what kind of a mayor they have. They want to have a city government which is above reproach and which operates in harmony with the demands of the population.

But, Mr. President, it is impossible to have every family in America in its own home. I am sorry for them. I should like to fill up the country with white houses having green blinds, surrounded by door yards with shade trees and green grass, and around each one a white picket fence. I should like to have every child in America brought up in a home like that. A child born in a home of three rooms has twice the chance to live that the child has who is born in a "home" of one room. Infant mortality is high where families are crowded. The tiny baby in a clothes basket needs to have some air space beyond the cubic contents of the basket. When that child can be brought up in a home of several rooms it grows and thrives and prospers as it never can when it is a prisoner in one room in the slums of a great city.

This bill has in it provisions which make certain that the Government will lose nothing in the long run. It merely lends the credit of the Government. It makes certain by insurance that the investment is safe. It will cost us nothing in the long run. When I think about the millions and millions of dollars spent for agricultural relief and agricultural investment—and I have no resentment because of that, for my State stands eighth in agriculture—when I think of what has been done for the people on the farms then my heart throbs with the desire that equal opportunity and aid and assistance may be given to those who live in the homes in the cities. Here is a bill which is all comprehensive. It deals not only with the problems of the cities, but it goes into the rural communities and seeks, wherever human beings live, to have them live in decent places.

Mr. President, there is no need for me to say more. I am eager for the passage of the bill. I am thankful for the genius of those who planned it. I am confident, if it is enacted into law and its provisions wisely administered, that every Senator who votes for it will have occasion throughout his life to be glad that he did so human a thing as to help the people of America to live decently, as all Americans are entitled to live.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York, as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there was some controversy about the insertion of the word "incompetence." The Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], who suggested the modification, has been called from the Chamber, but asked me before he left if I would not in his behalf withdraw the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York desire to withdraw the modification?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; at the request of the Senator from California, who made the original suggestion. Then the amendment will stand in the form in which I first sent it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that the pending amendment may go over until tomorrow before it is disposed of.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment simply reduces the number of directors from five to three.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I understand. That is the one to which I want to offer an amendment tomorrow.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, has the Senator from New York any further amendments to offer?

Mr. WAGNER. I have merely some corrective amendments. I shall not offer any substantive amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the consideration of amendments of that character.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I shall not offer any more amendments tonight, even though they are merely amendments making clerical corrections; but I send certain other amendments to the desk and ask that they may be printed, to be taken up tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

HIGHWAYS SYSTEM TOLL BRIDGES

Mr. BLACK. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate House bill 7373.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7373) to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what the bill is?

Mr. BLACK. It is a bill which the Senate passed last year. It has been favorably reported today from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It calls for no appropriation of any kind. It simply authorizes, as it did last year, in case of the construction of bridges, that one-half of the cost of the bridges shall be considered in connection with Federal aid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is the Senator willing that the amendment be inserted which we discussed?

Mr. BLACK. I am going to ask the adoption of the amendment which we agreed upon in the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7373) to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in order that the bill may conform to the report of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the numerals "1938" and insert "1939", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of each and every State, or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, which, prior to the date of approval of this act, shall have constructed or acquired any toll bridges on the approved system of Federal-aid highways, and which has caused, or shall, prior to July 1, 1939, cause, any such toll bridge or toll bridges to be made free, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the Federal-aid road funds apportioned to such State not to exceed 50 percent of such amount as may be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as the reasonable value or construction cost of any such bridge, whichever shall be least: Provided, That no payment of Federal funds shall be made on account of any such bridge which was not constructed in accordance with plans and specifications which would meet the standards required by the Secretary of Agriculture at the time such bridge was constructed, nor on account of any bridge the construction of which was completed prior to March 3, 1927: And provided further, That no such payment shall be made which will exceed 50 percent of the reasonable value or cost of the labor and materials which were actually incorporated in the construction of such bridge, excluding all costs of rights-of-way, property damages, and financing costs whichever, value or cost, shall be least, and any amount so paid on account of any such bridge shall be used by the highway department of such State for matching unobligated Federal-aid road funds available to the State, for expenditure in the improvement of highways on the system of Federal-aid highways.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion by Mr. BLACK, the bill (S. 701) to aid the several States in making certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes, was ordered to be indefinitely postponed.

LANDS IN UTAH

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1129) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes, which was, on page 2, line 3, to strike out the words "area and."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes.

The bill passed the Senate and was amended in the House. There is a very slight amendment which strikes out the words "area and" on page 2 of the bill. The purpose of this exchange of land is to make the land now owned by the State of Utah a part of naval oil shale reserve no. 2. It is recommended by all the departments of the Government which are concerned, and the amendment is not one of substance but is merely of a clerical character.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

CRASH OF PAN-AMERICAN PLANE NEAR CRISTOBAL, CANAL ZONE

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article appearing in today's Evening Star, bringing to the attention of the American public another major disaster in the air, one of the Pan-American liners having crashed in the neighborhood of Cristobal, Canal Zone.

This sad occurrence is indicative of the fact that Americans must awaken to the situation that we have no regulation of commerce in the air, and that if we intend to go forward and progress in our air commerce we must do something by way of legislation before the present session of Congress adjourns. The disaster again brings to the attention of the American public the necessity for the enactment of legislation such as that contained in Senate bill 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

FOURTEEN PERISH IN PAN-AMERICAN AIRLINE CRASH—TWO UNITED STATES OFFICIALS AMONG VICTIMS OF SEA CRASH—MOTHER, CHILDREN ALSO ON PLANE

The Pan American-Grace clipper, lost over Panama, today was found submerged 30 miles northeast of Cristobal, Canal Zone, according to a radio report to the War Department here from the chief of the Army Signal Corps in the Canal Zone.

There was no sign of life aboard the wrecked ship.

In a terse dispatch to the War Department the Signal Corps station chief in the Canal Zone gave only the briefest details of the wreckage of the airliner.

The radio message read:

"The missing Pan-American plane located 30 miles northeast of Cristobal. Totally under water. No signs of life."

No other information was available here for the moment. A more detailed report was expected later.

CRISTOBAL, CANAL ZONE, August 3.—Fourteen persons are missing in an air liner which failed to complete a landing at Cristobal on a flight from Lima, Peru.

More than 25 planes were scouring the area for miles around this port today in an attempt to locate the airship which may have been forced down on the sea.

On board the missing air liner were nine passengers, including a mother and her two children, and the crew of three.

A 1,810-MILE FLIGHT

The airship, a twin-engine Sikorsky amphibian of the Pan American-Grace Airways, was making the trip from Lima to Cristobal on a new schedule. The distance between these two points is 1,810 miles.

The plane was approaching Cristobal when it became lost. The ship was last heard from about 7:40 p. m. yesterday as it was heading for Cristobal to land. It was cloudy at the time and the ship flew through the clouds and nothing further was heard from it.

When it became apparent the craft was lost, search was immediately instituted, with the Army and Navy cooperating. Two destroyers aided airplanes in searching for the missing air liner.

Those aboard were:

PASSENGERS

Thomas Wakely, of the National City Bank of New York. He was en route from Santiago to Cristobal and was planning to continue by Pan American clipper ship across the Caribbean Sea to Miami and thence to New York.

Rex Martin, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

G. Q. Caldwell, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C. Both Martin and Caldwell were en route to Cristobal, Martin having boarded the missing air liner at Guyaquil, Ecuador, and Caldwell at Lima.

Oscar Miller, of the Ford Motor Car Co. He was en route from Guyaquil to Cristobal.

Isadore Souza, en route Guyaquil to Cristobal.

Sam Oliver, en route Guyaquil to Cristobal.

P. W. Kumle, en route from Cali, Colombia, to Cristobal. He had booked on Pan-American Airways out of Cristobal for Mexico City and Los Angeles.

Ernest Wood, an employee of Pan American-Grace Airways.

Mrs. Amy Levering, wife of an employee of the company; her son, Jimmie, and her daughter, Jessie.

CREW

Stephen Dunn, pilot.

Lawrence Arnold Bickford, co-pilot.

Herman Diez Canseco, steward.

Search for the missing air liner proceeded over a wide area. Planes went out from Coco Solo and France Air Fields, the Navy alone sending out 22 planes. Pan American-Grace sent out a trimotored Ford and a Sikorsky amphibian in search for the airship.

COASTLINE PATROLLED

Pan-American Airways assigned a clipper ship to patrol the coastline.

At the time last word was received from the missing air liner it was raining at Cristobal. Visibility at near-by France Field was 500 feet to the north, and 5,000 feet to the south and east from which direction the airship came.

Pilot Dunn, as he was preparing to make a landing through the heavy clouds over Cristobal and environs, gave no indication, it was announced, that he anticipated any difficulty in getting in safely.

TWENTY-FIVE PLANES, TENDER, DESTROYERS IN HUNT

Twenty-five airplanes, an airplane tender, and two destroyers were dispatched today to search for a Pan American-Grace Airways clipper ship, which is down near the Panama Canal Zone, according to advices to the Navy Department from the Canal Zone naval commandant.

Pan-American officials here admitted the clipper was down.

Definite information as to where the accident occurred was unavailable, but airline officials thought the mishap occurred on the Isthmus west coast.

The Navy search, the Department said, started from a point 50 miles north of Cristobal. The airplane tender taking part was the Teal, and the destroyers were the Babbitt and Taylor.

Pan-American headquarters here said they were trying to obtain further details of the accident.

REX MARTIN ABOARD DOWNED AIR CLIPPER

Rex Martin, one of the passengers on the missing Pan American-Grace Airways liner near the Panama Canal Zone, was formerly assistant director of the Bureau of Air Commerce in Washington.

With the shakeup in the Bureau earlier in the year he was relieved of his duties here, together with Col. Carroll Cone, also an assistant director. Colonel Cone was sent to Europe and Mr. Martin to South America as aeronautical advisors to the Department of Commerce. Colonel Cone subsequently resigned from the Government service, but Mr. Martin remained and has been in South America since March.

At the Department of Commerce today it was said he had a roving assignment.

C. Q. Caldwell, another passenger on the missing plane, is an air-line inspector for the Bureau of Air Commerce. He left Washington about a month ago for an inspection trip over United States air lines operating in South America.

Mr. Martin served as a lieutenant in the Air Corps during the World War, and is the author of Commercial Aeronautics.

Resignation of Eugene Vidal as head of the Bureau of Air Commerce, and the shifting of his principal administrative assistants, including Mr. Martin, followed by several months a scathing report by the Senate Committee on Air Commerce Administration. The Senate's Special Air Safety Committee, headed by Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND (D.), of New York, was appointed to investigate the cause of the crash which took the life of Senator Bronson Cutting.

In its report the committee condemned the administration of the Bureau of Air Commerce under Vidal and Martin, charging that it was shot through with politics and favoritism, that Vidal was "too amiable" and easy-going, and that Martin lacked the professional qualifications for the post he then held as Assistant Director of the Bureau.

This report was submitted to the Senate in June 1936. It contained this statement regarding Martin:

"We question the professional equipment of Mr. Martin. A man of much larger experience is needed for this position. He must be chosen not with reference to his political affiliations but strictly because of his professional ability, his known success as administrator, his possession of tact, and qualities of leadership. These qualities are not combined in Mr. Martin. We can say this without any reflection on his character."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to say just one word about the crash which occurred today. It is a very unfortunate thing and a sad thing, because one of our Commerce Department employees died in the wreck.

I think we ought to reserve judgment on this crash until we get the particulars, for the reason that the Pan-American Co.—I hold no brief for it, neither do I hold any stock in it—has been remarkably successful in its South American operations. I do not know that that is anything to boast about, because the company's planes never fly at night, nor do they do instrument flying and directional flying, as we do. They do contact flying. The plane is sometimes away up above high mountains, but the flights are always by daylight. They have visual direction. So they have been extremely fortunate in their operations. Because of that fact, I think we ought to be most charitable in judging what happened, and where the responsibility lies.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not want anything in my remarks to be construed as a criticism of the Pan-American Line or any other line. Rather, I wish to draw the attention of the Senate and of the Congress of the United States to the fact that if we propose to go forward and progress in commercial aviation, we must do something along regulatory lines.

Mr. COPELAND. I fully agree with the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, our present laws on the subject of air lines and air mail, which usually have come before us from the committee having jurisdiction of the air mail, have brought about one of the finest air services in the world, which I imagine has had fewer accidents than any other.

So far as the proposed legislation known as Senate bill 2 is concerned, in my judgment it will do more to bring disaster to air mail and to all other kinds of aviation than any other bill ever introduced in this body. I cannot sit here in silence and hear encomiums upon a bill that I know would result in destroying the laws that have built up air mail as it has never before been built up in this country. The very bill known as Senate bill 2, introduced by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, would repeal all the air-mail laws which have been passed during the present administration, and which have brought about a reform in the system that previously existed. Indeed, it would repeal all of the laws on the subject, and would turn the matter over to the aviation companies and permit them to do as they please, virtually without restriction.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has two bills. I do not like one of the bills at all. I think the second bill will do all that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] says; but I believe that Senate bill 2, which is the one about which the Senator spoke, is a desirable bill, that it is in the interest of the development of aviation, and in the direction of the promotion of safety.

I very much dislike to disagree with my friend from Tennessee, my immediate neighbor on the Appropriations Committee; but I believe that Senate bill 2 is a desirable bill, and ought to be enacted. As to the other one, I will go just as far as the Senator will go in seeking its defeat.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the bill now under consideration no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should prefer to have the Senator extend the limitation of debate on amendments to 15 minutes. I have in mind the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who has an amendment the discussion of which may require more than 10 minutes. With that change, I should have no objection to the proposed agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I modify the request so as to make the limitation 10 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the pending business no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon any amendment thereto. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Immigration, reported favorably the nomination of James L. Houghteling, of Illinois, to be Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization for the Department of Labor.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

CLYDE O. EASTUS

Mr. CONNALLY. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably the nomination of Clyde O. Eastus, of Texas, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Texas, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the executive calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Berthold J. Husting, of Wisconsin, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Wisconsin.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank Bane, of Virginia, to be Executive Director.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under the Social Security Board nominations I call attention to the nomination of Agnes Van Driel, of Illinois. One of the Senators from Illinois, who is unavoidably absent this afternoon asked that this nomination go over, and I ask that it be excepted from the confirmations which are about to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination of Agnes Van Driel, of Illinois, to be Chief, Division of Technical Training, will go over.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the confirmation of Frank Bane, or any other nominee on the list. I merely desire to extend my very sincere congratulations to the State of Virginia at being able to break through the embargo heretofore in effect against appointments to the Social Security Board from south of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers, and to the State of California for being able to break through in a single case the embargo heretofore against the appointment of persons to the Social Security Board from west of the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Frank Bane, to be executive director?

The nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Civil Service, having under consideration the House bill placing postmasters under the civil service, whether there has been any progress with that measure? My understanding is that the President of the United States has recommended the extension of the civil service to the appointment of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. First-, second-, and third-class postmasters.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. At least two of the three members of the subcommittee are opposed to the enactment of the bill. As I stated a few days ago, I took the trouble to inquire among the Senators, and up to date I have found only four Senators who are willing to say that they would vote for a bill taking away the right of confirmation of the Senate of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and I do not think there will be any legislation upon the subject.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think I understand the position of the genial Senator from Tenneseee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is not only my position, but I think it is the position of another member of the subcommittee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is no doubt the case; but, of course, we all know that almost from time immemorial it has been regarded as a prerogative of Members of the Congress to suggest to the Post Office Department the persons to be selected as postmasters in offices of the first, second, and third classes. The confirmation of the appointments by the Senate for years without number has been a mere formal gesture. All the correspondence having to do with the selection of these postmasters is carried on by the Representatives in the House with the Post Office Department, and when the Post Office Department and the Representatives come to an agreement as to an appointment to be made the name thus selected is submitted to the President and by the President transmitted to the Senate for confirmation. The name is then sent to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The clerk of that committee then submits the names to the Senators from the respective States. There is never any meeting of the committee to consider the appointments individually.

Mr. McKELLAR. O Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I in error about that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; the Senator is in error about that. Whenever a question arises concerning the fitness or the capacity of a person, which is quite frequently the case, the committee considers the nomination. I do not think the Senator was present at the meetings, but we have had a number of meetings this session to discuss whether or not we should confirm certain nominations.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should simply like to bear witness to the accuracy of what the Senator from Tennessee has said. In the only case in which I have seriously objected to the nomination of a postmaster I made a personal appearance before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, suggested the grounds of my objection to the nomination, and the nomination was reported adversely, with the understanding that I would appear on the floor of the Senate and justify my objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Undoubtedly what the Senator says is correct, and what the Senator from Tennessee says is correct; if any serious question is raised, of course then the committee is called into session. What I am pointing out is that in the great majority of cases it is a purely routine matter, and the confirmation goes according to form, according to routine. If the Senators from the respective States raise no objection, then confirmation is recommended, the nominations come before the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads rises in his place and moves that the nominations be confirmed en bloc, and they are immediately confirmed en bloc. What I am pointing out is that this practice is a pure formalism, and that the President of the United States has recommended the establishment of a bona-fide civil-service system to take its place.

The House of Representatives, the Members of which, under the system, have the right of making the recommendations, has passed a bill and sent it to this body. The bill has been before the Committee on Civil Service since almost the beginning of the present session, and no report has been submitted. I have risen merely to call attention to the fact that the bill is in the Committee on Civil Service and that it has not yet been reported. I hope that the Senate will be given an opportunity to vote it up or vote it down, instead of having it killed in the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator can easily have that done by moving to discharge the committee and bring the bill before the Senate. I do not know whether or not he will get the four votes I spoke of a while ago, because one or two of them are in doubt; but that course is open to the Senator.

I wish to say just one word in reply. Under the Constitution the House of Representatives has the right to initiate all revenue legislation. Suppose the Senator from Wyoming should introduce a bill in the Senate to take away that power from the House of Representatives; how far does he think he would get? If the Senate passed such a bill in a moment when nobody was paying very much attention, and it went to the House, would the Senator expect a committee of the House to do much with the Senator's bill? It is a similar course that is being suggested here.

A Member of the House of Representatives has offered a bill to take away the constitutional right of the Senate to pass upon first-, second-, and third-class postmaster appointments. I do not see how the author of the bill could ever have expected the Senate seriously to consider such a bill, originating in the House and proposing to take away the constitutional power of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. In the instance to which the Senator refers, an analogous case, of revenue bills originating in the Senate, on several occasions the House of Representatives, and I believe uniformly, not only did not permit reference of the bills to a House committee for consideration but they have refused to receive the bills, and have sent them back to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is entirely true. It seems to me that what probably ought to have been done with this bill was to have sent it back in exactly the same way.

If the Senate wants to give up its constitutional authority and right, that is a matter for the Senate to decide. The bill certainly ought not to have originated in the House. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not think the bill will get anywhere at this session of Congress or at any other session of Congress so long as he and I may be here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters on the calendar are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, August 4, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 3 (legislative day of July 22), 1937

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. A. F. Poore, of the Waugh Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee in the name that is above every name. We bless Thee, we worship Thee, we praise Thee, we laud and magnify Thy holy name.

We thank Thee for this day, we thank Thee for this place, we thank Thee for our leaders.

Grant us clarity of thought, breadth of vision, wings for our imagination, love for the human race.

Help us to be motivated by the words of the prophet: To do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God, that our Nation shall keep her place in the sun.

Lead us, Son of Man, even though it be by the sacrificial way, into the wealth of the Father's love. Amen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will tell us how we are going to get farmers to carry on without being regulated so much.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, following the special order already granted my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House today for 15 minutes after the address of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], and after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the business of the day.

COTTON

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to call the attention of the House to the situation which now confronts the southern cotton farmer with reference to the marketing of the 1937 cotton crop. Cotton closed yesterday at 10.89 cents a pound, which is 1.77 cents a pound below the price of a year ago today, for the average on 10 southern markets on August 3, 1936, was 12.66 cents a pound for ⅞-inch Middling cotton. This is approximately $8.85 a bale above yesterday's closing quotation.

Despite this decline in the price of his product the farmer has been forced to meet increased production costs, and the cost of his necessities has greatly increased.

It is my opinion, after careful study, that the Secretary of Agriculture now has sufficient authority, already granted by Congress, to successfully meet the problem. Under laws now in force the Secretary of Agriculture can arrange for such loans on the 1937 crop as will result in the farmer receiving at least 12 cents a pound for this year's production, or he can provide for subsidies paid directly to the farmer which will accomplish practically the same result.

I am, therefore, taking it upon myself, as one of the Members representing a cotton-growing constituency, to ask my colleagues who represent cotton producers to meet in the caucus room tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in order that we may discuss this matter fully and prepare to take immediate united action.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a communication from the American Federation of Labor.

There was no objection.

Mr. DREW of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

sary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Inter-American Radio Conference to convene at Habana November 1, 1937.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 3, 1937.

JEFFERSON MEMORIAL, ST. LOUIS

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a resolution asking the Speaker to appoint a committee of three members to go to St. Louis and investigate the Jefferson Memorial proposition and make a report to this House before the adjournment of Congress. I am introducing that resolution now and will ask for its immediate consideration, in view of the fact that nobody has answered any one of the eight speeches I have made on this subject; nobody even from Missouri has arisen to defend it. In view of these facts I think we are entitled to an investigation, and we promise in the resolution that it will not cost the Government a dollar.

Gentlemen, you may think I am unduly annoying in my frequent repetition of this proposal, but $30,000,000 is involved. If by extreme concentration and persistence we can arouse enough interest so that it will react for a reconsideration by the President and this project abandoned or set aside, it will be worth the effort of one's life. All that is necessary to accomplish this purpose is to effect a congressional investigation. We should do it now before this Congress is adjourned. This committee could go to St. Louis for a few days, study the question intently for a week and be ready to make a report. The friends of economy and fair play will be chagrined to know that unanimous consent was denied the immediate consideration of the following resolution which I have introduced today:

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of three Members of the House, and such committee is authorized and directed to investigate each and every circumstance and action looking to the construction of the proposed memorial to Thomas Jefferson in the city of St. Louis, Mo., from its inception to the present time.

Said committee shall ascertain by what authority, if any, said memorial was proposed, the estimated total cost thereof, what amount already has been expended and for what purpose and by whom, and from what fund such expenditures were made. Also the location in said city of the site for said memorial and by whom selected and the contemplated cost of such site, and thoroughly to investigate all aspects of the said proposed memorial.

Said committee shall report its findings and recommendations to the House before the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Said committee is authorized to receive and expend such contributions of money from private sources as may be made and received by it to defray the expenses of its investigation and to account for the same in its report.

Mr. Speaker, on several previous occasions I have directed the attention of the House to the fraud and corruption which has been disclosed in the attempt of the St. Louis real-estate promoters to unload 37 blocks of business property in downtown St. Louis onto the Federal Government as the site for the proposed $30,000,000 second memorial to Thomas Jefferson in that city.

The National Park Service, acting solely under authority of an Executive order issued by the President December 21, 1935, are now proceeding with the condemnation of this property as the first step in the actual construction of the memorial for which the President has set aside the sum of $6,750,000 of work-relief funds, which, together with $2,250,000, the proceeds of a fraudulent bond-issue election, makes but $9,000,000—barely enough to buy the site presently available.

As before stated, this project has never been officially authorized by this or any preceding Congress.

It is, however, the most remarkable example of the misuse of work-relief funds as a springboard to inaugurate another wasteful project without the sanction of Congress and in violation of the law as I understand it.

Today it will be my endeavor to present another aspect of this memorial matter. Quite recently 42 tenants and owners of buildings and property in this 37 block area which the National Park Service now seek to condemn, filed suit in the United States District Court at St. Louis asking for a temporary restraining order and a trial of the issues raised on their merits.

The suit came before Federal Judge Charles B. Davis, who on July 8, denied the petition for a temporary restraining order and several days later filed with the clerk of the court his findings of fact and conclusions of law in the matter. The plaintiffs in this action had set up in their petition that there was no authority vested in the President to allocate funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of April 8, 1935, except for the specific purposes and to the specific uses mentioned in the act itself, which did not include the use of funds for the preservation of historic sites. The plaintiffs also contended, among other things, that the Historic Sites and Buildings Act of August 21, 1935, is not a relief act and definitely forbids the use of Federal funds, except and until appropriated by the Congress for the specific purposes of this act.

It was pointed out to the court that the building of this memorial in St. Louis with money appropriated for relief, but proceeding under the Historic Sites Act solely on the order of the President, constitutes an unlawful assumption of constitutionally delegated powers over certain legislative matters reserved to the Congress.

The matter of election frauds was given no consideration whatsoever, as far as I can understand. In the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by Judge Davis the court held the intended acts of the defendants—the National Park Service et al.—are legal; that the Secretary of the Interior had under authority of the Historic Sites Act found and determined the river-front area comprised a historic site; that the city of St. Louis on May 15, 1936, had paid into the United States Treasury $2,250,000—money from the fraudulent election—and that the Secretary of the Interior had accepted the payment. The court found that the Federal and city officials were about to proceed with the project; that the Historic Sites Act was constitutional; and that the allotment of relief funds was authorized by Congress and was constitutionally made. These are the findings of the court as reported in part by the newspapers of St. Louis.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe these findings of Judge Davis are supported by either the law or the intent of this Congress. Let me again review the situation for you.

The Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 became a law April 8, 1935. By it $4,800,000,000 was appropriated for "relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects."

Remember, my friends, only $300,000 of this first $9,000,000 now in the hands of the National Park Service will be spent for skilled and unskilled labor. Therefore this second memorial to Jefferson in St. Louis can in no wise be classified as either a necessary, useful, or work-relief project, for the appropriation act itself stipulates that not less than 25 percent of loans or grants to municipalities must be spent for work under each particular project.

The next thing to keep well in mind is the fact that more than 4 months after the passage of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act the Historic Sites Act became a law on August 21, 1935. Thus it is seen that the Historic Sites Act is no part of the relief set-up and cannot be made subservient to a prior act. No specific sums were appropriated for the preservation of historic sites or even for the purpose of making surveys to determine just what sites are worthy of preservation.

This fact was fully impressed on the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on April 2, 1937, by Mr. A. E. Demaray, who in appearing before the committee in the hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1938 said, when explaining the request for an increased appropriation of $26,000:

This is for the conduct of the historic-sites survey, as required by Public, 292, which is an undertaking of great magnitude. No comparable survey has ever been undertaken in the United States.

And in reply to further questions from Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. Demaray said:

The Secretary of the Interior was directed, through the National Park Service, to do these things. But no funds were provided, and therefore the purposes of these bills, of course, cannot be carried out.

Mr. Speaker, this brings up the question, Who furnished the money and by what authority did Mr. Ickes arrive at the determination that the 37-block area of business property in St. Louis is in fact a historic site? No money had been appropriated by this Congress for the purposes of the act, and we all know the historic events named by the President in his Executive order of December 21, 1935, have been exposed for the most part as bits of historical fiction. Now, where does Mr. Ickes get his historical data that is so different from the facts? But even if all these historical sites and historical events actually took place in St. Louis, the buildings are for the most part gone, a thriving industry has grown up, and there is no more sense in tearing these buildings down than there would be to advance on the city of Chicago, and demand the right to condemn half the downtown area as a memorial to the great historic fire created when Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicked over a lantern in 1871. We might just as well try to restore the O'Leary stable, and cow pasture, in the heart of Chicago, as try to restore these historic sites on the river front in St. Louis. The one project is no more absurd than the other.

The Historic Sites Act left the matter of appropriating money where it properly belongs—in the hands of Congress—but the act went further, to provide—

That no contract or cooperative agreement shall be made or entered into which will obligate the general fund of the Treasury unless or until Congress has appropriated money for such purposes.

If the act means what it says—and I believe the Members of this Congress know what they mean when they write a bill—then the first great question of law which comes up is this: By what authority of law can the President order the Secretary of the Interior to enter into any kind of contract or cooperative agreement with the officials of St. Louis or any other city for that matter?

Mr. Speaker, this brazen assumption of the legislative powers of the Congress ought not to have escaped the notice of Judge Davis. Besides his failure to take cognizance of the law as it actually stands today, the learned judge in his wisdom, as might occasionally be expected, also overlooked another section of our basic law dealing with just such proposals as now arise. I refer now to section 451, title 16, United States Code, which is as follows:

LIMIT ON COST OF BUILDINGS ERECTED IN NATIONAL PARKS

SEC. 451. No expenditure for construction of administration or other buildings cost in case of any building exceeding $1,500 shall be made in any national park except under express authority of Congress.

Where is this express authority?

Is not this provision of the law sufficient indication that the appropriations for buildings in national parks is a legislative matter reserved to the Congress? To delegate it elsewhere is both unconstitutional and unlawful.

Mr. Speaker, to say the least, I believe this Federal judge has dealt very lightly and unwisely in a serious case. This is not an ordinary suit, filed by these citizens of St. Louis. It is a suit in which they fight for their rights against a most vicious combination of circumstances. Many of them will suffer irreparable damages and the Government will be forced into endless litigation unless this useless project is halted quickly. The situation can best be visualized by the following extract from a letter recently written by Mr. A. W. Albrecht, owner of a piece of property in the memorial area:

I have a piece of property in the proposed Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis that brought me an income of $3,000 net a year. Government bonds of today are bringing 2 percent or less, therefore the value of my property, equivalent to Government bonds would be $150,000.

The city of St. Louis assesses this property at $7,900. Will you please tell me where I can invest $7,900 to bring me an income of $3,000 per year? I can cite you any number of these cases here.

Mr. Speaker, this letter is an indication that the National Park Service will not be able to even acquire this memorial site with the $9,000,000 now available, but will have to come back to Congress for funds to complete this illegitimate project laid on our doorstep by the promoters of St. Louis. There are many Members in this House who believe that there should be more control over the Federal judiciary. So far no one close to the administration has raised a voice in protest against the decisions of the Court in this memorial matter. If there has been anything of good, to commend the Florida ship canal or the Passamaquoddy tidal power project that feature is entirely absent here. The project is crooked, wasteful, and unauthorized by this Congress. Let us halt it quickly or we will have to shoulder the shame as well as the blame of our negligence. The Rules Committee must now give us a rule to allow this resolution to be considered. Help us to solicit this request.
